R. Kramer, the man who was brought before Judge Benson not long since, to be examined as to his sanity, died on Saturday of last week on Judge Benson's farm in Grove Park. A short time after his return to his home in Grove Park he was taken sick and managed to get to Mr. Benson's farm, where he was put to bed and given proper care. After his death the sum $112.10 was found carefully sewed into his clothing, about $70 being in gold. This is the case that not long ago the Times hauled the people of Grove Park over the coals about, claiming that they allowed their paupers to freeze to death. It would seem that the old man was something of a miser instead of being the poor abused pauper represented. He was a man about 76 years of age of whose past life little if anything is known, and whether he was entirely sane or not is a question that will never be settled. However the poor old man has gone to his rest and will in the future trouble no one.

THE MARCH MESSAGE.

JOURNAL readers are interested in good things. Their attention is therefore called to the forthcoming March issue of "The Message," which we hope to place in their hands March 1st. The former issues of "The Message" have consisted of eight 4 column pages, 15 inches long. The March number will have twelve, 4 column pages, 16 inches long. Very few additional advertisements have been inserted, but over FOUR FULL PAGES OF CHOICE READING MATTER have been added. Three other churches have joined the federated helpers of "The Message" this month, making seven in the church calendar for March. Rev. J. J. Edwards, pastor of the Crookston M. E. church, tells Message readers how to live the triumphant life in his excellent article upon "Growth." Some stirring thoughts suggested from real life will interest temperance workers. A few other selected articles fairly burn in one's breast as he reads. Now, friends, "The Message" is zealously Christian and religious in word and influence, but not a whit sectarian. Its prime motive is to herald the good work of all Christian laborers in this region and give them all, irrespective of creed or church preference, hints and thoughts of helpfulness. All JOURNAL readers are most earnestly asked to subscribe for "The Message" and thus help thousands to greater gladness and victory in doing life's constant labor successfully, and help us to make this wideawake religious Monthly of the Red River Valley a yet greater success. A BUSHEL OF PETITIONS.

A Little Blunder That Made Trouble for the Sad-Eyed Editor.

The editor could not see that the man was trying to still a tempest in his bosom when he came in but never let on.

"Good morning," he said, with affluent politeness.

"I believe," replied the visitor, stifling his emotion, "that I sent you a communication yesterday beginning with these words (reading from a slip of paper:) 'Colonel Brown received a bushal of petitions from churches and temperance societies asking that the saloons be closed etc:"

"Yes, sir, You did," assented the editor, "and I was glad to print it in—

"But you didn't print it sir," interrupted the irate visitor.

"I beg your pardon, colonel," dissented the editor; "you will find it I think, on the first page. I have not read it, but I saw the heading of the article."

"Well, sir, read it now," and the colonel fiercely thrusted a copy of the paper at him. "Read, sir, read," he went on, wildly quoting: "'Colonel Brown received a bushel of potatoes from churches and temperance societies.' Think of that, sir. A bushel of potatoes! What in the name of justice, truth and equity has a bushel of potatoes got to do with it?" And as the colonel raved and ranted, the editor looked at the cold, cruel type standing out in horrid relief and was utterly speechless.—Detroit Free-Press.

Resemblance Between Husband and Wife.

It is by no means a new theory that a man and woman who have been married a great many years grow to resemble each other, not only in manner and voice, but actually, as to features and expression. Quite recently the photographic association of Geneva has been investigating the truth of this theory by the aid of the camera. The photographs of seventy-eight elderly or very old married couples were taken, and an equal number of family groups. The result proved quite satisfactory to holders of this theory, inasmuch as in twenty-four cases the resemblance between husband and wife was much greater than that between brother and sister, and in thirty cases more it was fully as great. The failure of the other twenty-four old couples to realize the expectations of those interested in the matter is supposably due to "incompatibility of disposition," which time was apparently unable to combat in its effects.

A WREATH OF ROSES.

Idly the maiden's fingers weave
A gleaming crown of roses red,
And singing soft the while, she lays
The fragrant burden on her head.
For their swift death she does not grieve.
Nor sorrow o'er such sweetness fled,
As threading sunny woodland ways
She listens for her lover's tread.
Enwrapped in bliss her soul reposes:
Ah! little she recks of the griefs of roses.

Alas! the fairest hopes deceive!
She cannot dream what power dread,
With hand uplifted, by her stays,
To pluck her in the roses' stead!
E'en while her breast with love doth heave
She droops amid the blossoms dead;
And to our dim, affrighted gaze,
Despair, of helpless terror bred,
An awful unknown fate discloses,
To whom a girl's no more than roses.

ZOE DANA UNDERHILL in Harper's Bazar.

IT CURED HER.

IT was during the third month of the engagement that Nina came to me and told me that she had decided to go on the stage.

I had known them both from childhood. Jack and I used to play marbles together, and Nina and I used to go coasting together, so I felt quite a brotherly interest in them. I had seen from the start that Jack was in love with Nina, and that Nina was in love with Jack. And, in truth, I had engineered "the deal," as they called their engagement. Jack, being an artist, needed just such a woman as Nina to look after him; a quiet, gentle little woman just the wife for a dreamer.

I once thought that Jack was anything but practical. But my mind has changed, and this is how it all came about.

As I have said, it was during the third month of their engagement that Nina electrified us all by deciding to become an actress, as she said: "I do not intend to go to Jack without a cent in my pockets. He is an artist. Artists, young artists, do not have over much money. There's no reason why I should not help to take care of the family."

Then she told me that she had already been to see the theatrical man, and had been engaged for the star part in the new opera at a fair salary.

And almost before I knew what I was about, I had promised to see all the newspaper men and have the Sunday papers filled with news about her. Then she left me, and in a moment I was in my great coat and on my way to Jack's studio. I found him walking up and down, waving a pink note in his hand, raving like a madman, kicking his easels and his paints all over the floor.

"Just listen to this, will you," he exclaimed, after I had satisfied him that I had nothing to do with Nina's going on the stage, and then he read me the letter she had written to him. It was in effect what she had told me. Their marriage was to be postponed until she had made a success and they could live in comfort. She was sure, she said, that Jack would see it in the same light as she saw it. But it was quite apparent to me that she had reckoned without her host; and it was quite necessary for him to tell me that he didn't "see it in that light, not by a——," but why quote further.

"Well," said I, after he had calmed down a little, "what are we to do about it?"

"Do?" he cried, rising from his chair and drawing himself up in such a dignified manner that despite the situation I almost laughed at him, "I will command her as her future husband to give up this foolish idea; this insane idea. I will show her how in going upon the stage, she will ruin not only her social standing but will also insult me."

"And have you any idea what effect that will have upon her?"

"The desired effect, to be sure."

"It will not. It will make her, if anything, the more determined to do as she has decided. She will quote to you the names of numerous women who are actresses and still retain their good name. She will tell you that she would rather be insulting you than becoming a burden upon you. Besides, she is stage-struck, and that is a disease incurable except by time. How old is Nina? About 18?"

"Yes."

"You were stage-struck at that age, I know I was. Every man is and very few women escape."

"Well!"

"And now the only thing to do is to let her go ahead and take the chances. If she makes a failure of it she will give it up, you may be sure."

"But suppose she makes a hit?"

"Then your life will be ruined."

The blow was cruel. For a moment he hung his head. I thought I saw the lump in his throat. Then he looked up. There was a resolution in his eyes.

"She shall not succeed," he said.

I knew then that he had thought out some scheme.

"Anything that I can do to help you?" I asked.

"Yes; do as she asks you. Have all the papers filled with nice notices about her."

"But that will"—

"Never you mind. Do as I ask of you, please, and leave the rest to me. Encourage her, make her think that she is a great actress—that the world is waiting for her debut. All will end well, I am sure."

• • • • • • • • •

The next Sunday the papers were filled with Nina, and soon they began to put out the bill-posters with full-length pictures of her. I saw her but seldom, and then she talked of nothing but her ambition, how she was getting along. I saw Jack once. He seemed in excellent humor, and told me that everything was going on just as he wanted it.

Finally the night of the debut came around. The boxes had been sold at auction and great prices had been realized. All the city was talking about Nina; the papers were devoted entirely to her. Jack sent me some seats and asked me to be on hand early. I had an early dinner and was at the theater half an hour before the time for the curtain to go up.

The house began to fill up early and by the time the overture began there was hardly an empty seat to be seen. I did not see Jack, so determined he was behind the scenes.

The curtains went up. Nina came out and did quite well. Her voice was far better than I had expected, and she did not appear nervous. In fact, I was indeed surprised when, after the first act, there was no applause at all.

I went behind the scenes. Nina met me. She looked uneasy and frightened.

"They are so cold. I am afraid," she said.

Jack, from the other side of the room, winked his eyes at me, and I said nothing.

The curtain went up on the second act. The house remained as quiet as death until after Nina's solos, when there was a buzzing noise and a person in a parquet began to hiss. Nina turned deathly pale, and I thought she would faint. Jack came over to me and slapped me on the shoulder.

"The cure has begun," he said gleefully.

The act went on. The audience had already begun to dwindle and half the seats were empty. Nina looked as white as a ghost and trembled so that I thought she would fall in a faint.

The act ended. The curtain fell. Instantly there went up such a chorus of hisses and cat-calls and groans that I will remember it to my dying day.

The last act was never finished. The curtain was rung up and rung down hardly five minutes later. Nina fainted dead away on the stage, and even then the hissing did not stop.

"She has had enough of it. The cure has done its work," cried Jack to me, as he rushed on to the stage, and, picking her up in his arms, carried her to her dressing-room.

Half an hour later I heard him thanking half a dozen young men, who met him at the stage door, and saw him hand them several bank notes.—Warren R. McVeigh.

SAVED FOUR UNION SOLDIERS.

The Colonel Took Pity on Them, Seeing Them About to Die.

"Did I ever tell you how I once saved the lives of four Union soldiers?" said Colonel William Green Sterett the other day. "Well, you see," he continued, "it was this way. John Miller—of course you know John—showed me a six-shooter which is a sort of heirloom in the family. His brother gave it to John, and their father gave it to John's brother, and a fellow-soldier in Morgan's command gave it to their father.

"One day during the war the original owner of the pistol was riding along the road alone when six Yankee soldiers took after him. He lit out as fast as his horse could go but the Yankees kept gaining on him. His horse was fatigued, he having just gone a long journey, and the Yankees' horses were fresh. After they had gone about a mile, the Yankees gaining all the time, the Morgan man dashed around the bend in the road, jumped off his horse, and took to the hills.

"In a minute or two the Yankees turned the bend and they too dismounted and took after the fleeing Confederate. They came up to him, but in such a place that their numbers were no advantage. The Morgan man leveled that six-shooter, every chamber being loaded, and killed—

"Right here," concluded Col. Sterret, "I looked at John in a plaintive manner. I knew John intended to kill all six of those Yankees with the six shots in the pistol, and I sort a took pity on 'em. I didn't say a word; I just looked at John appealingly." He hesitated, and then said: "He killed several of 'em and then made his escape. That's how I saved the lives of at least four Union soldiers."—Washington Post.

SHE WON HER POINT.

And Her Husband Gave Her Carte Blanche for Expenses.

"Mary," he said, as he scowled at her over the breakfast table.

"John," she replied, fearlessly.

"Mary," he said, "what kind of a breakfast do you call this?"

"I call it an excellent one," she returned bravely.

"You do!" he exclaimed, "Well, I don't! I think a little variety occasionally would be a good thing. Do you realize that this is the third morning this week that we have had corned-beef hash?"

"Certainly, John."

"And that we had corned beef for dinner yesterday and cold corned beef for supper?"

"Of course, John. You wanted me to run the house as economically as I could."

"Yes, but—"

"You said that the amount of meat consumed in this house would bankrupt a bank president."

"I know; but I—"

"And that I ought to plan with more regard for the expense."

"Certainly, certainly, Mary; but hang it all—"

"I've been following your instructions."

"But I don't like corned beef!"

"I know it; John," she said in a business-like way. "That's what makes it last so long. It keeps expenses down splendidly, and, if you want—"

"I don't!" he exclaimed, "I don't! Let them run up! You've got too good a business head for anything outside of a boarding house"—Chicago Tribune.

Don't Wear Ear-Muffs.

Ear-muffs are bad things for the ears. Habitual wearing of artificial protection makes the interior of the ear unnaturally warm, and on removing the muff the cold-air penetrates the interior of the head and is apt to cause trouble. The man who habitually wears ear-muffs will be certain to take cold in his ears should he happen to forget one and go out without them, and ear-ache and abscesses are a common result of these protectors. Persistent use of them is almost certain, sooner or later, to bring on trouble with the ear and possibly with the hearing also.—Globe Democrat.

He Was Used to It.

"Pshaw," he said, "there's a great lot of foolish talk about that crank blowing up Russell Sage because he didn't give him a million dollars."

"You wouldn't like that sort of thing pretty much, would you?" inquired the man next to him.

"Like it? Of course not," he replied, "but I wouldn't be raising such a row about it. My wife blows me up every time I refuse to give her a dollar. I'm used to it."

FOR AND ABOUT FARMING.

INSTRUCTIVE MATTERS FOR INDUSTRIOUS FARMERS.

Beginning With Bees--Scab of Potatoes and Roots--Hens or Pullets for Laying?--To Tell Good Seeds from Bad.

Beginning With Bees.

There is wonderful difference between the honey yields of different localities; one man may report: "I never had a greater crop;" while another will say: "My bees have done scarcely anything." There are localities where comb honey cannot be profitably produced, and others where it will not pay to run for extracted honey; in most cases a judicious combination gives best result. Comb-honey is largely sold by its appearance; therefore choose a location where honey plants are such as to produce the finest and best honey. If possible, locate near large alfalfa fields; or where the mountain sides are covered with the different species of sage, or in places where California lilac abounds. An apiary should be located in a valley, so as to give the bees a greater range of flight. The swarming tendency is more or less governed by position of the apiary. If well shaded, and along some river bottom swarming can be controlled very easily. If in a mountain or foothill country, you will have abundance of swarms, and the main difficulty in locations like this is to keep them from swarming too much. To get stocked up with bees better go to some successful beekeeper up with the times, and purchase from him three or four colonies in movable frame hives. It is best not to start with too many, but learn as you go.

The debated question. "Which bees to start with?" is of little moment to a beginner. After you find out your location, then try the different races until you find one that suits you. Some races of bees do well in one location some in another. After getting your bees home and on their permanent stands, read some good book on beekeeping and suscribe for one or more good papers. I think a bee journal of more importance than a bee book, because the journal is constantly presenting the new and valuable discoveries made by the most progressive apiarists of the day. Bee culture could only be learned by study and practice. Learn the principles from the books and papers, then practically apply them; visit some successful apiarist. One visit will sometimes be worth a good many dollars to a beginner. After you are started well study your market; try and build up a good home market. Sell nothing but a good article, thoroughly well ripened, and in a neat, attractive shape. Try and have all your honey first class. Honey should be left in the hives until thoroughly evaporated and all sealed up. Do not extract before it is all capped. Try and use a one-sized frame throughout the apiary; two or more sized frames are a great bother.—Pacific Rural Press.

Extended experience with the scab leads the North Dakota Experiment Station to the following interesting conclusions: Scabby "seed" tubers under ordinary circumstances produce a deceased crop. 2. Seed potatoes free from scab upon soil free from the disease will produce healthy potatoes. 3. The disease germs can remain in the ground from one crop to another. But not the least interesting is the demonstrated fact that by soaking the seed in certain chemicals before planting an undiseased crop can be grown from the scabbiest potatoes, provided the soil be free from the scab germs. The point, is to kill the adhering germs and not retard the growth of the tuber, and for this the treatment recommended is with corrosive sublimate—Mercuric bichloride. In the first place the seed to be treated should be thoroughly washed in a vat of running water or in a tub by frequently changing the water. Only the fairest of potatoes should be retained.

For the treatment obtain a barrel and place in it 13 gals. of water. Dissolve 2 ozs. of the sublimate in 2 gals. of warm water, add this to the barrel and stir for a time. Into this solution place the washed potatoes for an hour and a half. The liquid can be used for further potatoes. After the treatment the tubers can be cut and planted in the usual manner. The substance employed is a strong poison and great care needs to be taken in its use. A similar scab is found on beets of various sorts and as it is probably the same, it is unwise to raise potatoes on the same land successively if they are scabby and it follows that beets should not follow scabby potatoes. It is probable that other root crops are infested with the fungous disease, and likewise it is to be expected that other preventatives will be found effective.—Dr. Byron D. Halsted.

Contrast of Cellars.

A cellar built with too little expense is generally a costly adjunct as long as it lasts. The walls are often not thick enough or properly mortared to make them durable and frost-proof. A mere breaking of joints without using mortar in the middle of the wall will not hold it firmly together. A poorly built cellar, while it lasts, incurs a necessity for banking every autumn, when a quantity of manure or straw is placed between the house and an unsightly fence surrounding it. The following spring this must be drawn away and a general scraping given to the ground it occupied. Provides a harbor for rats and mice and the killing of all the grass near the house are among the inferior effects. The contents of the cellar are liable to freeze in very cold weather unless a fire be kept burning, which incurs expense, bother and danger.

The modern cellar wall is built about 2 ft. thick and mortared throughout above a line 4ft. from the bottom. The top is extended to the floor above, against which it is snugly pointed. No banking outside and no stove or frost inside. Windows double-pane, well puttied and fitted remove the necessity of a candle on entering. It is important to give the ground surrounding the house a good grade and provide eave troughs for the house, also the earth in contact with the wall may become saturated with water, admitting frost more readily than a merely moist soil and increasing the liability to heave the wall inward. A cement floor that may be readily cleaned with mop or broom and that excludes vermin is a welcome improvement. The destruction in a single year of fruits, potatoes and vegetables by rats and meadow-moles would go far toward meeting the expense of a floor to exclude them.—Clark M. Drake.

To Tell Good Seeds From Bad.

The Germantown Telegraph gives a test for the vitality of seeds which we do not remember having seen in print before. Corn is taken as the sample, but the facts are true of all grains. All seeds may be divided into three parts, the germ, the body and the skin. The germ is the part which contains the life principle—the part which sprouts, and is therefore the life of the seed and of the future plant. On the vigor and perfection of the germ or chit depends the value of the seed. The body is the reserve fund of the germ, which supports the embryo sprouts, both top and bottom, or stem and root, until the root is advanced enough to feed upon the soil. During this process the body is generally absorbed entirely to support the plant. The skin of a seed is merely for protection; it protects the interior from undue moister and minor enemies. The germ is of amber color, about the consistency of old cheese, and cuts under a knife exactly like cheese. The body is harder, of various colors, and much less susceptible to attacks of water or insects. These are the characteristics of well-ripened seed, and are invariable. If the seed is caught by frost before becoming ripe, the chit crumbles to a fine powder and becomes dead. So the test of good seed, sure to grow, is the cheesy character of the germ; a very simple thing, easily tested with a sharp knife, and infallible.

Hens or Pullets for Laying?

Whether to retain the old hens or to hatch early pullets is one of the unsettled questions in keeping poultry, says Poultry Yard. The fact is both the old hens and pullets may be preferred, according to circumstances. That the pullets seem to excel the hens at times is true, but the matured hen is better for breeding purposes than the pullet. The hen, after she begins to lay, will often grow fat and remain so on a very small quantity of food. It is difficult to reduce a fat hen except by actual starvation, especially with some breeds, and this is the difficulty, though unknown to some, that induces them to discard her for the pullet, as the pullet from doing double duty of laying and growing, does not fatten so readily. The chicks from eggs produced by hens are nearly always stronger and more vigorous than those produced by pullets, and the hen lays a larger egg than the pullet. The claim that the hen will not lay as many eggs the second and third years as the first is not true. The hen simply fattens more readily as she enters her second year and becomes aged. If fed judiciously, she should cost less than the pullets and lay more eggs, as well as retain her vigor till she is five or six years old.—Western Rural.

Worms at the Root of a Rose.

The small white worms that infest potted plants and eat the roots are the young of a small black fly that breeds in manure or rich soil. The flies may be seen about the roots on the surface of the soil, and are most easily destroyed by pouring strong tobacco water on the earth. There is no need to repot the plants if this remedy is applied. It may be needed more than once, and any flies seen should be caught and killed. The flies, or rather the grubs, are generally brought in the manure. Another remedy is to dip the pot completely under water at a heat of 100 deg. or as hot as the finger can be kept in it for a second. This will drive out or kill all kinds of worms, and especially earth worms, which are often injurious to plants growing in pots. It is advisable when choosing the soil for such plants to sift it and examine it carefully for these pests, and see that it is free from them. The first indication of the presence of these pest is the yellowness of the leaves and their dropping from the stems.

Short Rows.

It is estimated from very reliable sources that this season Virginia had 100,000 acres of land devoted to tobacco culture.

Eggs from a filthy and vile-smelling hen house can not be really fit to eat. The quality of eggs is affected both by the food and surroundings of the hens.

A correspondent says that in saving seed corn there are five points to look at: Length of ear, depth of grain, smallness of cob, well fitted ends, and a good place to keep it.

The Country Gentleman says an Albany county farmer placed on each bale of hay shipped, the information that it was grown on gravelly loam and was free from dust and chaff—with name and address, and for this got $1.50 above the market price.

There are some ways, at least, in which more protection would help the farmer. If he would protect his cattle from cold, storms and winds, his poultry from vermin and his tools and machines from sun and rain, it would increase his income and reduce his expenses.

When cuttings are being rooted by amateurs in small tin or earthen vessels, placed in sunny windows, the process can be forwarded by painting the receptacle black. The color absorbs the heat and imparts it to the sand or earth, thus facilitating the starting of the roots.

Do not allow the sheep to be out long in rain or snow. When the fleece gets filled with either, it takes a long time to dry out and a great deal of animal heat to dry it out, and that heat requires extra feed to keep up. A heavy fleece thoroughly saturated with water is a heavy load for the animal to carry about.

A Grand Endowment.

To invigorate is to endow with health. This is conferred upon the feeble, the nervous and the dyspeptic by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the great enabling medicine. It recreates, as it were, the ability to digest and to sleep. It aguments the appetite, and, since it increases the power of the system to incorporate food as part of its substance, it tends to remedy leanness. Malaria, kidney complaint, la grippe and liver complaint are cured by the Bitters.

The disagreeable operation of forcing liquids into the head, and the use of exciting snuffs are being superceded by Ely's Cream Balm, a cure for Catarrh and colds in the head.

I have been a great sufferer from Catarrh for ten years; could hardly breathe. Some nights I could not sleep. I purchased Ely's Cream Balm and am using it freely; it is working a cure surely. I have advised several friends to use it, and with happy results in every case. It is the medicine above all others for catarrh, and it is worth its weight in gold. I thank God I have found a remedy I can use with safety and that does all that is claimed for it.—B. W. Sperry, Hartford, Conn.

After the Grip

"A Walking Ghost" Was What They Called Mrs. Rumrill.

Mrs. Susie C. Rumrill, of Royalton, Vt., voluntarily writes: "For years I had gastric dyspepsia, and recently had the Grip. I got into such a serious condition that I had fits, during which time I could not think collectedly or talk without forgetting what I was saying. I could not sleep, had no appetite, and people said I looked like a walking ghost, I was so pale. When I laid down I

ONE FINE MORNING.

One fine morning he and she Met as people often do;
"May I go your way?" said he;
"Yes," and like a rose she grew.
"Long this chance I've sought," he said,
"Long my love for you I've hid.
Do you like me, pretty maid?"
And she answered that she did.

One fine morning, then, they met,
Eyes in temper were cast down;
Lashes with teardrops wet,
Smiles had fled before the frown!
Both were right, and both were wrong!
Neither the fault would admit!
So they quarreled, and, ere long,
Parted and the rest of it!

One fine morning—such is life!
Meeting, they forgot the past!
Only tender words were rife,
Only loving looks were cast;
Ne'er again did tempers rise,
Sweetness held its reign instead!
And, it may not cause surprise,
One fine morning they were wed.

HITTIE SLOCUM T. W. AND S

BY EMMA P. VEEDER.

THE law firm of Mann & Boise were in need of a typewriter and stenographer, and in answer to their request Miss Slocum had been sent them from a well known school.

The girl was a study in brown. Hat, gloves and wrap were of the same warm color, and the smoothly coiled hair, and bright eyes seemed made to match the dotted veil that was tucked tightly under the hat.

"You are just in time, Miss Slocum," remarked the Senior, as he pointed to a chair. "The work has accumulated rapidly, and a long brief must be put into the printers' hands as quickly as possible."

"I am ready for it, sir," and commonplace as was her answer, it set the grayhaired lawyer wondering where he had heard that voice before.

Miss Slocum removed hat and wrap, gave her curly hair a pat and poke, warmed her hands before the open fire, and seated herself at the typewriter.

The Senior called the Junior into the private office, and in a voice that meant to be stern, said: "No nonsense about her. I don't approve of women about an office, but—well don't be a fool over her, my boy. This is business—simply business."

Hubert Boise looked calmly into his partner's face. "I understand perfectly, sir. I have seen pretty girls before. I shall not fall in love with our typewriter."

Meanwhile the click, click of the little machine had kept regularly on, and the girl had hardly lifted her eyes from her work. Before lunch time quite a pile of correctly written pages were laying on the Senior's desk, and the firm looked them over delighted. "After lunch you may take up the brief, Miss Slocum, and while you will no doubt find it dull work, yet you may find it in a way interesting, for, come to think, the name of one of the parties is the same as yours."

When at the close of the noon hour Miss Slocum reached the office she found that she had been needlessly prompt. Seating herself before the fire she looked about the office. "Very handsomely furnished! Comfort and elegance combined. Wouldn't mamma have laughed could she have seen my brave entree into the presence of the most noted criminal lawyer in the state! Who knows now, but that the poor old bachelor was as badly frightened as I was, and how exceedingly dignified is the honorable Junior. Well! I'll work the mortgage off, and some new clothes on, and then I'll go home to mamma."

The Junior reached the office first, supplied Miss Slocum with copy, adjusted the window shades, offered her the "noon edition," which she politely refused, and then went to his den to smoke and think.

Hittie Slocum was a typical American girl. Fair of face, graceful in manner, sparkling in conversation, sympathetic in sorrow, helpful in suffering and proud as she was true. Her father had died during the war, and was buried on some Southern battle field. Her mother had come West, invested her few hundreds in a little home and had taken a few pupils, educating her son and daughter at the same time. The son, a crippled lad, was the sunshine of the home, and to provide him with the needed medical aid, and the delicacies he craved the house had been mortgaged.

It was only a small sum, but to the daughter it seemed a load that was crushing the life and youth out of her. After months of persistent study she had secured the position for which she had strived, and as her fingers flew over the keys the clickety-click was to her the sweetest music. The following week was a busy one, and Saturday night found a great pile of pages ready for the Senior's last reading. Monday the long brief was finished.

"You have seemed much interested in your work," remarked the Senior as he saw her lay the pages in order. "Did you ever know anything of this Slocum?"

"Yes; I am sure he is George D. Slocum I once knew."

"Well, if we could find him or his heirs it would be hundreds of dollars in our pockets and thousands of dollars for them."

"Mr. Mann, will you tell me where you have looked for Mr. Slocum, or his heirs?"

"We looked everywhere. It seems that before the was Slocum married a neice of Gov. Blank, of Kentucky, moved to New York State, and from there went to a litte West Virginia town. He went into the army, and was never heard from. His wife must have died and without children, for we cannot find any clue to anything that will help us to keep this distant relative from claiming everything."

"Miss Slocum, can you help us?" Mr. Boise had watched the varying expressions of her face as she listened to the Senior, and felt confident that the strained voice and enforced calmness betokened more than a passing interest in the matter under consideration.

"I think if I might spend the night at home I could bring you some information that would prove interesting if not helpful."

"Go, by all means," quickly responded Mr. Mann, as he handed her a check for two weeks' wages, "bring us all the information you can and we will see that you are suitably rewarded."

The Junior hurried onto the street to call a cab, and had stopped to purchase a basket of choice fruit and a cluster of spicy carnations. In less than an hour Miss Slocum was seated in the cab, the Junior opposite, the carnations tucked into her belt, and being driven at a furious pace to the railway station.

Mr. Boise was evidently a little surprised at himself, and seemed to try to apologize for his presence by urging her to bring an array of facts that would settle any law suit in the land. She listened patiently, but her thoughts had flown ahead to the mother and brother who would be so glad at her unexpected visit. She also felt confident that in a certain trunk she would find papers that would prove interesting to several persons, among them the kindly old man in the up-town office, and the handsome gallant who was acting as her escort.

Mr. Boise found her a comfortable seat, gave her the evening paper, asked her on what train she would return, lowered the window, said a dozen things about the weather, and then, as the train gave a sudden jar, handed her the fruit, saying, "For your mother, with the firm's compliments. Goodbye, Miss Slocum."

The tea-table was set for supper. A bright fire was burning in the little open stove, and before it knelt a woman whose silver hair did not disguise the youthful face that flushed in the firelight, looked almost girlish.

"Mother, if Hittie were here we would have peach jam on our toast, wouldn't we?"

"No, George, it shall be peaches and cream," and Hittie had stooped down and kissed the boyish face, while the mother rose hastily to greet her daughter.

"How did you come? How do you like it? How long can you stay?"

"On the cars.—Very much.—Back to-morrow," laughed the happy girl. "Now you're answered, and while Dearest cuts up the lovely peaches that were sent her with the firm's compliments, I'll get the butter and cream and set the tea a-steeping."

The carnations were put in a dainty vase in the center of the table, the white grapes and purple plums lay cool and tempting on a plate of fine china, the toast was hot and brown in its rack of silver wire, and while the meal was a simple one three happy faces were bowed a moment in silent thanksgiving before they began their repast. What a long talk these three had after the supper dishes were put away, and Hittie asked questions innumerable concerning the father she so indistinctly remembered, and of the home where they had lived before coming West! She had heard the story often, but tonight it seemed harder to bear than ever before, and she held her mother's hand tightly as they wept over the unknown grave of their soldier dead.

When Hittie had said good-night and closed the door of the room behind her, she went at once to a little trunk that had been put in her clothes-room. Carefully she looked through package and bundle, and put upon paper some items that were indisputable. Carefully she re read:

George Denham Slocum, born 1827. Father's name, Frank Slocum. Mother's name, Mary Denham. Bought and lived on a farm nine miles from Louisville, Ky. Both parents buried on the old farm. George D. Slocum married Mehitable Blank, of Kentucky, June 4, 1857. Two children were born, Mehitable and George, Jr. The old farm should have belonged to George D., but his father died without a will, and his mother, old and feeble, let the farm on shares. She died soon after George was reported dead, and Mrs. Slocum, alone and without means, moved to a little Western town, where she had supported her children by teaching.

When Miss Slocum reached the office that September morning, and laid upon the Senior's desk the little package containing a few photographs, a certeficate of marriage, and the written items as we have given them, the hand Mr. Mann took in greeting was cold, and trembled in his fatherly grasp. Mr. Boise speedily made his appearance, and as he said "good morning," noticed that one bright carnation was fastened in the pin at her throat. Whatever thought of a sentimental nature may have entered his brain was speedily dispelled by the long, low whistle from the Senior as he said quickly: "Tell us how you came by this. Do you know who George Slocum was—or is?"

"Mr. Mann, George Slocum was my father, and he sleeps upon an unknown grave upon some Southern battle field."

There was a moment's silence, and the kindly old man held out his hand. "There is no doubt but this will change everything—everything for you, my dear. I think I will run down to Cooperville and see your mother, and if she wishes to retain us as her lawyers —Well this is strange—that our stenographer should hold the evidence in this case."

"Could not this business be arranged without troubling mamma? I so wish it might," Hittie urged, but after the long talk that followed, it was decided that Mr. Mann should present matters to Mrs. Slocum, and secure any facts or papers she might possess. Mr. Boise should go to Louisville, visit the old farm, look up the titles and see the persons who so anxiously were contesting their rights to the Slocum estate.

Hittie had written her mother that Mr. Mann was coming to the village on business and would call upon her, and she greeted the dignified lawyer in a manner that charmed him.

After a few moments' conversation he asked: "Mellie, after twenty years have you forgotten Rufus Mann?"

Slowly the color crept up to the border of waving hair. "I have always remembered you, Rufus."

The business matter received its share of attention, and George had a long talk with the distinguished lawyer who had played with his mother when they were both "little fellows," and who had drawn her to and from school on his sled when the snow was deep and days cold.

The claim was not a matter of easy settlement, and the long fall days grew shorter and the winter snows were piled high about the little cottage at Cooperville before the Senior made his second visit. This time Hittie came with him, and the four ate supper in the little dining-room, and the mother looked as fair as her daughter as she poured the tea and laughed merrily as the Senior told stories "of the days when we were young."

There were numberless papers to sign and questions to answer, and still the great tangle could not be straightened. Hittie worked faithfully in the office. The "awful debt" had been removed and many little comforts added to the cottage.

Mr. Boise had been at times "distressingly polite," as Hittie wrote to her mother, but since his return from Louisville a very pleasant friendship had been established, "and matters are very much nicer," so the lassie thought.

Just before Thanksgiving the long-disputed title was found, and the little suburb of Louisville known as Oakenwald, was thrown into a panic over the announcement that no resident held a clear title to the property they called their own. Churches, schools, stores, factories and residences all were on land belonging to George D. Slocum and his heirs.

Careful management was necessary on the part of the Northern firm in order that they might collect the rental for twelve years, and supply correct titles in the place of the worthless ones. But on the evening before Thanksgiving, and two years after the beginning of our little story, the paper had been signed and the money safely deposited. On the morrow Hittie and the "firm" were going down to the cottage for Thanksgiving dinner.

When Mr. Mann handed over the paper and bank-book to Mrs. Slocum the brave little woman could hardly control her sobs, as she realized that the thousands of dollars were rightfully hers. But as they sat in the twilight after dinner, the little group listened to the story of Mr. Mann's life, his losses and triumphs, and then once more was told the story of Mr. Slocum's going from home and never returning. Just then George remarked: "Mother, we should have a man to look after all that money." And when Mrs. Slocum took the boy's hand in hers and laid it on that of her friend of long ago, she said: "Yes, dear, and here is the Mann."

Hittie and the Junior went out into the winter twilight together. Down the long village street, and then back across the fields, over the little bridge. They stopped a moment in the darkened hall and listened to the pleasant hum of voices in the little parlor.

"Mamma I'll tell you how we will arrange this, George may have the Mann, but I love Boise best."

At the Telephone.

"Hello, are you there?"

"Well?"

"I want a thousand."

"I know lots of people in your fix."

"I say I want a thousand."

"So do I."

"Don't get impudent, Miss."

"Don't let that keep you awake at nights."

"I want to know if you're going to give me a thousand."

"What for?"

"Because I want it."

"Well, if you get it before I do, ring me up."

"Are you going to give me a thousand?"

"Wouldn't a hundred do?"

"No. I want a thousand or nothing."

"Well, don't bother me if you do; I'm no saving's bank."

"Will you or will you not give me what I ask for?"

"You are either insane or trying to be funny."

"I think the shoe is on the other foot."

"I shall ask you once more, will you give me number one thousand—Brown, Jones & Robinson?

"Oh, you want the telphone number one, three noughts? Why didn't you say so before?"

The Right to Fresh Milk on Sunday

A great religious question has just been decided in the island of Arran, where Robert Kelso, a farmer and an elder in the Free Kirk, was admonished by his church session for supplying fresh milk to the Duchess of Hamilton on a Sunday. The minister held that as the Jews of old only received fresh manna six days in the week, the Duchess had no right to expect fresh milk on seven. But the elder was contumacious, and appealed to the presbytery. He argued that his milk was not manna, or miraculous, and perversely refused to remain fresh for twenty-four hours. The presbytery took this view of the case, and ordered the admonition to be withdrawn.—London Letter.

Dangerous Exposure.

The unsuccessful candidate for office needs to be able to appreciate a joke, although it may be one at his own expense.

The Abbe de La Riviere, it is said, wished very much to wear a cardinal's hat.

He once journeyed to Italy with high hope, but returned to Paris without having been made a cardinal. His friend Bautru met him soon after, and seeing that he had a very bad cold, said:

"My dear abbe, this is no doubt a consequence of returning from Rome without a hat."

Hibernating Birds.

A few years ago the owner of a riverside farm in Southern Indiana published a report which seemed to prove that, for a few weeks, birds of certain species are apt to hibernate, like bats and squirrels. A number of laborers had been clearing a patch of wood at the river shore, and came across several martins or chimney swallows that had taken refuge in a hollow sycamore tree and appeared numb or half dead with the cold, but on being brought to a warm room revived and fluttered about the windows as if nothing had happened.

RAMESES II., during the earlier years of his reign, was always escorted by a female dog, which was called Anaitiennaktou, or brave as the goddess Anaitis. A petty king of the eleventh dynasty, about 3300 B. C., had five dogs, which he so loved that he carved their names and engraved their portraits on his tomb. They were, indeed, blooded animals, whose names revealed their foriegn origin. The finest of them was called Abaikarou, a faithful transcription of the word abaikour, by which the hunting dog is designated in many of the Berber districts.

A Short Feast.

BY EVA LOVETT CARSON.

There was once an old rat who lived in a garret. He had begun life there, and having now a large family, he found it inconvenient to move. But the garret had one drawback as a place of residence. It was a long distance from the kitchen, and the rat, having to go so far to forage for food, found it not always easy to supply the needs of his growing family.

One night he started down the garret stairs to find something for supper. His tail sounded thump, thump on every step. Any one listening could have heard the patter of his feet through the hall. But everybody was asleep. The sitting room door stood open. As the rat passed he glanced in, and noticed a queerly shaped bag lying upon the table. He went nearer to investigate, and found a bag of lovely fresh biscuits—at least two pounds! Here was a treasure indeed!

"Aha!" cried Mr. Rat, smacking his lips; "I shall not go down to the kitchen for supper tonight!"

He reflected upon what he had better do. He could not carry the whole bag up stairs. If he took the biscuits up one at a time, he would not be able to secure all of them before he was discovered. Must he lose this feast, and be content with the two or three he could eat before morning?

He looked about the room, and his eyes fell upon the open grate, bare and fireless. It was only used in the coldest weather.

"Just the thing!" said the wise rat.

With a biscuit in his mouth he ran up the flue, and found there a splendid hiding-place. The chimney was filled with a bag of straw, and behind it he secreted the biscuits, making many journeys, and leaving only enough in the bag to provide a hearty supper for the young rats after his exertions.

The next morning there was a great outcry among the children. Some one had eaten the sweet biscuits! The bag was empty!

"Mice!" declared Aubrey.

"Nonsense!" cried nurse. "No mouse—no, nor ten mice—could eat all those biscuits in one night!"

But nobody solved the riddle. The rat family lived high for a week, and Mr. Rat grew fat from finding continual suppers at such short range.

At the end of the week there came a big snow-storm, and then a hard frost. The house was very cold. Mamma decreed extra fires, and Nancy came up stairs to build a fire in the sitting-room grate.

"Don't forget the straw bag, Nancy," said Nurse. "It's put into the chimney to keep out the wind, but you must take it down before you start the fire."

Nancy put her arm up the chimney to pull down the straw bag. One end seemed quite loose, but the other was wedged in tight. She gave a hard tug, and the bag came away so suddenly that she tumbled over backward.

"My goodness!" cried Nancy.

For after the straw bag followed a shower of soot, and then a shower of curiously shaped objects, which had once been white, but had grown gray and then black in their hiding-place. But the parties feasting upon them had never hesitated upon that account.

When she had examined them, Nancy called nurse, who was duly surprised, and then she called the children, who added "Ohs!" and "Ahs!" to suit the occasion.

"It's them lost biscuits, to be sure!" pronounced nurse. "And it's that old garret rat that's done it—the wretch! I hear him come thumpin' down them garret stairs every night."

Presently the fire blazed and roared up the chimney, and threw flashes of light into the farthest corners. That night when the old garret rat came down and saw it, his heart sank down into his toes. He knew he would have to go all the way down to the kitchen again to find a supper. His royal time was over.—Harper's Young People.

Physical Training.

Boys of to-day have great advantages in their physical training over those of even ten years ago. It is easily within the remembrance of those of us who have not been out of college so very long, how the mere mention of football at home brought down a storm of paternal wrath, while unrelenting prohibition followed us back to shool. The game was then an enigma, and the newspapers added horror to the mystery by printing their accounts of matches in a manner calculated to chill the blood of any well-regulated household.

Gradually as the sons induced their parents to view the sport themselves, the prejudice wore away. The game finds favor in schools from Maine to California, and the result is a generation of lads growing up whose physical beauty and healthful condition put us of the last generation to shame. Our 16-year old stripling, says Harper's Young People can outrow, outrun, outswim, outride and outdrive us; give us points on football, base ball, and tennis; and happily devoid of that sickly pallor peculiar to the student of our day, knows quite as much, with the ruddy glow of health in his cheeks. And yet there are to be found some few that do not favor athletics for boys! The glorious influence for good that sports have on the general education and welfare of both boys and girls has not begun to be appreciated. When I see a boy who does not take his play-hour, I regard him with as much disquiet as the man who never has a kind word for any one. Play is as necessary to the boys and girls as water is to a plant. Without it the growth of the one is restricted and unhealthful, while the other, having fewer resources, dies.

A Crow Conspiracy.

People who don't know the crow may find difficulty in believing the following anecdote, though Anglo-Indians will accept it without hesitation. A dog of my acquaintance—a fox-terrier of long Eastern experience—was one morning eating a chicken-bone on the veranda, when two crows happened to pass, and, observing the dog and his bone, wheeled down and alighted on the veranda railing, whence they set to work croaking to induce him to drop his breakfast. Under ordinary circumstances an English dog will fly at a crow the moment he appears; but on this occasion Jack simply looked up, growled and continued gnawing. The crows ceased croaking, and consulted together for a moment; then one of the pair dropped into the veranda a few yards behind the dog and croaked at him again; once more receiving no answer but a growl. After strolling casually round the veranda for a minute, to let Jack settle down, the bird hopped up silently and swiftly and gave the dog's tail a cruel nip. That was too much; with a howl of pain Jack turned upon his tormentor, and crow No. 2, who had been patiently awaiting this opportunity, swooped down upon the bone and carried it off. You never saw a dog wear a look of such abject humiliation as did Jack when he recognized how he had been fooled.—The Churchman.

A Bear Story.

A veteran hunter of the North Carolina mountains is John Kelly, who has trapped scores of bears, several hundred deer, a thousand 'coons or more, and turkeys, pheasants, and mink without number.

"'S long go's I was a boy," relates Kelly, "I learned to first fin' out what sort o' game 'twas 'fore I tackled it. I got th' lesson one night when I was out 'coon-huntin' with my father an' brother. The night was dark as a tar-bar'l. I heard a hog squeal in a thicket by a big log. Our black 'coon dog was bad to catch hogs, an' I said: 'Tige has got another hog. I'll go in an' break him of such tricks.' I gave Jim the light, picked up a knot, and caught the dog, as I thought, by the nape of the neck. He had the hog by the fore-shoulders pressed agin the log, an' had eaten seven or eight pounds of flesh out of her back, an' she alive an' kickin' an' squealin' like mad. Wall, I got him by the neck, as I said, behind the ears, an' found it wa'nt no dog, but a big black b'ar. He growled an' bit at me, an' we had a pretty lively tussel on't till Jim brought the axe an' a light, an' atween us we managed to split the b'ar's head open. He was a big one—weighed 400 pounds. 'S always well fer a feller t' fin' out whether he's tacklin' a hog 'r a b'ar 'fore he tackles it."

What Every Girl Can Make.

Open a sheet of fine imported tissue paper, fold in the center, lengthwise, once, then fold the other way twice and cut. There will be six squares. Fold across, cornerwise, three times, cut a deep round scallop, and unfold. You have six rounds of eight scallops each. Use four sheets of any shade desired. Fold and cut each sheet the same as the first. Take one round of the paper, fold one scallop lengthwise in the center on one wire of a common hairpin, holding the head of the pin in the right hand. Press the papers into gathers with the left hand, pressing toward the right, without breaking the paper. Shirr each scallop in this way, then take one round of each shade, from dark to light, and tack together in the center, and you will have six handsome mats. Some decorate them by taking some rose-colored paper, red, pink, yellow and cream-white. Fold and cut in the same way three rounds of each color—size three inches each; shirr in the same way. Take a piece of yellow paper on a wire for the center, put them on the wire and you have a handsome rose. Place, equal distances apart, one of each shade around the mat and fasten in place.

A Boy's Ideas on Breath.

A little boy in the North Side public School recently handed in to the teacher his following composition on "Our Breath:"

"Our breath is made of air. If it were not for our breath we would die. The breath keeps going through our liver, our lights and our lungs. Boys shut up in a room all day should not breathe; they should wait until they get out of doors. Air in a room has carbonocide in it, and carbonocide is poisioner than mad dogs. Once some men was shut up in a black hole in India, a carbonocide got into that there hole, and afore morning nearly every one of them was dead.

"Girls wear corsets which squeeze their diagrams too much. Girls cannot run and holler like boys 'cause their diagrams are squeezed. If I was a girl I would just run and holler so my diagram would grow.

"That's all on breath."—Minneapolis Journal.

Exercise the Horses.

The horses need occasional exercise during the winter, and a short drive every day is better than a long one once a week. It is mistaken kindness to walk a mile to the postoffice when the horse has not been out of the barn for 24 hours. But do not let them stand for an hour or two in the cold without blankets while you are gossipping or trading. Drive often and moderately; blanket well while out, and clean off the legs well when you get back, and the legs will keep in good shape much longer.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

Annie Besant is now, as she has been for the last four or five years, one of my most intimate friends. I had not the privilege of knowing her in her earliest phase, either of schoolgirl Evangelicalism or of young-woman Puseyism, but I knew her as Materialist and Atheist. I know her as Theosophist, and whatever development she may pass through will in no way affect the sentiment of affectionate admiration with which I regard her.

. . . Last month her name was in every mouth, and the papers were filled with endless letters discussing the latest phase of her progress in search of truth. . . The other day she was presiding over a Socialist Congress in Paris, next year no one can say where she will be or what she will be doing, except that, whatever she may do or wherever she may go, one thing only is quite certain, she will be animated by a passionate love and sympathy for the poor and oppressed, and she will command the enthusiastic affection of all those who come near enough to her to know her as she really is.

Yet Mrs. Besant, one of the half-dozen women who have stamped the impress of their strong and vivid personality upon their own time, is one to whom, until but the other day, it was considered hardly correct to allude, except in the most distant manner, as if she inhabited another and improper world. When I started this Review I had to put my foot down, before the first number saw the light, on an attempt to enforce even in these pages the policy of boycott that still prevails in certain obscure quarters. Mrs. Besant, had written me a cordial little note welcoming the new Review, which was inserted among the other letters which I received from the eminent business men and women of the day. The business side of the Review remonstrated. "Was very sorry, you know, really. Great regard for Mrs. Besant, but business is business, and it would never do, and especially in the first number, to parade her name. Couldn't Mr. Stead leave it over till February?" To which the editorial side replied as might be expected, only to elicit the further protest: "Well of course, if you will, you must, but remember, that name will cost us hundreds of subscribers. There are scores of clergymen who will never allow the Review to enter their doors if Mrs. Besant's name appears in its columns." That may or may not be true. If it is, so much the worse for the clergymen in question. Of course her letter went in. But the protest was interesting as illustrating the kind of prejudice which has existed about Mrs. Besant.

It may be that even now some readers may have so little entered into the spirit with which every page of this magazine has been written since the first summary overruling of the protests against the publication of her letter, as to object to the selection of Mrs. Besant as the subject of this Character Sketch. All that I need say to them is, whether they be many or few, that when they have made a tithe of her sacrifices for conscience sake they may be in a position to criticise. Until then they will do well to be silent, and endeavor, if they can, to catch a little of her spirit. Most of those who sneer at her as if she were disreputable, or shrug their shoulders when her name is mentioned, might then perhaps come to be numbered among those who are worthy to loose the latchet of her shoe.

One result of the persistent boycott has been maintained against her so long by the papers is that one of the most charming and pathetic autobiographical sketches in our language is practically non-existent for the great mass of the English-speaking public. Mrs. Besant's fragmentary sketches of her spiritual pilgrimage, although published in 1885, is I suppose, almost unknown to my readers. The book is out of print, and they will therefore be grateful for the extracts which I shall make freely from its pages. I hope, now the ice has been broken, and the great slow-minded public has wakened up at last to the fact that Mrs. Besant is one of the most remarkable women of our time she will republish it with an additional chapter describing the later stages of her pilgrim's progress. An authentic narrative of the soul-journeyings of an intensely religious soul from Evangelism to Puseyism, and thence through Broad Church Theism to the flat negations of an Atheistic Materialism, out of which she has emerged, by way of Spiritualism, into the realm of Theosophy, is one of which we may search in vain in contemporary religious biography. Such a story could not fail to be full of suggestion in any case, even if the writer were obscure and unknown. How much more interesting, then, must it be when it reaches us from one of the most eloquent of living women, who is still in the zenith of her powers.

LAUGHED INTO THE GRAVE.

The Singular Death of a Young Girl Who Lived Near Nashville From Hysteria.

A young lady who resided on Madison avenue received a letter recently from a relative in Nashville, Tenn., which contained an account of a peculiar case of hysteria which resulted in the death of a 16-year-old-girl. The latter had her risibilities excited by the actions of an intoxicated brother, and despite the efforts of her parents and a physician, who had been summoned, the young girl laughed herself to death.

The victim was the daughter of Hiram Wathen, a prosperous farmer, who lives a few miles south of Nashville. She has been suffering from a complication of nervous disorders for several years, and frequently had attacks of hysteria which invalidated her for several days at a time.

An older brother visited Nashville on the day of her death with several companions, and returned home in the evening considerably under the influence of liquor. On attempting to climb out of the carriage in which he had been riding he slipped and fell, rolling over several times on the muddy drive.

The young girl began to laugh at his misadventures and continued about twenty minutes. At the end of that time her mother rebuked her. She endeavored to control herself, but failed, and then made signs to her mother that she was in pain. She continued to laugh and giggle, but all expression of humor had left her face and tears stood in her eyes. Mrs. Wathen made an attempt to relieve her by douches of cold water and other simple means, all of which produced no effect, and then a physician was hastily summoned.

By the time the latter arrived the girl was rolling upon the floor screaming and shouting. She was completely exhausted, and when convulsions, which caused all of the muscles in her body and limbs to twitch in a shocking manner, set in she became unconscious. The jumping movement continued nearly half an hour, and then despite the physicians efforts, she expired.

The doctor made a thorough examination and pronounced her case to be one of extraordinary violent hysteria, and said that had he been summoned when the singular attack first began he would have been able to have saved the girl.—New York Herald.

A STORY RETOLD.

The Colored Brother and the Soldier With the Wooden Leg.

There was once a man who had a wooden leg.

The man was an officer in the Union army. He had lost his meat leg, as the little boy said, at Sharpsburg. But the wooden leg was such a good one that its owner still passed for a biped, even among some of his intimate friends.

One day a runaway negro, a contraband, strolled into camp, and the officer engaged him as his body servant.

After looking long upon the wine one night at a little dinner, the officer came home to his tent. He called his contraband to help pull off his boots.

"Now Sam," he said, "be careful. One of these boots is tight, and it most pulls my leg out to get it off. Besides I feel rather flimsy tonight,"

When the contraband began to pull at the other boot the officer loosened the straps of the wooden leg a little. Sam pulled hard and things came with a rush.

"There! There! I told you to be careful," shouted the officer, as the leg came off. "I was afraid you'd pull that leg off."

Sam saw the leg protruding from the top of the boot which he had pulled off.

His eyes bulged out like a lobster's, and he yelled just once as he sprung for the door.

"Lemme go, lemme go," he shrieked as he dashed through the group outside. "I never done nuffin!" And he was still yelling when he disappeared in the woods. They never saw him in camp again.—Boston Herald.

Prevalence of Slang.

Sad-Eyed Compositor—Wot gentleman can spare me a few quotes?

Foreman—See here, Slug 13, that's the sixth time you've asked for quotes in five minutes. Whatcher setting, anyway?

Slug 13—Well, the rules of the paper says quote all slang and I've got a take of the base-ball editor's copy.—Chicago Times.

One of the most disastrous fires that ever visited the business portion of Cleveland, O., occurred the other night. The dry goods store of the McGillin company was totally destroyed involving a loss of at least $600,000, probably covered by insurance. The building was a five-story, brick block on the corner of Superior and Senra streets and extending back to Long street.

The Ideal Baking Powder
is
Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder.

For more than fifty years Cream of Tartar and Bi-carbonate of Soda have been used for leavening purposes with sufficient flour added to preserve the strength of the powder unimpaired, and this with the addition of whites of eggs comprises this pure and wholesome leavening agent, that has been the standard for 40 years. In its use pure, wholesome and delicious food is always assured.

Makes cake and biscuit that retain their moisture, and while they are flaky and extremely light they are fine grained, not coarse and full of holes as made with ammonia baking powders, latter dries up quickly. Alum powders leave a bitter taste in the bread or cake.

THE ABUSED WIFE

Mrs. Blaine, Jr., Tells Her Tale of Woe on the Witness Stand at Deadwood, S. D.

Her Testimony, Clear and Convincing, Wins the Sympathy of All.

DEADWOOD, S.D., Feb. 20.—The Blaine divorce case has been tried, all the depositions have been read, the plaintiff has given her evidence, and the attorney has rested. Argument will be made to-morrow for the plaintiff, however, as the defendant did not put in an appearance.

The weather had moderated greatly since yesterday and as Mrs. Blaine passed a good night has had no recurrence of hemorrhage and felt much stronger than any time since her arrival in Deadwood. she was able this afternoon to take the witness stand, and bearing up bravely under the stare of 500 eyes answered the questions of her attorney and told the sad story of her life since her marriage with J. G. Blaine, Jr., Sept. 6, 1886.

According to her testimony the courtship was a short one. They met at Augusta, Me., and a few weeks later became engaged. The engagement then was that they were not to be married for four years, or until Miss Nevins had fulfilled her theatrical contract with Madame Modjeska and Daniel Frohman, and Mr. Blaine had completed his collegiate course. The young man changed his mind, however, concluded he did not want Miss Nevins to appear on the stage, and persuaded her to a hasty and secret marriage.

The difficulty that she was a Catholic and he a Protestant was overcome by a dispensation from Archbishop Corrigan, and the wedding took place in the vestry of St. Leo's church, New York, Rev. Father Drucry officiating. The couple started the same evening for Boston, arriving there next morning.

THE FAMILY OBJECTED.

Young Blaine left his bride and went to Augusta, Me., to inform his parents of his marriage. Mrs. Blaine returned to New York. A few days later she received a letter from her husband stating that his parents objected strenuously to the match, and intimating he would have to give her up.

The letter prostrated her and she was ill until receipt of a second letter apologizing for the first, and stating that since his father had become acquainted with all the circumstances of their trip to Boston included, he advised his return to his bride. The husband followed the letter in a day or two, and all went merry as a marriage bell for some weeks, during which the couple lived at the New York hotel on Nineteenth street, and in Pittsburg, where young Blaine Blaine chased items as a reporter for a daily paper.

There was a little more than a year of bliss, then came the crowning happiness, the birth of a son, fifteen months after the marriage, in Augusta, in 1838. Mrs. Blaine accompanied her husband on a visit to his parents at Augusta, and from this time her troubles dated. Arriving in Augusta, she found that the children of Mrs. Coppinger, then visiting the Blaines, were down with whooping cough, and that it was necessary for her to send her maid and baby to a hotel while herself and husband went to the parental mansion.

This was the first of a succession of disagreeable incidents. A state campaign was in progress in Maine and, her husband constantly accompanied his father to various places where the senior Blaine was making speeches. Whenever he was absent her mother-in-law made it peculiarly hard for her.

COMMUNICATION WITH HER HUSBAND DENIED.

At length she told her husband, as he was about leaving her on Friday, that if he did not return the next day she would be absent when he did come back. Their baby was then ill and that time came near dying. She was anxious to communicate with her husband, but was unable to do so because her mother-in-law refused to tell his address and when she learned this later because the telegraph operator refused to send the message until it was paid for and she had no money.

Her physician advised that for the baby's health she return to New York immediately, and she did so, notwithstanding her mother-in-law said:

"If you go I never want to see you again. I will make you rue it the longest day you live."

Mrs. Blaine, Sr., concluded by saying:

"I'll keep my son with me. In one half-hour, if I choose, I can take that young man from you."

The young wife retorted that if he was that weak he was not worth her love. She told of her illness and fruitless appeals for assistance. Upon the advice of Gen. McMahon and Gen. Roger A. Pryor she went once more to Augusta. This visit was induced by a letter from James G. Blaine, Sr., to Col. Ingersoll, in which Mr. Blaine conceived the idea he thought the wife had deserted her husband.

Accompanied by her mother she went to Augusta, and in driving from the depot to the family home saw her husband standing in front of the house. When she entered the front door he entered the back, and was at once pounced upon by his mother, who led him to an up stairs bed room and locked him in, refusing to let her see, speak or communicate with him by messenger. Subsequently young Blaine, at the instigation of his mother, left the house and went to the railroad station at Gardner, where it was proposed he should take a train for Portland and go to Europe.

To-morrow the findings of fact and conclusions of law will be presented. A decree is not expected for several days.

Trouble for Anti-Jag Keeley.

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—Now that the New York legislature has got after the bichloride of gold cure there seems to be trouble ahead for Keeley's institution. It is reported that the friends of Walter B. Earle, a former patient of the institute, who died insane from undergoing the treatment and being discharged "cured" of his intemperate habits, are going to make things lively for the Keeley people. They claim that Earle's death was directly caused by the bichloride of gold treatment, and are making arrangements to bring an action for $100,000 damages against Dr. Keeley and his associates.

Caused by a Child.

AITKIN, Minn., Special Telegram.—The dwelling of Gus Anderson and the dwelling of Ole Larson, with its contents, were destroyed by fire to-day. Anderson's loss is $700; no insurance; Larson's $1,500; insurance, $500 in St. Paul German, and $500 in Pennsylvania. The fire originated in Larson's house. A three-year-old child playing with coals was the cause.

Seven Were Severely Injured.

DEWITT, Iowa, Special—By the explosion of a gas engine in the Cyclone Manufacturing company's works Miss Dora Fuller, Miss Hall, Fred Johnson, Frank Jones, Homer Reed, Norman Hall and Arthur Crane were severely injured. The explosion was caused by one of the men putting gasoline in the hot water tank by mistake.

A Pall Bearer and Thief.

JAMESTOWN, N. D., Special Telegram. The funeral of Mrs. Carlos Warren occurred Jan. 22 last, D. L. Gray of this county, acting as pall bearer. That night sixty bushels of oats were stolen from Mr. Warren. Gray was immediately arrested on the charge of stealing the oats. His trial came off yesterday in the district court, and the jury found Gray guilty as charged.

Scandals in the Army.

BERLIN, Special.—A dispatch from Ulm, says that the Uncommissioned Military Officer Kobler has been sentenced to two years' imprisonment, and to degradation for drilling recruits clothed only in their shirts when in a fit of drunken wilfulness. Similar scandals are coming to light daily.

LORD LILTON'S LETTER.

WELL, Jack! and how have you got on today?"

"Oh, all right, my dear, just us usual."

"And is there any news?" continued the speaker, with a smile at her husband, who answered her as he had done nearly every day for the last twenty years when he returned from the city:

"News! why, what news should there be, Ellen?"

"None, of course; there is never any news in this place," the lady answered with a sigh.

It was a gentle sigh, however, for, despite the quiet of which she complained, hers was a happy lot, cast in a picturesque village, at a most convenient distance from town; nor was her life unbroken by pleasant vacations and agreeable incidents. Still, it was her custom to call the village of Narby very dull indeed, and wait for news every evening when she went to meet her husband on his return home.

This evening, then, on which my story opens was no exception to the rule, and usually the well-matched pair would at once glide into the chit-chat about home affairs; but tonight Jack, or as he was styled in the neighborhood, Mr. Cunningham, looked at his wife with a smile, adding:

"Come, Ellen; there is news for a wonder. Guess what it is?"

"News! then why did you say there was none, Jack?" cried Mrs. Cunningham.

"I did not say that there was none. I said, 'What news should there be?' You must confess I did," replied the gentleman.

"Oh, Jack, that is a quibble; but don't keep me in suspense. Tell me the news."

"You would certainly never guess, so I might as well tell you," he returned. "Well, then, Miss Thellon is going to be married to Mr. Dale!"

"Jack! Impossible!" exclaimed his wife, the color flashing over her face.

"All the world says so, and I am inclined to think that for once the world speaks correctly, my dear. And look! I declare here are the happy couple approaching!"

Mrs. Cunningham eagerly directed her gaze along the field-path they were traversing and saw a lady and gentleman approaching, apparently absorbed in conversation.

"It is a pity that we cannot offer our congratulations," remarked Mr. Cunningham; "but I suppose we must wait till the engagement is announced."

"Oh, hush!" whispered Mrs. Cunningham, as Miss Thellon and Mr. Dale were close upon them.

Now, Miss Thellon was the great lady of the place, and she looked the great lady; for she was of commanding presence, very handsome, wealthy, and possessed, besides, the charm of a musical voice. No wonder, then, that her neighbors, rich and poor, marveled that at two-and-thirty she should be still unmarried.

It was known that she had once been engaged to a baronet, who was almost a millionaire; but it was almost certain that she had been anxious to break off that engagement, and had done so, notwithstanding the deep disappointment of her suitor; and since that time, now several years since, no one in Narby had credited any rumor which got afloat as to her marriage till the present time, when folks declared she would marry Mr. Dale, the curate of the parish, a young man of five-and-twenty, well-born, clever and without a penny but his stipend.

Pretty Mary Crather heard the rumor, and had been broken-hearted ever since; the girl had cherished such hopes! and were they to end this way? Miss Crather's father was a man of independent means, but he had a numerous and expensive family, and Mary had buoyed up her hopes with the idea that her father would not refuse her hand to dear Arthur when he sued for it.

But he did not make his petition; and now she heard that he was engages to Miss Thellon! The fair girl's heart ached too keenly for her to bear up before the eyes of her friends and neighbors, so she shut herself up in her room on the plea of illness.

Indeed, by this time she felt ill enough, as she sat, consumed by sad musings, in her lonely chamber; and very bitter tears were coursing down her cheek at the moment when Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham met Miss Thellon and Mr. Dale in the meadow.

It was the time of primroses, and Miss Thellon carried in her hand a huge bouquet of these spring blossoms.

"Mr. Dale has gathered them for her," thought both Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham. And so, also, thought poor, pretty Mary Crather, who espied the group from her window, for her father's house was situated in his own grounds, beyond the village, and Mary's windows overlooked the meadow through which Miss Thellon and Arthur Dale were passing.

Ah! once Mary herself had walked along that path, and Arthur had offered her some primroses only ten days ago—only ten days! What had changed him so cruelly since then.

While Mary sat weeping at her window Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham were exchanging brief but courteous greetings with Miss Thellon and the curate, and then the husband and wife passed on their homeward way.

"I think it is really a case—he looked very much confused," remarked the lady, when they were out of earshot.

"I have another piece of news for you, my dear, was the gentleman's rejoinder. "Lord Lilton is actually coming home again."

"You don't say so! But is it true?" asked Mrs. Cunningham, with much interest.

"Oh, it is true enough! I have his letter here, in which he asks me to go up to the castle and see him, to-morrow in private. He has told no one that he is coming."

"I hope he will stay!" breathed Mrs. Cunningham, earnestly. "Do, show me his letter."

But the important letter could not be found.

"I must have left it on the table in my room at the office. How provoking!" exclaimed Mr. Cunningham. "Some of the clerks will be sure to find it."

But he was not right in this conjecture. Lord Lilton's letter was lying at that moment in the meadow just in Miss Thellon's path, and she it was who picked it up and turned it carelessly over before glancing within to see to whom it belonged, for it was no longer in its envelope.

Just then her heart was beating too fast and nervously for her to give much thought to a sheet of paper folded together and found by chance. For she had nerved herself to a great resolve, and now was the time to fulfill it.

Half a dozen times lately Mr. Dale had come to her and seemed on the eve of a proposal; his agitation was unmistakable; he had changed color like any girl; he had hinted that she was his best friend, yet he feared that he must leave her and all his friends. The thought caused him much unhappiness, but he had never got beyond this into plain speech, setting forth that he entreated her, great lady though she was, to accept his love.

"It is his want of wealth alone which keeps him silent—he adores the very ground I walk on," thought Miss Thellon, with a sigh.

Long ere this, however, she had considered the matter and had resolved on conferring supreme bliss on the penniless clergyman.

"Why should I not?" she asked herself. "He whom I loved forgot me and married another. The past is buried. Can I create a future for myself? Arthur Dale has a nature like fine gold, the people love him, his influence for good is felt all over the parish and his affection for me is making him ill and miserable. This cannot go on; he will resign his curacy and leave Narby if he sees no hope of winning me. It is for me therefore to put aside pride and old memories and to say a word which may give him courage to ask my hand. If I share my wealth with him I shall share two good actions—double its usefulness and make him happy. Yes, I will do the deed. Better so. Good-by to past dreams."

Her very fingers trembled so much that she could not open the paper she had picked up; indeed she was barely conscious that she held it.

"Life is full of sadness," breathed Mr. Dale, softly, "and why should I complain that I, too, find it so? Dear Miss Thellon, I—I must leave Narby."

"No—no," faltered the lady, "every one here—all—without exception, wish that you should stay."

"I dare not believe so," murmured the curate. "No—there is one person who desires that I should leave Narby without delay."

"That is not so," replied the agitated Miss Thellon.

Dearly as she believed herself to be loved by Mr. Dale, she yet found it difficult to say in plain words:

"Will you marry me?"

At this juncture Mr. Dale became more agitated than ever. He stood still upon the pathway, saying in pitiable confusion:

"I trust—I trust—that nothing I may say—nothing I may do in the future, may interrupt a friendship which has been so precious to me, and which, even though I may leave Narby, will be cherished in remembrance. I had something to say, Miss Thellon—something to confide to you—but—but I will write it. Farewell, now, for the moment. I shall think once more what is best to be done."

"Stay! stay a moment!" murmured Miss Thellon, and in great agitation she unfolded the paper she held in her hand, her eyes coming straight on some words scrawled on the bottom of the page:

Miss Thellon stared at the words as if fascinated. The words she would have uttered died on her lips. Mechanically she stretched out her hand when Mr. Dale took hers in farewell, and like a statue she remained on the field-path after he had left her.

She shivered, though it was a warm afternoon, and her rich dress amply shielded her from the spring air; next, her eyes devoured the few lines she held in her hand:

DEAR CUNNINGHAM, ran the missive—Unexpected events call me back to England: The lady I was to have married died on the eve of our wedding of a fever. The estate I bought over here in America turns out a failure, and as my tenant's lease of Lilton Castle has expired, I think I will run down and talk things over with you, and look over the place in private.

And I wish no one to be aware of my coming, so I will walk from the station through the fields to the castle. Expect me at 8 o'clock. Yours, L. LILTON.

"He is coming, he is coming back," ejaculated she. "And I thought I had forgotten. Come what may, I must see him again. Oh, I might have spoken irrevocable words. Did Providence save me?"

And again she shivered like an aspen leaf.

Soon after, Miss Thellon left the meadow, walking hurriedly like one distracted, as indeed she was.

"He said he would never again ask me to marry him; and he will keep his word," murmured she, catching her breath and hastening on. "It is now six years since he left me," she continued, speaking the words to the still country air to ease her bursting heart. "Six years? Oh! how foolish I was to flirt so persistently with the Duke of Porsleigh and still more to be willful enough to refuse to speak a word that might have saved our happiness, 'Choose between us now,' said Lilton: and I smiled a mocking smile, and would not utter a word. How could I tell what would fall upon me so suddenly? How could I see that Lilton was so maddened as he really was? Oh! that terrible moment when he spoke the fatal words which killed my joy. 'I shall never lose my love for you, Margaret—never quite forget all that might have been; but I see the truth now, and never again, I swear it, will I ask you to marry me! It is farewell.'"

"The next day he was gone. Then I heard that he had sailed for America —then that the castle was let for five years; next that he I loved so well through all this bitterness was on the eve of marriage. And now he is coming back, coming back."

All that night the proud, beautiful lady of Thellon Lodge lay dreaming wide awake of what "might have been"; all the following day denying herself to visitors, she remained in her own room. Toward 7 o'clock she put on a cloak and hat, without summoning her maid, stole softly down the broad staircase and out into the grounds through the conservatory.

"He will come through the fields—he will walk through the fields to the castle," she repeated to herself, hysterically.

The fields were deserted at this hour the soft twilight slowly creeping over the sky, as, Margaret Thellon, with uncontrollable emotion, caught the first view of a tall figure, his head bent down, walking along the path to the castle, hidden from sight by intervening trees.

"It is he; it is Lionel Lilton," she gasped.

Leaning against the rustic swing-gate, by which he must pass, she awaited him. Sad enough were the musings of the self-banished man. Bitterly enough did he regret the past; but he had believed his love a false coquette, and so he had left her and his native land together, taking a deep oath never to ask her again to be his bride.

But thoughts of her filled his soul all day. He had heard that she was still unwedded; perchance she had loved him after all. It was but now that he was free to turn his heart toward his old love; for new ties had bound him, but death had stepped in to free him. Then there was his oath, too terribly meant and spoken to be set aside.

Yes, he was very sad as he came in sight of his own castle.

Then he neared the stile, and some one with a smothered sob cried, softly, "Lionel, Lionel."

He looked up, he saw all the love shining out of her eyes, and he caught her in his arms, crying, "Margaret."

* * * * * * * *

"Oh, my rash oath! How are we to get over that, my darling?" said Lord Lilton, a good half hour later.

"You said that you would never again ask me to marry you," whispered Margaret; not that we might never get married. Lionel, if I asked you to tell me whether—whether I could make you happy, that would not be asking me to marry you, would it?"

"Ask me then, at once, Margaret, and I will answer you 'yes, a thousand times,'" said Lord Lilton, holding her to his heart.

And thus it was that after all Miss Thellon prepared joyfully for her wedding with her old love, Lord Lilton, instead of with Arthur Dale, the curate.

It was the next day after her happy re-engagement to her first lover that Miss Thellon received a note from Mr. Dale.

"Poor fellow; I'm sorry for him," she murmured as she opened the envelope. But soon a cry of joy escaped her, and a vivid flush overspread her face.

"How I have deceived myself," she whispered to herself. "Oh, Lionel, you came just in time. And so Mr. Dale loves Mary Crather, and dares not tell her so unless I give him the vacant living at Oakborough. And he has feared that I might resent the boldness of the demand. So that is what has made him so nervous, so unlike himself. And I mistook his agitation for love of me."

"Oh, I am so glad. For now that I have Lionel's love the world is all new to me. But I must fly to make Mary Crather as happy as myself. If I have my will she and I will be brides together."

Well, reader, this is how it happened that Lord and Lady Lilton and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Dale became inseparable friends, at which all the neighborhood wondered, and none more so than Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham.

Mr. Cunningham, being Lord Lilton's legal adviser, uttered no conjectures aloud, and Arthur Dale never knew how near he was of having the opportunity offered him of becoming the master of Thellon Lodge.

And so much the better. It would only have caused him embarrassment when, next year he was called on to baptize Lord Lilton's son and heir, and he would not have lost Mary for the wealth of the whole world.

Disappointing.

Almost every little community contains at least one person, usually a woman, who appears to take a morbid pleasure in attending funerals. She goes whether or not she was intimate, or even acquainted with the deceased person. It is enough for her that there is to be a funeral.

Such a woman lives in a little Connecticut town. She is known to all her neighbors as Aunt Hetty. In most respects she is like a good many other harmless and well-meaning people; but those who know her well say that she counts that week as lost in which there has been no funeral to attend.

She had just returned from one the other day, looking rather downcast, when a neighbor met her.

"Been to the funeral, Aunt Hetty?"

"Yes, I went."

"She wasn't a particular friend of yours, was she?"

"Oh no, I never spoke to her in my life."

I thought she might be a friend, you looked so sad over it."

"Well, truth is, I couldn't seem to enjoy it somehow; I don't know just what the trouble was, but there didn't seem to be no life to it."

Had His Nerve With Him.

A well-dressed man entered the office of a Bangor, Me., hotel one cold evening not long since and told the clerk that he was a stranger in the city, had no money and wanted a place to sleep. The clerk had pity for him, gave him a good room, and as the night was cold obtained an extra blanket or two for the bed. The clerk left the man, who in a few minutes rung a call. The clerk went to the room, and the man told him he could not sleep in the room, as he was accustomed to have a fire in his sleeping apartments. The clerk was almost struck dumb, but managed to recover sufficiently to tell the man he was too particular for that hotel, that he had better seek free lodging elsewhere, and so the bummer was turned out into the cold world.

A Cent and a Quarter.

A man went into the post office of a neighboring town recently, says the Canoe, and told the postmaster that he desired thirteen 2-cent stamps for a cent and a quarter. The postmaster refused to give them to him, stating that the cost would be 26 cents. The man persisted in getting his order, claiming that he could get them at any office for that amount, and even threatened the Government official if he continued to refuse him. Finally the postmaster ordered him out, but the man none daunted, took a cent and a 25-cent piece from his pocket, and laying them down on the counter, he received his stamps for a cent and a quarter. The postmaster was a little discomfited for a while, but now enjoys the joke as well as any one.

HELD A LIFE POSITION.

Collecting Money for the Grant Monument.

He had been fortunate in his pleading and the lady of the house had let him come into the kitchen fire and eat his breakfast.

"I feel my position keenly, madam," he said, in apologetic tones.

"O, don't mention it," she replied, kindly. "We all have our ups and downs, I suppose you have worked some time in your life?"

He looked at her reproachfully as she said these last words.

"Madam," he said, with pride, "until last month I held a position in New York. Yes, madam, a position which would have continued not only during my life, but during that of my children and grandchildren, if I had desired to retain it and transmit it to them."

"Why did you leave it?" she asked.

"Because madam, necessity compelled me to. The position was permanent, but the receipts were not equal to the disbursement incumbent upon my state of living."

"May I ask," she ventured, somewhat overcome by her evident mistake, "what your position was?"

"Certainly madam; being a New Yorker I was never ashamed of it. I was collector of funds for the completion of the Grant monument."

He resumed his meal, and the lady went over and sat down in the corner to think.—Nashville American.

WHAT CHINESE WOMEN DO.

Their Wonderful Embroidery Is as Perfect on One Side as the Other.

Chinese embroidery is the most remarkable which ever came from human fingers. Any lady who has ever attempted embroidery understands the difficulty of giving a neat appearance to her work only on one side of the article embroidered, but the Chinese embroider both sides, so that by turning the work it is impossible to detect a difference or to say which is the neater, and this, too, on material so thin that it seems impossible to work with it at all. One of the most peculiar features of a piece of Chinese fancy work is the hem with which they finish the cut edge.

American ladies fold down a flat hem and fasten it with a whip stitch; the Chinese roll the edge so as to make a cord, and then hold it in position by a blind stitch. The work is wonderfully delicate, and it is said to be done by Chinese women working at what we should consider starvation wages. Whole dresses are embroidered just as beautifully and with the same regard to detail as the smallest article of luxury or comfort, and the amount of work done on one of these large pieces of heavy silk is simply astounding to one not familiar with Chinese workmanship.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Sick Men.

One might smile, were it not so pitiable, to see the impatience with which strong, active man succumbs to the necessity of lying a few weeks on a bed of sickness; the petulance which men in vain try to smother, at pills and portions, in place of their favorite dish or drink or cigar; the many orders they give and countermand, in the same breath, to the wife and mother, who calmly accept all this as part of her woman lot, and who dare not, for the life of her smile at the fuss this caged lion is making because his rations are cut off for a few days.

This "being sick patiently" is a lesson we think man has yet to learn; but it is a good thing that "the lords of creation" are sometimes laid on the shelf awhile, that they may better appreciate the cheerful endurance with which the feeble wife-mother bears the household cares all the same—on the pillow where lies with her the newly born. Pain and weakness never interrupt her constant, careful forethought for her family. Husbands are too apt to take these everyday heroisms as matters of course. Therefore, we say again, it is well sometimes that their attention should be awakened to it, when the doctor has vetoed for them for a while the office and the counting room, and they are childishly frantic at gruel and closed blinds.—New York Ledger.

I was a boy of ten years. My father and family resided in New Brunswick, where the Digdigquash river met the ocean. But few settlers were there, and the forest primeval stood around the dwelling of those few. Bears were plenty, and, like all bears, fond of mutton, sometimes chasing the sheep even to the doors of the inhabitants. Many had been victims of the hunter's gun, yet their number apparently had not diminished.

One day my father and a neighbor named McLean were crossing the river in a log canoe, when they discovered a bear swimming in the same direction. Dexteriously plying their paddles they came between him and the place where he intended landing. This cut-off enraged the animal, which immediately made for the canoe, putting one paw on its low gunwale. A smart blow with the edge of a hardwood paddle made the fellow relinquish his grasp. After a good deal of hustling McLean managed to get hold of the bear's hind legs, holding on, each side of the stern of the canoe, father, at the same time, with his paddle, keeping the craft upright until the creature was drowned, and thus the game was secured. He was a large brute and an old offender.—Forest and Stream.

He Was Used to It.

"Pshaw," he said, "there's a great bit of foolish talk about that crank blowing up Russell Sage because he didn't give him a million dollars."

"You wouldn't like that sort of thing pretty much, would you?" inquired the man next to him.

"Like it? Of course not," he replied, "but I wouldn't be raising such a row about it. My wife blows me up every time I refuse to give her a dollar. I'm used to it."

AN ELEPHANT'S PALATE.

The Sense of Taste and Smell Remarkably Acute in Elephants.

An elephant's digestive functions are very rapid, and the animal, therefore, requires a large amount of fodder—six hundred pounds at least. In its wild state the elephant feeds heartily, but wastefully. It is careful in selecting the few forest trees which it likes for their bark or foliage. But it will tear down branches, and leave half of them untouched. It will strip off the bark from other trees and throw away a large portion.

As it is a nocturnal animal, it selects its trees by the senses of touch and smell. Its sense of smell is to indicate that a wild elephant can wind an enemy at a distance of a thousand yards, and the nerves of its trunk are so sensitive that the smallest substance can be discovered and picked up by its tiny proboscis.

An elephant's palate is very delicate, and the animal is whimsical in selecting or rejecting morsels of food. Sir Samuel W. Baker, in his "Wild Beasts and their Ways," tells an anecdote humorously illustrative of the whims of a tame elephant, belonging to the police of Dhubri.

This elephant was fed with rice and plantains. The stems of the plantains were split and cut into transverse sections, two feet in length. Three quarters of a pound of rice were placed within each tube of plantain stem. One day, while the elephant was being fed, a lady offered the animal a small sweet biscuit. It was taken in the trunk, and almost immediately thrown on the ground.

The mahout, or driver, thinking that the elephant had behaved rudely, picked up the biscuit and inserted it in a parcel of rice within a plantain stem. This was placed in the elephant's mouth, and at the very first crunch it showed its disgust by spitting out the whole mess. The small biscuit had disgusted the animal, and for several minutes it tried by its inserted trunk to rake out every atom from its tongue and throat.

Ready.

During the rebellion in Chile, one young girl had the chance of distinguishing herself at a moment of danger, and hesitated not an instant in embracing it. This was the daughter of Don Claudio Vicuna, and her father thus described the story of her heroism to the author of "Dark Days in Chile:"

One evening at six o'clock, during my absence my daughter was writing some letters for me at the table. Suddenly she heard a crash of broken glass, followed by a loud explosion at the street end of the room, and there had been so much bomb work of late that instinctively she guessed what had happened.

Before she could collect herself sufficiently to rush for the door, a second bomb was hurled in and rolled almost to her feet, providentially without exploding. This she picked up, and threw from the other window into the court below; then seeing that some brown paper was smouldering in a half-open box of rifle cartridges, she quickly dashed a large jug of water over it.

By this time the servants had rushed in, and succeeded in extinguishing the fire which had caught the curtains and furniture.

But my brave girl, remembering that I had gone out unarmed, took my revolver and started out alone to meet me on my way home, and it was not until I had been provided with the weapon that she told me what had happened.

Hidebound.

A correspondent requests us to republish our "remedy for hidebound." We have several remedies. Hidebound is a symptom, and not a disease of itself. If it is a horse it is always well to examine the sheath. Filth there very often causes a good deal of trouble, and not near the attention is given to the matter, as a rule, that it should receive. Wash it out with warm soft soap suds. But general treatment will likely be necessary. It is a good plan to give an alternative in such cases, and nothing of that character is better than powdered jimson seed, a tablespoonful every other day. In addition we would give a general medicine that would reach all the organs, such as May apple root, gentian, ginger, charcoal, sulphur, saltpeter, and queen of the meadow equal quantities, and copperas an eighth of quantity. Pulverize and mix. If worms are suspected add worm seed in equal quantity.—Western Rural.

A Novel Sort of Railway.

The novel bicycle railway about to be established between Mount Holly and Smithfield, N. J., will be the only one of the kind in the country. The road bed is a frame work resembling an ordinary board fence, on the top of which is a steel T rail, on which the grooved wheel of the bicycle runs. A brace run extends down on either side of the fence, on the end of which is a wheel that runs along the bottom board of the fence, and prevents the machine from overturning.

Each bicycle will carry one or two persons and the machines are easily propelled, as there is but little friction. The trip between the two places can be made in seven minutes, and as there is considerable travel each way daily it is the general belief that the road will be profitable.

Need No Clocks in Liberia.

Explorer Buttikoffer says that a clock is rarely seen in the farm houses of Liberia, and many of the town residents have no timepiece of any sort. He adds that there are few civilized countries where a timepiece can be dispensed with so conveniently. The sun rises at 6 a. m. and sets at 6 p. m. almost to the minute the year round, and at noon it is vertically overhead. Many of the people become so expert in telling time by the sun that they are rarely more than a quarter of an hour out of the way. In place of the alarm clocks they depend upon the crowing chanticleer to arouse them in they morning.—New York Sun.

CROOKSTON, MINN

THE little bill for injuries sustained presented by the men of the Baltimore is suggestive of the difference there may be between the value a man sets upon his own person and the views of others on the same subject.

No one will venture the assertion that the proposed tax on cigarettes will make them smell any worse than they do now, and they cannot be made cheaper to meet the enhanced price by filling them with viler compounds.

IT probably has not occurred to the Tennessee coal miners to invite Caterino Garza, at present supposed to be out of a job, to assume command of their forces. Interest flags and some steps ought to be taken at once.

MGR. GILBERT of Moorfield, Cardinal Moran of Sidney, N. S. W., and Bishop Clifton of Bristol are regarded as the men having the best chance of appointment as Cardinal Manning's successor in England. They are all home rulers, and considered "safe" on labor questions.

THE New York Tribune thinks that Minnesota, the first wheat state in the Union, may soon be among the first iron and steel producing states. The Tribune is nothing if not conservative. Minnesota is already among the first, and has hardly begun her development.

Two Chicago ladies who were alarmed by a burglar pursued him in one of the livliest foot races ever seen by the lake, and, with the aid of others, captured him. As there is an epidemic of burglarious operations there at present, it is proposed to put the ladies on the police force.

No one would ever have supposed that the last state of Sarah Althea Terry, the persecutor of Senator Sharon and the general blizzard of the California courts, could be worse than those that preceeded it. Yet as a lunatic and at large one is almost tempted to pity her at last.

SPAIN'S little king takes a daily drive in a carriage drawn by four mules, which are selected instead of horses because they are considered safer, and never get impatient, no matter how long the royal lad keeps them waiting when he leaves the carriage in the Padro to play about.

RIDER HAGGARD at one time wore a gold ring taken from the mummy of the Egyptian Queen Taia. In its place his finger now bears a signet-ring found with the coffin of Rameses the Great, the Pharaoh of the Oppression. Ditchingham Hall, his home in Norfolk, abounds in curious and sporting trophies.

THE British press is getting into a sad state of mind over the charge that its government has been assisting paupers and theives to emigrate to America. This is a better subject for investigation than hysterics, and the facts can be brought out without too much labor. Let it be looked into.

MR. J. B. WALKER is so confident that the problem of aerial navigation is on the brink of solution that he talks enthusiastically of starting in an air ship for Spain on the anniversary of the arrival of Chris. on these shores. The public is vastly more willing to bid Mr. Walker bon voyage than to take passage with him, which is about the way things were with Columbus when he set sail.

THE government has ordered the sale of the old ship Tallapoosa at auction. She is at Montevideo. Her reputation is made grand, gloomy and peculiar in the navy department by her mishaps, it being her regular custom to go aground or sink every year. If any South American power or person has a desire to secure a hoodoo of the most pronounced type, here is the chance.

WE notice some comments not altogether condemnatory of the performance of an organist in a way up New York church who played selections from "Cavaleria Rusticana" as a voluntary recently. Such inspiring airs as "Pop Goes the Weasel," "Johnny Get Your Gun," etc., may yet be used to successfully fill churches when the most esthetic sermons fail dismally. People will like what they understand and ought not to be blamed for so doing.

THE Mississippi River seems to be the favorite resort for crows. As soon as snow flies the river's banks are black with these sagacious birds seaching for food. They will perch on floating masses of ice, looking for pieces of offal and refuse which is dumped into the river. Crows fly a great distance. They are known to fly 80 miles from their roosts to the water and return before dark, making a total of 160 miles. But they don't seem to mind the distance. They have plenty of time.

DID QUITE RIGHT.

Mr. Deacon's Action in Shooting Mr. Abielle Generally Approved.

The Wronged Husband Arraigned and Held for Trial Without Bail.

CANNES, Feb. 20.—The shooting of M. Abeille by Mr. Deacon, the American gentleman, who discovered that the Frenchman was carrying on a liaison with Mrs. Deacon, continues to be the absorbing topic of conversation among the large American colony here, and though there are many expressions of regret that Mrs. Deacon should have brought such disgrace upon herself and her family, the consensus of opinion is that Mr. Deacon is deserving of all sympathy.

The whole Riviera is discussing the case, and from the information that reaches here it can be readily judged that Mr. Deacon's action in shooting his wife's paramour meets with general commendation.

Mr. Deacon, who surrendered to the police immediately after the shooting, was today examined by the magistrate in charge of the case. Mr. Deacon was calm and collected, and gave a very succinct account of the incidents that led up to the killing. Mr. Deacon added that it was not his intention to kill the man, but only to wound him.

Mr. Deacon asked the magistrate to admit him to bail. The magistrate declined to do so at once, but promised to consider the application. In the meantime Mr. Deacon would have to remain in prison.

Mrs. Deacon was then examined. She told a story which confirmed that of her husband. The Deacons last came from Cincinnati, Ohio.

LOVED TO FLIRT.

Mrs. Deacon was a most attractive woman. She dressed with exquisite taste and was the object of considerable attention upon the part of the men. Mrs. Deacon seemed to take pleasure in being thus courted, and seemed to delight to sun herself in the smiles of as many admirers as possible. Nobody, however, for a moment imagined that she was engaged in anything more than a little harmless flirtation, and the person who would have suggested that she could be unfaithful to her husband would have been looked upon as little short of a lunatic. It is true that recently it was whispered that M. Emile Abeille, who was also well known in society, was a little too attentive to Mrs. Deacon, but then it was added he was a great friend of Mr. Deacon, and that seemed to satisfy all.

M. Abeille was an attache of one of the French legations and a bachelor. He seemed to have plenty of money, and was a member of several prominent clubs. He had known the Deacons for a long time, and there is no knowledge how long his intimacy lasted.

Mr. Deacon it is expected will not long remain in the custody of the police. He is treated with the utmost consideration, and it is reported that the United States minister, Hon. Whitelaw Reid, has taken a personal interest in the case, and that he is doing everything possible for Mr. Deacon.

Mrs. Deacon, on the other hand, is not the recipient of much sympathy. She seems to have been left almost alone in her shame and sorrow.

Abeillé was formerly an attache of the French legation in Washington. The dead man is a brother of the deputy of the same name.

Mrs. Deacon attracted some attention a few years since by declining to be presented to the prince of Wales out of regard for her reputation.

A GIRL THE CAUSE.

A Georgia Man Threatened With Death by an Angry Brother.

DAWSON, Ga., Feb. 20.—Arch Riley settled here about a year ago and engaged in the livery business. Last Saturday two men named Lowry and Montgomery arrived here, who were introduced by Riley as his cousins. Riley began to sell out his possessions, but it was noticed that he was at all times closely watched by his "cousins."

At last Riley found a chance to notify a friend that he was under duress and needed relief. Then the two men were arrested for kidnaping. They claimed that Riley, who lived with them in Troy, N. Y., had ruined Montgomery's sister, who was Lowry's sister-in-law. They had tracked him to this place, and under pain of instant death, compelled him to proceed about disposing of his property in order to return with them and marry the girl.

The case of kidnaping was dismissed by Solicitor General Griggs, who declared that the only fault he had to find with the men was that they had not taken more vigorous measures.

A Quarrel's Fatal Ending.

MIDDLEBORO, Ky., Feb. 20.—Two men named Johnston and Barry, who had been enemies for some time, and who lived in Lee county, Virginia, it is reported met Wednesday and at once commenced a battle with rifles. Johnston was shot through the head, and the next shot took off the tip of his nose. After all this he took deliberate aim at Barry, fired, and the ball went through Barry's heart, killing him instantly. It is said that Johnston then took Barry's body some distance to his (Johnston's) home and hung it to a tree in front of his barn.

It Operated in St. Paul.

CHICAGO, Feb. 20.—Judgment by confession for $74,427 has been entered in the superior court against the National Subway company by an attorney representing claims for money loaned. The company's assets consist of a plant in this city worth about $30,000 and claims on contracts for laying electrical subways. No business has been done for two years. The company began work six years ago with a capitalization of $500,000, and executed large contracts in St. Paul, Minneapolis, St. Louis and Chicago. Its style of conduit was, however, superceded by a cheaper one, and it lost the business as the result.

GOVERNMENT DEFRAUDED.

A New Method to Obtain Illegal Witness Fees.

MOBILE, Ala., Feb. 20.—In the United States district court to-day R. F. Bradley, J. S. McKinney, N. H. Sherman and T. J. Overstreet were fined $160 and sentenced to three months in prison, and others were fined from $10 to $25 and sentenced t twenty days' imprisonment on a charge o conspiring to defraud the government.

All are from Clarke county, Ala. The two principals in the case were Bradly and McKinney. They each went before the United States commissioners several times, and under oath testified that they had seen the parties named above cutting timber off of government land, and witnesses were also furnished when the cases were brought before the court. No convictions followed because the parties swore each other out and it was impossible to make a case.

An investigation was set on foot, and it was ascertained that no timber had been cut and that there was no violation of law, it being simply a device to obtain witness fees and mileage for the parties entering into the conspiracy. The government officials are highly elated at the conviction of the men, as it is thought it will break up one of the worst practices known in this section by which the United States is defrauded out of large sums annually.

A Warehouse in Ruins.

ALEXANDRIA, Minn., Special, Feb. 20.—Fire was discovered early this morning in a large warehouse, the property of Robert McCrory. Among its contents was 1,200 bushels of wheat. As a result of the affair, which grew out of an old quarrel, Poole was instantly killed and Sapp is now in jail charged with murder.

A visit to the breeding stables of Peterson Bros. Warninger & Co. one day last week convinced us that Crookston has some trotters to be proud of. But we will let the boys tell what they have by quoting the following from their catalogue. First on their list we find the handsome stallion

He is a handsome gold bay, will make a horse about 16 hands high when matured, built on the Nutwood and Hambletonian model as can be seen by the tabulation of his pedigree. Has more crosses to Hambletonian 10 than is generally found. He has 3 crosses through Abdallah 15, 2 crosses through Volunteer 55, which are two of Hambletonian's 10 best sons, also one cross to Pilot Jr., 12 through his best producing daughter Miss Russel, the dam of Maud S. 2:08¾, Nutwood 2:18¾ and several others. Two crosses to Mambrino Chief, 11, the founder of the great Mambrino family, one through his best son Pambrino Patch, 58, the greatest brood mare sire the world has yet produced. Nor is this all. He has three crosses to Andrew Jackson, 4, through Abdallah's, 15, dam, Katie Darling. Andrew Jackson, the sire of Henry Clay, 8, and he the founder of the Clay family, also the sire of the dam of Geo. Wilkes, 2:22. Now we have sifted the pedigree of Ham Nut, which proves that he has blood and speed lines of all the most noted families that can be found in the history of the trotting horse.

Rose Valley Chief, 15481.

Foaled in 1883; bred by Commodore N. W. Kittson, St. Paul, Minn. He is standard and registered, No. 15481, under rule 6, which is the highest standing a horse can attain by breeding. Handsomely formed, jet black, which never fades, has the best of disposition, stands 15¾ hands high, well muscled, with feet and legs like iron. A very speedy, free and smooth gaited trotter. Can road ten or twelve miles an hour with ease. Has never been handled for speed except two months in his three-year-old form. Could then show quarters in 39 and 40 seconds. A careful examination of his pedigree will show blood and speed lines that are seldom equaled. His sire, Blackwood Sr., has a record of 2:22½ and is also the sire of six with records from 2:20½ 2:30. His first dam, Playmate, by Administrator, record 2:29½, is the sire of nine with records from 2:19 to 2:30, he by Hambletonian, 10, the sire of over forty with records of 2:30 or better, and the grandsire of Jay Eye See, 2:10, Maud S, 2:08¾, Sunol, 2:08¾, Palo Alto, 2:08¾, Arion, 2:10¾ as a two-year-old, and over one thousand others. Rose Valley Chief, by right of inheritance should beget speed out of any mare fairly well bred, and if not a trotter the foal would be certain to have style and action. We have one of Rose Valley Chief's get, a very nice looking young mare that can show a 2:50 gait and has never been trained.

? Gold Coin.

Light chestnut with long silver mane and tail. Will make a horse over 16 hands high and weigh about 1250 pounds when fully matured. A very high-headed, stylish mover with plenty of bone, muscle and ambition. Gold Coin has every individual characteristic that makes a trotter. His size, finish and way of going will please the most critical observer. He has shown speed enough to satisfy us that he will make a fast trotter if given an opportunity. Mr. Wilson, a trainer and driver who handled Gold Coin about six weeks in his two-year-old form, says that he will equal, if not surpass his sire's record of 2:23½ if properly handled.

Spring Styles for Ladies.

Our lady friends who wish to be properly and fashionably dressed would do well to glance over the monthly Fashion Letter in "La Mode de Paris," "Album des Modes," or "La Mode," the favorite fashion journals. This letter is one of the best on the subject with which it deals, explaining particularly the styles prevailing or coming in fashion. Ladies would do well to patronize these journals, which are not only reliable, but are now considered the standards of fashion wherever they are known. The Practical Lesson on Cutting given each month in "Album des Modes" and "La Mode de Paris" is intended to explain fully how to make the new styles as soon as they appear. The series of lessons has been produced under the direct supervision of Mr. A. McDowell, the inventor of the well-known Garment Drafting Machine, which has proved such a boon to thousands of dressmakers, and has made the cutting and perfect fitting of ladies' garments an easy task to all. "La mode" is a good family journal, price $1.50 a year. "La mode de Paris" and "Album des Modes" are intended for more general use. the subscription for each being $3.50 a year. To every subscriber for either of these journals who pays a year's subscription in advance will be given a Premium Book on "Dressmaking Simplified," valued at $5.00. Failing to obtain these journals from your news agent send for them direct to A. McDowell & Co., 4 West 14th Street, New York.

Ship your wheat to O. Tharaldson general agent of the Northwestern Farmers' Protective Association, at Duluth, and make from 4 to 7 cents a bushel. For further particulars as to membership, &c., inquire of L. K. Hassel, Grand Forks, N. D. [25-tf]

BELTRAMI ITEMS.

BELTRAMI, Feb. 20th, 1892.

Our state senator must be very anxious to secure his renomination when he writes to his town committee here not to let the grass grow under their feet so early in the season. Why, man alive, we don't expect any for two months yet.

B. F. Raieck, of Vineland, bought the largest bill of lumber that has been sold to any one party here for years.

A nephew of Oliver Dalrymple of North Dakota, has bought the Kimberly farm.

All of our people were sorry to learn of the sudden death of William Price on the 13th inst. The immediate cause was an injury he received while at his work about four years ago. He had been in the employ of the Great Northern R. R. Co. here for the past nine years. He was a loving husband, kind father, faithful employe and good citizen. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn his loss. The family have the heartfelt sympathy of all who know Mr. Price, and we shall miss his pleasant greetings for many a day. EDNA.

HUBBARD ITEMS.

HUBBARD, Feb. 20, 1892.

The winter term of school in district 5, closes March 3d.

The Angel of Death visited the fireside of Mr. and Mrs. T. Amunson last week and carried off their infant daughter.

The ladies sewing society of the Lutheran church raised $85 at their sale on Saturday last which they will use in furnishing the church.

Henry Simon has sold his half section of land to A. Thompson for $5,000. We believe he could have got more by holding it a while longer.

Hayes Bros. have given 100 bushels of wheat for the Russian sufferers and 20 bushels for the hail sufferers. We should be pleased to hear of others from this town following their example. NEILSVILLE.

Maple Bay Items.

Our village blacksmith is pounding iron to beat—well, the ring of his hammer can be heard far and near—but principally near, and the fame of his horse-shoeing reaches beyond our little hamlet even unto the four corners of the county.

Sam Furan, of Dugdale, has purchased 11 lots at Maple Bay. Sam says the iron will be laid on the Pelican branch of the Great Northern this spring. Looks as though Sam believes in showing his faith by his works.

The farmers are drawing their wood to the prairie as rapidly as possible. Lots of wood cut this winter, and the price has been somewhat better than usual. As a whole, the year of '91 has been a prosperous one for our farmers, especially such'as have woodlands and who have been fortunate enough to have dry wood for sale.

Our mill project seems to be lying dormant just at present—more's the pity—but your correspondent has hopes that it will be revived again and pushed to a successful issue. It could be if our farmers were only sufficiently alive to their best interests. The facts and figures have been so fully presented to every one in this locality that no one can excuse himself by saying that he knows nothing about it. The cost to no one could exceed $100 and there is no other investment offered them whereby they can hope to reap so rich returns. Your correspondent has no doubt but that there will be a flouring mill at Maple Bay at an early day, but whether the mill will be owned and controlled by the farmers remains for them to decide.

If you desire it I can send you regular communications in the future.

MAPLE BAY.

[Of course we desire it. We should be more than pleased to hear from the Bay every week.—ED. JOURNAL.]

BRAY, Minn., Feb. 22, 1892.

ED. JOURNAL:—I noticed in your last issue an item stating that I had purchased a new horse-power for my threshing outfit, and intended to finish up what threshing remained to be done in this vicinity. I started up for a trial on my brother's place on Friday last with poor success, and on Saturday morning we began again and everything progressed finely until about noon, when the driver, getting too warm on the power, and having his back turned to the pinion, proceeded to pull off his overcoat which caught in the cogs between the pinion and the bullring, breaking the latter in two places and cutting the coat badly. The threshing was finished at once.

C. P. SWANSON.

The Criterion Comedy Company, under the direct management of Mr. H. A. Morton, will open a week's engagement at the Grand Opera House, Monday, Feb. 29th. This company carries fifteen artists, and produces in its repertoire that large spectacular play, "The Sea of Ice." The scenery of the "spectacle"—it is practically that—is the best ever shown in a similar production and has been painted expressly for Mr. Morton the cost of the same being $1,250. It, with the mechanical effects—all of which work as smoothly as one would wish—make up the most acceptable display. Taken altogether the "Sea of Ice" is one of the very best specimens of the old time spectacular entertainment. Don't forget the date.

When H. G. Mitchell was in last he spoke rather discouragingly of the prospects of the mill project at the Bay, on account of the apathy of the farmers in relation to it. This is a matter of surprise to THE JOURNAL in view of the great importance of a mill to them. If a grist-mill was built and properly handled it would be worth many times its cost to each individual shareholder, even though he had to give his $100 as a bonus—which he does not. We hope that friend Mitchell and his co-workers will not get discouraged and let this matter drop, for the mill is a great necessity to that vicinity, and if they build it it will be a far more durable monument to them than would be a marble or granite monument. They should keep in view the many hardships and discouragements under which the farmers have labored and the fact that last year was somewhat easier, and keep pegging away. THE JOURNAL is anxious to see that mill built and built by the farmers, as it would be worth a mint of money to them. Keep the ball rolling, Mitch, and call on us for anything we can do for you in the good cause. We believe you would have a better show for success than ever before if you try it again this year.

Good Market For Oats

Having had a fine oat crop swept away by hail in few minutes time we are obliged to buy oats to supply our farm teams, and we will be glad to pay the highest market price to any who are owing us several years subscription. We shall need about 1000 bushels and will take them as fast as offered. Bring on your oats and get your receipts. [33-tf]

A despatch states that a silversmith in Monterey, Mexico, is engaged on a work in silver which when completed will be an exact reproduction of the Agricultural building now being built on the exposition grounds, Chicago. It will be eight feet wide, will contain a quantity of silver valued as bullion at $10,000, and when finished will be valued at $20,000.

It is now the intention to have in the fisheries building a restaurant devoted as far as possible to the exclusive serving of fish. Fish dinners, and fish, fresh and salt, served in every edible style, will be a popular feature, it is believed, and will give visitors an excellent opportunity to know the merits of fish for food.

THE MERCANTILE AGENCIES.

In a previous paper we discussed briefly the character, origin and history of the mercantile agency. We shall now consider some of the questions arising out of their peculiar relations to the public.

As stated, the business of a mercantile agency is to collect information relating to the credit, character, responsibility and reputation of merchants for the purpose of furnishing the information to subscribers. The most important question that has arisen relating to this kind of business is to what extent are the reports sent out by mercantile agencies privileged communications—that is, how far are such companies protected in giving information affecting the credit of business men from liability for damages in case of false statements.

As we shall use the term "privileged communication" frequently, let us understand its meaning. It is such a communication as is made in good faith, upon any subject in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, public or private, either legal, moral or social, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty. No legal liability attaches to such communications, unless malice be shown. It may first be said that the publication of false defamation by a mercantile agency to the world at large is not privileged. So that such publications affecting the credit of business men as are made by agencies and scattered broadcast, or put carelessly or indiscriminately before the public, are neither justified nor protected.

Agencies are not in the habit of being thus prodigal of their information, however. The most common form of giving information is that of publishing books of ratings, or weekly or daily sheets of business changes, failures, mortgages, judgments, etc., and furnishing the same to all their subscribers regularly. The question has arisen, is an agency liable for a false report on a merchant so made to a large number of subscribers, only a few of whom are interested in that merchant. There is no question, it may be said, of the right of the agency to furnish reports as privileged communications to persons known to be directly interested in that merchant, or to such as ask for a report on such merchant, but how about the communication going to hundreds of thousands of subscribers who are not interested, and do not ask for the information and do not need it. Refer to our definition of privileged communication. It must be made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty in the subject. I am a jobber in hardware. My agency sheet to-day tells me that my neighbor, who is a retail hatter, has failed. I have not sought nor can I find any use for the information. It is interesting gossip to me—nothing more. Suppose the report is false. Can the agency hide behind a "privileged communication" when brought to defend an action? The weight and majority of decisions deny the agency's right so to do, and such may be considered the law. The first case that arose was in Massachusetts. It was brought by a merchant against one Russell, who conducted the "Boston Mercantile Agency." Here Russell reported the incorrect and unjust information to only such subscribers as were interested in the merchant. The court held that the communication was privileged. (Billings vs. Russell, 8 Boston Law Reporter, 699.) The next was a New York case, which may be called the leading case on the subject. In this case one Church printed and furnished to merchants who had no immediate interest in the standing of the firm on which the report was made, but who wished the record for future reference. The information was in a printed book furnished to all who became subscribers to it. In this case the court held the communication not privilened, and the case has been several times reaffirmed in New York. (Taylor v. Church, 1 E. D. Smith 279.)

The court said that if the publication had been in answer to an inquiry from a merchant interested and had been nothing more than an answer to this application it would have been privileged, but as having been not only to such as sought information against that merchant, but to all its subscribers indiscriminately, it was not as to such other subscribers "privileged." This decision was upheld in New York in Ormsby v. Douglas (37 N. Y., 477.) In the case of Sunderlin v. Bradstreet (46 N. Y. 188) it was shown that Bradstreet published a false statement that a certain merchant had failed. The publication was in a weekly sheet furnished to all subscribers alike. It was held not privileged. The court said a communication is privileged when made in good faith, in answer to one having an interest in the information sought, and it will be privileged if volunteered, if the party to whom it has been made has an interest in it, and if the parties stand in such relation as to make it a reasonable duty, or at least proper, to give the information. The publication in this case to those not interested in it was officious and unauthorized and not privileged. The decisions of the federal circuit courts are in line with this decision. Erber v. Dun, 12 Feb. Rep. 526; Trussell v. Scarlett, 18 Fed. Rep., 214; Locke v. Bradstreet & Co., 22 Fed. Rep., 771. For other cases we might refer to King v. Patterson, 49 N. J. L., 417; Woodruff v. Bradstreet, 33 Hun. (N. Y.,) 16; Com. v. Stacey, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 617; Bradstreet v. Gill, 72 Texas, 115.

A further discussion of the subject may be found in our next paper.

World's Fair Notes.

A bill appropriating $300,000 for the state representation at the Exposition is now pending in the Iowa legislature. A preliminary appropriation of $50,000 was made at the last session. A bill for $300,000 is also pending in the New York legislature.

The province of Ontario, Canada, will make an extensive mineral exhibit. Canada has asked for a total of 100,000 square feet of space in the various buildings.

Charles Hansel, consulting engineer of the railroad and warehouse commission of Illinois, has been commissioned to promote the interests of the Fair in Europe by urging railway companies and manufacturers to become exhibitors. Mr. Hansel will sail for Europe soon, and expects to spend several months in Great Britain and on the continent.

In response to an invitation the Illinois Society Sons of the American Revolution has decided to furnish a company to participate in the parade incidental to the dedication exercises in October, 1892. The men will wear continental uniform.

The women of Nebraska have undertaken to furnish the hammer with which Mrs. Potter will drive the last nail in the Woman's Building when it is dedicated October 12 next. The nail, it will be remembered, will be furnished by the women of Montana, and will be an elaborate production, composed of gold, silver and copper. It is proposed that the hammer be made of the native woods of Nebraska and inlaid with gold, silver and pearl.

It is reported that it is the intention of the Government to establish at the Exposition grounds a complete post office, equal in capacity to that required by a city of 200,000 or more inhabitants, and to operate it, not only during the fair but for several months previous to the opening and after the closing. A government post office inspector is now on the grounds perfecting plans and estimates. It is believed that the number of exhibitors will be between 150,000 and 175,000. To these mail will be delivered hourly. Mails, sorted on the mail cars, will be dropped at the grounds from incoming trains whenever possible. At a rough estimate, this Exposition post office will require about 800 employes and entail an expense of about $250,000 on the part of the government.

Ceylon will conduct a tea-house on Midway Plaisance.

The Crown Prince of Italy, according to Director Higinbotham, is greatly interested in the Exposition, and says he will visit it.

Regulations for exhibitors in the several departments of the Exposition have been issued and can be obtained by all intending exhibitors by applying for them, either in person or by mail.

The enormous steel trusses to sustain the roof of the manufactures building are about to be erected. These trusses are the largest ever made for architectural purposes. They span 368 feet and rise to a height of 211 feet. The contract for them calls for about $460,000.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

(Last publication Feb. 25th, 1892.)

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of thirty-two and 49-100 dollars, interest now due upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Eugene Boulie and Melvina Boulie, his wife, mortgagors, to The Loan and Guarantee Company, of Hartford, Connecticut, mortgagee, bearing date the first day of August, 1890, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the twentieth day of August, 1890, at 3 o'clock p. m., in book 52 of mortgages, on page 393.

And whereas, the said The Loan and Guarantee Company, the mortgagee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage, and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of four hundred and ninety-six and 4-100 dollars (494.01), with interest on four hundred and eighty-one (481) dollars thereof, at the rate of seven per cent per annum from the sixth day of January, 1892, and whereas, the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The south half of the northwest quarter (s½ nw¼) and lots three (3) and four (4), all in Section two (2), of Town one hundred and forty-nine (149), of Range forty-two (42), in Polk County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston, in said county and State, on at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of four hundred ninety-six and 4-100 dollars ($496.04) and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five (25) dollars Attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

NEWSPAPER LAW.

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office, whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for the payment.
2. If any person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.
3. In suits for subscriptions, the suit may be instituted where the paper is published.
4. The Courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the post office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, while unpaid for, is prima facie evidence of intention to defraud.

Cranks' Money.

The political omnum gatherum in this city last week resolved in favor of more money. That was one great cry, the other topics mentioned being treated as of but subsidiary importance The convention recommended the convention recommended the consolidation of all political elements in advocacy of the demand that "money" shall be issued by the General Government in sufficient quantity to carry on the business of the country, and that such "money" shall be made full legal tender for the payment of all public and private debts. Apparently the movers and indorsers of the address fancied the latter provision is all that is necessary to make the "money" they ask for acceptable and good for its face, no matter in how large quantity it may be issued. They ought to know that the same thing has been tried many a time and oft, and with the uniform result of failure.

The people who are requested to indorse this cranky demand should be duly posted as to the real nature of the thing asked for.

1. The "money" proposed to be issued is not gold, silver, bank notes, or redeemable greenbacks, but simply "fiat paper." The demand is for a lot of bills, each of which bears on its face a statement to the effect, "This is a dollar," or fifty, or a hundred, or any other named denomination. The paper so inscribed is to be absolute "money," expected to be taken for what it is intrinsically worth, the same as if it were gold or silver.

2. There is no hint or intention or purpose to redeem any of this "money" in coin at the demand of the holder, or in any other valuable or tangible thing. the people who take it in exchange for the products of labor are expected to be satisfied with the assurance that "it is money," and ask no questions.

3. This "money" is to be a full legal tender on all public and private debts, but is it to be a legal tender on private debts that are expressly made payable in coin? If so, that would be a gross violation of contracts; and beyond all question the courts would hold the tender of all such irredeemable shinplasters to be void. The stuff could only be tendered in payment in the absence of specific contracts for payment in real money.

4. The moment the fiat bill passed the people would prepare to discount the "money" to be issued under its provisions. By the time the first $100,000,000 of it had been issued and loaned to the Alliance men the paper would not have a purchasing power of more than 50 cents on the dollar. When a billion of the stuff had been "loaned" to them its purchasing power would be down to 10, or perhaps not more than 5 cents. The fact that it was not redeemable at the will of the holder, or at any time, or in anything, would destroy its purchasing power. Then the now foolish Alliance cranks would be among the first to discover the fact of its shrinking value, and would refuse to sell their farm produce in exchange for the ukase fiat trash. They would insist on good money as a condition of parting with their property. They would be among the first to despise and repudiate the material issued at their express solicitation and for their especial relief. After having done a vast amount of mischief, causing untold commercial confusion and a complete financial panic, the whole wild scheme would evaporate with all the evil odor of an expiring polecat, and the discarded stuff might well be called thereafter not wildcat, but "polecat money."

The redemptionless stuff wanted by the Alliance would be a bad failure from the start, and grow worse with the laps of time after its issue. It would not pay old coin debts, to begin with, and that discrimination against it would soon take away a large part of its supposed purchasing power. It could only be handled at a decided discount at the best, and from that the credit of the stuff would go rapidly from bad to worse till very soon nobody would be willing to exchange labor or its products for for the paper which had no security behind it. Then the poor, silly, ignorant, deluded tools of the Alliance leaders would curse their own folly as bitterly as do the people in Argentina who were misled by a similar delusion, and are now loaded down with "money" which will not purchase anything they want to buy.

We clip the above from that usually sound, level-headed sheet, the Chicago Tribune, and we must express a feeling of surprise at the many false statements contained therein. It is very evident that the Tribune does not love the Alliance not even a little bit, but that does not justify that great sheet in losing its head and indulging in such gross misstatements. The statement that the farmers, as a rule, desire any such wildcat schemes to prevail is false on the face of it, whatever a few self-styled leaders in the alliance may say. The farmers demand an "honest dollar" and enough honest dollars to prevent a few speculators cornering the market at the expense of the balance of mankind, and this is right. They only demand that the government shall provide enough honest dollars to do the business of the country in an honest manner, and is there anything wrong with that? When a farmer demands that the government shall pursue such a course as shall give him an opportunity to obtain a sufficient amount with which to carry on his business, he at once becomes a scheming villain in the minds of some, an the extra amount of money he demands is called "cranks' money!" The Tribune is off its base in this matter. The farmers are THINKING and they are not going to be led into any wild schemes of designing sharpers. That they may be misled into a few errors is possible, but ridicule and abuse of them as a class will not avail to convince them of their mistakes, and it should never be indulged in. The farmers only demand such things as shall elevate them and their business, and the sooner the rest of mankind recognizes the fact the better for all concerned. We notice that some money sharks are fearfully worried just now lest some of their golden opportunities should pass away, and they are using every means at command to prevent this dire calamity. It is true that there are some designing persons just now trying to use the farmers as a stepping stone to political offices but it will not take them forever to locate them and give them their deserts. The farmer is awakening to his own interests, and while he may be a little bewildered at first and make some awkard moves, he is all right at core and will soon discover who are his friends and he will cleave to them, and don't you forget it!

The Postal Laws Respecting Newspapers.

About two years ago Messrs. George P. Rowell & Co., of New York, the publishers of Rowell's Newspaper Directory, and several other publications of great value to concerns wishing to do business with the newspapers, started a very unique weekly, both in form (12 mo.) and name (Printers' Ink).

It was a new idea all through, and like new ideas generally, required large capital, much experience and utmost push to make it go. The publishers had to educate people and make a market for the publication. To what extent they succeeded may be judged by the fact that its editions now exceed 80,000, and the business probably $200,000 per year. We doubt if any publication published once a week is read with more avidity. In fact we have seen it in many instances carefully preserved just as monthly magazines are preserved so highly is it valued.

Now, after allowing the publishers to proceed on these lines for several years, the Post-Office Department rules that the journal is not a legitimate newspaper and cannot be admitted to second-class rates, but as third-class matter.

The postage on the issue of January 13th, amounted at third-class rates to $805, besides the labor of attaching 80,500 stamps to that number of papers. At second-class rates the proper charge for postage would be $69.72, making a difference in the cost of mailing this one issue of $733.24. In other words about $3,627 a year as second-class matter, against $41,860 as third-class. In the meantime Rowell & Co. are paying this enormous sum under protest, until the Department can further consider the case.

Of course it is outrageous that the law is so ambiguous that the Post-Office authorities themselves can blunder in construing it, as they do according to the whim of the person in charge of the matter, and it ought to be changed immediately in justice to those compelled to suffer by such ambiguity.

If Printers' Ink is not a newspaper, then there is not a weekly newspaper in the country. We believe it at present the best read and most carefully preserved journal in existence, and entitled to all the privileges accorded any newspaper by the postal laws, and hope to see the wrong done the publishers righted without delay.

Washington and Lincoln.

In spite of superficial differences, many and striking, there was between Washington and Lincoln a really close and remarkable similarity. On the 12th of February this country, with a degree of unanimity that grows more marked year by year, celebrates the anniversary of the birth of him whom James Russell Lowell called "the first American." Only ten days later, in accordance with venerable and universal custom, we do honor to the memory of the man whom Henry Lee called "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen." It is well to study briefly the seeming contrasts and the essential resemblances of these two great Americans.

Everybody will quickly think of their dissimilarities. Washington was of patrician blood and breeding, or as nearly so as was possible on this hemisphere. Lincoln sprang from the plainest of plain people. Washington inherited wealth, Lincoln was born in poverty and nurtured in privation. Washington was reserved in manner. To the multitude he seemed dignified to the verge of coldness. Even in the society of intimate friends he was seldom vivacious, though no man ever had a warmer heart. Lincoln was full of the freemasonry of a nature that attracts congenial spirits and wins an affectionate following. He was the delight of village store loungers in youth as he was of listening audiences in mature life; yet aimless loungers and eager audiences alike were attracted by the subtle nobility of character, the inspiring loftiness of thought that shone in his quaint stories and his impassioned speeches. Washington was preeminently a man of ideas; though each acted grandly and thought deeply. Washington inclined toward conservatism, Lincoln toward radicalism; the one was Federalist by nature, the other was a Republican by instinct; though both were at once cautious and progressive. Washington's career was more complete, Lincoln's more intense and tragic. One lived to round out the measure of life's achievements, the other was cut off at the threshold of that peaceful administration which, had his life been spared, might have furnished the parallel to his great exemplar's work in binding up the nation's bleeding wounds.

Yet they were wonderfully like each other in many most significant respects, personally, historically and providentially. To begin with, that which was least important yet not unimportant, beauty were physically magnificent men tall, strong, impressive to the eye and memory to every beholder. Their stalwart frames had been made rugged by contact with nature in her rougher moods. They were woodsmen and travelers in the forests. They had slept many a night under the open sky. They knew how to ride, to climb, to swim and to shoot. Washington received the thanks of the Virginia House of Burgesses when but a youth, for his gallantry and skill in bringing back his pioneer warriors through 600 miles of wilderness, after Braddock's defeat. Lincoln, while yet in early manhood, saw service as a captain in the Blackhawk war.

They were essentially one in their love of liberty and hatred of oppression. Washington expressed the wish and the hope that means would be found for abolishing slavery by law. Lincoln's soul was stirred to the depths by the sight of black men and women driven in chain gangs to the auction block in New Orleans. They were one in their modesty and their patriotism. Both were impelled by the admiring confidence of their fellow citizens to assume the responsibilities of public trust. They were equally calm, resolute and serenely hopeful in the midst of difficulties, dangers and defeats. Their qualities shone brightest in darkest hours. They believed in the ultimate triumph of the right. They were forgiving to enemies and steadfast to friends. They were sagacious, far seeing, wise in counsel. They were consummate judges of human nature, and knew how to surround themselves in the cabinet and the field with great statesmen and great generals. They were always popular in the best sense.

Washinaton experienced the short-sighted hostility of some good men and the envious intrigues of many bad men. Readers of revolutionary and past revolutionary history are surprised to discover how ferociously he was assailed. Lincoln was derided and slandered even by men of his own party and his own administrative household.

Washington and Lincoln had this thing in unison: They were superlatively great in war and in peace. The genius for military affairs and for civil affairs is rarely found in a single person. General Butler said in Boston on the 12th inst. that Lincoln's military plans were shrewder than those of even the most distinguished commanders whom the President selected and upheld to carry on the war for the Union. This testimony is but confirmatory of a belief that has been steadily growing for a long time, and is sustained by the most recent developments of hitherto unpublished evidence. In like manner Washington's judgement on matters of statesmanship was again and again proven sounder, profounder than that of men about him who were justly renowned for acumen and learning as administrators, lawmakers or diplomats.

Well may a nation that owes to Washington and Lincoln in inestimable measure its liberty and unity celebrate their natal days, keeping their names in unfading remembrance from generation to generation.

The Difference.

New York Press.

The following letter has just been received by the Press:

To the Editor of the Press;

SIR—Please explain to me the difference between the Republican and Democratic doctrines. I will be a voter next week, and wish to do my duty at the next election.

FOREIGNER.

New York, Feb. 20, 1892.

The difference between the Republican and the Democratic position on questions of public policy is vital and fundamental. The two dominant issues now before the country are the tariff and the currency. Our correspondent declares that he desires to do his duty in the forthcoming Presidential election, and we assume that it is his purpose to become a patriotic American citizen in all that the term implies. This being the case, his attention is called first to the fact that the Republican party believes in protecting American industry. It believes that the United States should be industrially independent and well as politically independent; it aims to develop the manufactures of this country so that Americans shall buy the products they use from Americans; and it purposes, by means of a protective tariff, to secure the home market to American producers, create a constant demand for labor and assure to every American workingman, native or naturalized, steady employment with the highest wages possible under the most favorable industrial conditions. The policy of protection has been amply tested in American history, and it has never failed to increase the prosperity of the nation and the wages of the workers. Under the Republican McKinley law manufactures of all sorts have been stimulated, the demand for labor at a higher rate of wages has been increased and the prices of products have been diminished to the consumer.

The Democratic party believes in free trade. It would throw down the tariff barrier and place the American workingman in direct competition with the foreign toiler who receives less than half the American rate of wages. It decreases American manufactures and increases importations of foreign goods. The Democratic free wool bill now before Congress is framed, as Springer, the Democratic leader in the House proclaims, to bring about "a very heavy increase in the importation of woolens," thus displacing American woolens and lessening the demand for American labor. The Democracy is committed to the destruction of the McKinley law, the crippling of American industry and the reduction of wages of every laboring man in the United States.

Second only to the tariff is the currency question. The Republican party's doctrine, enunciated in its platforms, proclaimed by its President's maintained with unswerving fidelity throughout its history, is that the workingman's dollar shall always be worth 100 cents. The Republican doctrine demands that all dollars shall be equally good; that the value of the currency shall not fluctuate; that the coin or the bill that the laborer receives shall be worth exactly as much next Saturday night as it was last Saturday night. The Democracy believes in "cheap" money. The Democratic coinage measure now before Congress provides that the United States shall repeal the law that enables the holder of the paper dollar to exchange it for a gold dollar if he chooses. It provides for the unlimited coinage by the United States of dollars that are worth only seventy cents; and if it should become a law every wage worker in the country would be paid in dollars worth only 70 per cent of the dollar he gets now.

This is the difference between the parties on these great issues. The same difference extends through all their history. The Republican record is as glorious as the Democratic record is shameful. The Republican party was the foe of human slavery. The Democracy was its champion. The Republican party crushed the rebellion and saved the nation. Half the Democracy fought in arms for slavery and disunion; two-thirds of the other half antagonized the government and declared the war a failure. The Republican party carried through the Homestead law, the measures for specie resumption, the laws for pensioning wounded veterans against Democratic opposition. Its achievements for the past thirty-two years constitute the grandest portion of American history. It has fought persistently for a free vote and a fair count. In a majority of the States of the Union it has enacted secret ballot laws that secure the humblest voter from intimidation or interference. The Democracy has opposed these laws. The Republican party is essentially a party of progress. Republicanism is Americanism. Democracy is its opposite.

The difference between the two is such that no intelligent voter who wishes to do his duty in the next election can hesitate in his decision.

Our First Congress.

On the 4th day of March, 1789, the first Congress of the United States of America began its first session. Though we sometimes date our national existence from July 4th, 1776, when the Declaration of Independence was promulgated to the world, that was really only the establishment of a confederacy of independent states, for the single purpose of freeing themselves from the domination of the British crown. Under this compact the Revolutionary War was fought, but after peace was gained, the particular interests of the separate states began to clash, and it was evident that the general government needed larger powers if the country was to amount to anything among the peoples of the earth. Our existence as a consolidated and powerful nation may therefore properly be said to have begun in 1789. The history of no nation can show such a growth in 103 years. And but a small part of our 65,000,000 people would be here were it not for railroads, for the centre of the continent could not be populous without them, and the bulk of the population is in the central portion of the country. Foremost among these transportation systems is The Burlington which gives the Northwestern people quick and easy communication with the East, South and Southwest. For tickets, time tables, maps, etc., call on your nearest ticket agent, or address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Chief Walker Fearn, of the foreign affairs department of the Exposition, in a recent report to the director-general, says that the interest in the Exposition is already great and is rapidly increasing in nearly every foreign country. Foreign participation as shown by exhibits will be exceedingly complete and gratifying.

The jury in the case of Johnson vs. Olson brought in a verdict of $50 for plaintiff. In this case the plaintiff, an old man, sues his two sons to recover certain personal property, which, it was alleged, the defendants wrongfully and with malice prepense did distrain, sequester and appropriate to their own use against the statutes in such case made and provided and never mind the old man. The strong arm of the law and the 24 arms of the jury did award unto the old man the sum of $50.

The Ladies' Relief Corps ball at McKinnon's Hall on Thursday night was well attended and the receipts were close to $100. The net receipts will go far toward establishing a fine (and handsome) drum corps.

O. C. Bergland has been offered $20 per acre for his farm 7 miles southeast of the city. O. C. is not breaking his neck in his haste to accept. This farm is in Fairfax and is a good average sample of Fairfax farms.

Mr. R. Fairweather, of Euclid, was in town on Friday of last week. He is a little apprehensive that this kind of weather forebodes a late spring, although, he says, it is not impossible that it might thaw out and last.

Geo. Vine has sold his meat market on Robert street to Barnes & Slocum and will engage in buying cattle, hides and pelts. George was one of the best men in the business and we hope he will do well in his new avocation.

County Attorney Holston settles down to business in the court room again all the same as though he was not a recent delegate in the great St. Louis convention. Holston is bound to attend to business if he don't lay up a cent.

Miss Maud Strauser, a former Crookston girl is with the Criterion Company. Miss Maud is doing good work and will no doubt make a good actress. Her conception of the character of "Theodora," in Maud Muller is very good.

At the present prices for farm lands a person can buy a good home for a very little money. We think we hazard nothing in saying that double these prices will be asked for these same lands before another twelve-month rolls around. Now is the time to catch on while the lands are cheap.

See what Mr. Brown has to say about those horses in his letter elsewhere in this issue and then go and see the horses themselves to-morrow. Don't wait too long if you want a fine young team of mares as such horses don't have to wait long for sales.

Tom Bjoin expects to start for Iowa this evening after a carload of horses, some of which are for his own use and some for sale. Since renting to Larson, Carpenter & Co., T. H. Bjoin has his office in the corner room up stairs, adjoining Steenerson & Stanton.

The Criterion Comedy Co. opened the week at the grand in "Under the Gaslights." As the manager publicly stated that he had no particular use for newspapers he will hardly expect us to go into ecstacies over the performance. They play each night this week.

After trying it alone for awhile Barnes & Slocum have climbed into the ship again—partnership, and will hereafter be found at the old stand on Robert street ready to serve the people. They have bought Geo. Vine's meat market also and will try their hand at choice cuts.

The lad who took the horses from East Grand Forks was indicted by the Grand Jury on Monday afternoon and brought before Judge Baxter who appointed P. G. Falardeau to defend him and ordered him arraigned on Tuesday morning to plead. He is an innocent looking chicken.

The majority of those from whom we desired to hear in the matter of those subscriptions have reported, and yet there are a few from whom we have not heard. To those who have kindly reported we say "thanks," and to those who have neglected to do so we would ask if you think our patience will endure forever?

The Criterion Company filled the Grand Opera House on Monday and Tuesday evenings. The company seems to be as good as the average traveling troupe, and the fact that they play to crowded houses seems to indicate that people like their work. The performances are certainly worth the moderate prices charged.

The Press notes the arrival of at least a dozen men who will go into busines at Thief River Falls. Verily Polk County is coming to the front lively and the falls is no unimportant factor. That paper also says the Carl Kretzschmar's little baby boy was recently christened "Carl." That's what we told you his name would be, didn't we?

We are trying to arrange for publishing a story of thrilling interest, called "The Great Hesper," which we expect to issue in supplement form. Look out for it. Don't lend it to your neighbors; tell them to subscribe for themselves and get the story and lots of other good things. The story alone, in book form, would cost you the price of THE JOURNAL.

Engineer Jack Bunnell enjoyed the exercises at the grand opera house on Thursday night. Said the running of that engine over the trestle reminded him of the first engine ever run over the bridge into Grand Forks, which the same, Jack drove her—and was presented by the citizens of Grand Forks with a fine clock for his cab. Jack says that was a big day.

Ignatius Donnelly, president of the State Alliance, is answering the attack of Senator Hompe through the Fergus Falls Journal. Mr. Donnelly will publish a series of six letters, which promise to be very interesting reading, judging from the first one, which appears this week. The Journal will be sent to you during these letters for 25 cents. Address Journal, Fergus Falls, Minn.

At the Congregational church next Sunday, March 6th, there will be no sermon at the morning service, but as it is communion Sabbath, the first half hour will be devoted to a service of song, prayer and brief scripture exposition, followed by the admission of members and the Lord's Supper. Evening sermon, "What is Your Life?" All invited.

Dan Sully, who appeared before a Crookston audience for the first time on Thursday last, captured the crowd—and it was a crowd too, almost every seat being occupied. Dan takes the Irish character to perfection and there was not a stick in the whole business. As a whole the entertainment was highly enjoyed and the audience well pleased.

Here You Have It! Here You Have It!!

Mr. M. R. Brown writes THE JOURNAL from Ames, Iowa, under date of Feb. 27th as follows:

ED. JOURNAL: "I will be in Crookston on Friday, March 4th, with the best load of grade Norman mares that was ever in Polk County. They are from four to six years old, low down, blocky built and weigh from 1,400 to 1,700 pounds each. They are so large that 16 head fills the largest car closer than 18 head of ordinary horses does. I can say of this lot that it is as fine a lot as I ever shipped and that I can show them with pride, confident that they will suit the most particular."

One-Eyed Celebrities.

Lord Wolseley lost his eye in the Crimean War, and is yet, happily fitted for active duty and all the enjoyments of life; nor can it be doubted that if a big war broke out in which England was a principal, the hero of Tel-el-kebir would have a chance of showing how far he resembled Hannibal, the greatest of great captains, who, like our own immortal Nelson on another element, was one-eyed.

Rgain, the first Marquise Cornwallis, who capitulated to General George Washington at Yorktown, Virginia, 1783, and was afterwards Viceroy of Ireland and Governor-General of India lost his eye as an Eton boy, having been blinded by Shute Barrington, who died Bishop of Durham.

Within more recent times well-known men abound who, like Colonel Montagu, Lord Londesborough, and Mr. Egremont Lascelle, have, so to speak, left one of their eyes behind them on the shooting field, which is sometimes scarcely less dangerous than the battle-field.

The Parker ice gorge reached Pittsburg about daylight the other morning and caused a raise in the river of three feet in an hour, but the ice was badly broken by its long journey and it passed down the Ohio river without doing any damage.

An Important Difference.

To make it apparent to thousands, who think themselves ill, that they are not affected with any disease, but that the system simply needs cleansing, is to bring comfort home to their hearts, as a costive condition is easily cured by using Syrup of Figs. Manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co.

THE FARM AND FIELD.

RURAL READERS WILL BE INTERESTED IN THIS COLUMN.

The Advantages Farmers Would Derive From Keeping Book Accounts--Plowing Down Clover--The War With Weeds.

Farmers Should Keep Accounts.

Most farmers, however, seem to think it quite unnecessary and useless for them to keep accounts. They don't like to bother with books, and have "no head for figuring.' So, by a curious paradox, they try to keep their accounts in their heads. And a poor figure they sometimes cut when the end of the year comes, and people who do keep book accounts and know just what this farmer owes them present their "little bills" for payment. Men who keep no accounts are often disagreeably surprised, when the day of reckoning comes, to find how much they owe. They have forgotten this and forgotten that, and surely there must be some mistake about the other. But they have no means of knowing, except through the medium of an often treacherous memory, just where they stand.

Surely this is very absurd. A farmer should keep his accounts as systematically and accurately as any other business man. If all farmers did so, they would be far better off in the majority of cases because the keeping of careful accounts would lead to the habit of accuracy and system in all their operations, as well as enable them to know how they stood financially. It would not be advisable, in most cases for a farmer to keep an elaborate set of books. That would take more time and demand more skill than he usually has at command. Bookkeeping, as practiced in a great business house, is a science, demanding professional knowledge and training. On a very large farm, with varied industries and a large force of employes, such bookkeeping would be advisable. But the average farmer could get on very well with a quite simple method and a single book.

The first thing to do, in opening such a book, is to make out a complete inventory of the farm, stock, tools, etc., with a fair valuation on each item. It is a good plan to do this with a good deal of detail, and, so far as the stock is concerned, at least, to keep an account with each. In addition to this, all that the farmer owes and all that is due him should be put down. The mere stating of these items in black and white will often prove an "object lesson" of incalculable value. The inventory will be especially instructive, if accurately made.

A farmer who does this for the first time will no doubt be surprised—sometimes agreeably—at the value of his possessions, sometimes disagreeably, at the number and size of his debts. But, if "bitter to the taste," such a revelation may be sweet to the palate," if it lead to greater care in contracting obligations in the future. For the rest there should be an entry, either in parallel ledger-line columns on the same page, or on alternate pages, or, as some people prefer to keep so simple an account, in different parts of the book of every cash transaction, the income in one column, the outgo in the other, the footings, carefully proved, of each page being carried to the next.

At the end of the year, or of some shorter period, the difference between these two sides of the account will show the farmer whether he has been gaining or losing his cash transactions, while the record of property owned, fairly valued, and of good accounts, less the notes given, if any, and other debts, will reveal the financial condition of the farmer to himself, as no "guess work" or head calculation can possibly do.

But there are other accounts that that should be kept. At the beginning of the year we urged our readers to keep an account with every cow on the farm, testing her milk record constantly, in order to acertain whether she is netting her owner a gain or a loss. Extend the account to all the farm stock, and to each field or crop, so as to be able to strike a balance at any time and know whether to keep or sell the animal and whether the crop has paid.

"But all this will take a lot of time," Well, yes, it is open to that objection. But it may save a lot of trouble and loss—possibly bankruptcy itself. It is worth devoting "a lot of time" to labor that will keep one clear of debt, or help him to get out of it, and to learn how to make the most of his possessions.

Plowing Down Clover.

A writer in the Ohio Farmer has this to say about plowing down red clover as one of the cheapest and quickest methods of improving farm land:

"I very much doubt the cheapness of a good stand of clover plowed under. Let us consider the matter. A good crop of clover will make 1½ tons of hay, first crop, which if cut and cured in proper shape and time, is worth no less than $10. Then we would have a second crop which would make two bushels of seed, which at present quotations would bring about $9 more, making a total of $19 for the clover. Taking out $2 per acre for each cutting, would leave $15 net per acre.

We now have our hay in the barn, and we will first take out its feeding value and then return it to the soil. One and one-half tons of clover rotted down will make a very light dressing for one acre.

I remember of a field of five acres of clover plowed down in June, in full blossom, and fifteen acres in the same field sown to oats. The clover field was harrowed to keep down weeds, and the whole was sown to wheat in the fall. I kept close watch of the field to see the benefit of the clover, but there was no perceptible difference to be seen. I think there was no difference in favor of the clover, and I never could see any benefit on that piece of ground over the other in years afterward. Clover is king on clay soil. No intelligent farmer will deny that. But if a crop of clover is taken from the land and the field plowed before the clover is all killed out, the poorest soils never fail to raise good crops. The clover roots penetrate and loosen the soil and the decaying roots the following season furnish nitrogen and leave the soil porous so that other crops can send out roots. This is the secret of raising big crops. It is not that the soil is too poor, oftentimes, that crops fail, but the ground is so hard that roots cannot penetrate, hence small top growth. The tops of any plant always correspond with its roots. I have seen fair crops of oats plowed down and the ground sowed to wheat, where the oats would have brought more in dollars and cents than the wheat the following season. I have also seen heavy crops of sowed corn plowed down with no apparent results; in fact such crops seem to be a detriment to a wheat crop if the fall should be a dry one. The old Pennsylvania way of raising wheat was to plow down clover, but when that is practiced you must remember that you take two seasons to get one crop. I have seen some crops of clover plowed down and noted results, and have plowed fields with the clover taken off, and have not yet concluded that plowing in clover is any perceptible benefit. You will always find where clover is raised and fed out on the farm that such farms are gaining in fertility. Clover hay is relished by all stock; it will fatten sheep, will make cows give milk as in summer, and is even relished by poultry if chopped up fine and boiling water poured over it.

Use of the Steam Plow.

It must not be thought that the absence of steam plows on American farms is any evidence of a want of enterprise on the part of the farmers. There are many reasons why these labor-saving machines are not so widely used as they are in Europe. First, our farms are smaller, the owners are the farmers themselves and are rarely possessed of any more capital than is sufficient barely to stock the farms, while in Europe the farms are much larger and the owners are wealthy. Here our country roads entirely forbid the transport of the heavy machines and the bridges are too weak to bear the weight. If it had been otherwise, there might have been instances where a steam-plowing outfit could have done good service, as is done elsewhere, by going from farm to farm, as the thrashing machines do.

Enterprise is not wanting, but opportunity. There are several of these machines at work in the South, and in one case the owner is a farmer who has no more than 300 acres of land. But he has a thrashing machine which employs an engine, and this he uses in the Spring for plowing his own and the neighbors' farms. This is an evidence that enterprise is not altogether absent from the native Southerners, and shows to some extent the change that is taking place in the agriculture of the South. In South Carolina, on one of the rice plantations near Georgetown, there is a steamplowing outfit at work which is furnished with electric lights, so that the work may go on continually night and day. Another of the same kind is working in California, by which 160 acres are plowed in the twenty-four hours at a cost of only 12½ cents per acre. No doubt as such facts become known there will be more of this profitable work done and the cost of the crops lessened.

Farmers Should Understand Chemistry.

If there is one science more than another of which the elements at least should be well understood by farmers, and especially by those who undertake the instruction of farmers, it is chemistry. This science to those most important parts of farm work, the fertilizing of the soil and the feeding of animals. And these cannot be undertaken with any degree of efficiency without some knowledge of chemistry. And here is an instance of the truth in this.

A writer and lecturer on dairy subjects says the woody fibre of straw and cornstalks cannot be made food by any process. But by a very commonly-used process starch is made from such woody fibre as sawdust, and the starch is then converted into sugar, of which a large quantity is put off upon the public in the form of syrup as glucose, and this is quite as nutritious as other sugar. Moreover, this same person is a strong advocate of the practice of ensilage, of which he cannot say too much in regard to its value as increasing the digestibility and nutritive value of the fodder. There is no question that by this process the woody fiber of the corn is changed into digestible food to such an extent as to pay all the cost of putting the fodder into the silo, where it undergoes such a process of fermentation as to convert some of the cellulose into nutritious fatty substances that increase the feeding value of the cornstalks. A very small acquaintance with the elements of chemistry would have prevented such a mistake as this from being given to farmers who are thus misled by this class of teachers.

The War With Weeds.

Careless farming says a writer in the Ohio Practical Farmer allows weeds to deplete the soil more than the cereals planted. Fence-corners and byplaces are too often neglected in cultivated fields, from whence the seeds are scattered. I have a notion that weeds can be eradicated cheaply by keeping a farm well stocked with sheep. During my 40 years' experience and practice on 500 acres of land it was a rare sight to see weeds growing among the crops. Sheep are great scavengers. Briars, alders, and most annual weeds can be kept in check and finally eradicated by 'sheeping.' Biennials and perennials must be treated in a more careful manner. Never be in too much of a hurry to stop and cut a single weed. After 'sheeping' thoroughly I use a sharp hoe to complete the work.

"When the sheep cannot have access to the fence-corners I mow them twice a year, and most forms of weeds disappear; those which do not are spudded or cut off as mentioned above. I bought 80 acres of weedy land adjoining me and in two years a weed could scarcely be found. The cheapest help a farmer can have is a flock of sheep. I carried on a large farm; had from five to ten hands during summer. I kept one roustabout man to watch the weeds and to do anything else requiring odd work.

"The worst weeds that we have to contend with are pigeon-weed and rag-weed. Sheep will kill rag-weed if pastured when young and tender on short range."

HIDING PLACES FOR MONEY.

Odd Places in Which Eccentric Persons and Criminals Secrete Their Treasures.

"It is hard to tell where eccentric people will not hide money," said a detective the other day to a London Tit-Bits man. "I was once sent for to find the money of a man who had suddenly died and left no visible trace of his wealth. The family had made a careful, systematic search before I arrived. I learned that he was not miserly, and inferred that he had not used any of those complicated methods of concealment which are one of the miser's chief characteristics. I found that his business took him frequently from home, and that he had formerly been a sailor. I asked what room he usually slept in and they said: 'All over the house,' adding that they had fully examined every place in which he was ever known to be. I asked about his clothing and insisted upon seeing it. Some one brought his garments in at last, and very shabby looking they were. I went over them without success until my eye caught the binding. 'He always kept them well bound,' said his wife. 'Sailors are gook sewers.' The binding was wide, but we soon had it off, and there we found, folded lengthwise, and protected with oil-silk, fourteen £100 notes and a score of "fivers." A systematic search is often not as good as a shrewd guess by an inexperienced person. Yes, there are men who conceal wealth away from home. Criminals almost always do it. Middle-aged countrymen do it, but when they get old they are almost sure to hide it near the spot where they pass most of their time. I have found money in the covers of an old family bible, behind mirrors, in the bored out legs of chairs, behind cupboards nailed tightly to the wall, in false ceilings, balusters, pincushions, in the lining of old hats, in clocks, stoves, and bronze images, in vases with the bottoms covered inside with plaster of paris, in black bottles weighted with mercury and marked 'poison,' in canes, shoes, and in vest-linings, in potted salmon tins and tin canisters, in cracked walls covered with wall-paper, in all sorts of bedding and upholstery, and in almost every conceivable place."

VINDICTIVE WILLS.

Testators Who Have Left Harmless but Spiteful Comments.

At one time it was a common thing for a testator to leave a sting behind him, even if he could bequeath nothing else. Some striking bequests of this description were made by a son of Lady Mary Wortley Montague in a witty will, the blank spaces of which can be filled up by anybody at all acquainted with the eminent men of the period. "To Sir Francis—I give one word of mine, because," so runs the document, "he has never had the good fortune to keep his own. To sir Robert——I leave my political opinions, never doubting he can well turn them into cash who has always found such an excellent market in which to change his own. My cast-off habit of swearing oaths I give to Sir Leopold D—— in consideration that no oaths have ever been able to find him yet." This posthumous political animosity is not so reprehensible, however, as the personal hatred which must have prompted a testator to leave a man and his wife a small sum of money to buy for each a halter, for fear the Sheriff's should not be provided. Such bequests as these are too clear. It would have been better, perhaps, if the testators had sought a little of the obscurity of language which was the aim of a celebrated lawyer who is said to have intentionally drawn his will in ambiguous term in order that it might, by giving rise to litigation, lead to an authoritative settlement of some very fine moot points which had often vexed him during his lifetime.—From the Irish Times.

THE MEANEST MAN.

He Read the Paper and Crept Out of Paying for It.

A well-known gentleman in this city moved into a house that had been previously occupied by another gentleman who was a subscriber to one of the evening papers, says the Chattanooga Times. The carrier of course continued leaving the paper for a space of a year, never having been notified of the change. The collector recently went around to collect for the paper, the bill being made out in the name of the gentleman who had subscribed. When the collector presented the bill the gentleman of the house said:

"Why, my dear sir, that man has not lived here for over a year. You are at the wrong house."

"Well has not the carrier been leaving you a copy of the paper all the time?"

"Yes, sir. But I did not subscribe, and I told the boy to quit leaving it. But he never did so."

"You have received the paper every day, haven't you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then you ought to pay for it."

"Well excuse me for a moment," and the gentleman went into the house. Returning in a moment he lugged out a stack of newspapers half as tall as himself. Here are your papers, sir; I have no use for them."

He had read them and carefully filed them away until the bill should be presented.

The collector sent a transfer-wagon to haul away a year's accumulation of papers, the pay for which he failed to get, because one man returned them and the other man never received them.

Evidence to the Contrary.

Photographer—But why do you wish to be taken with your watch in one hand and your pocketbook in the other?

Mr. Bascom—I'm a-goin' to send this picter to my wife, young man; when I left home she said she'd bet I'd be bunkoed out o' everythin' I had before I'd be'n in the city two hours.—Puck.

HE HAD A JELLY BACK.

Awfully Plain, Too, When You Understand It.

He was a strapping big dude, as dudes go, and he hung by the strap in the "L" train, one afternoon. Near him stood a dear, dainty woman.

Swish!—the car gave a yank, and he brushed close against her arm. The dear angel blushed furiously, telling her friend all about it, afterwards thus:

"He brushed up against me, and, do you know, I experienced a sensation something akin to the crackling of thorns under a pot. His back seemed to give way in the most amazing manner. I had always heard that dudes were weak and all that, but I did suppose they had a little back bone anyway."

"What happened next?"

"The car gave another yank a block or so further on, and, horrors! there was that awful feeling again. His back just glided up and down like—like a jelly cake. I never felt more dreadful in my life."

"You should have moved."

"The car was too crowded. Then, when the next jar came, I concluded that it was time to get out. I kept thinking about it all day. At night I asked my husband what it meant."

She smiled sweetly, as though recalling some pleasant surprise.

"And he said?"

"Oh, he merely yawned and said it was a common thing with dudes. If ever I get next to a man with a crackly back again I shall understand all."

"Give us the gag."

"Why, you see, the dude—pardon me—was wearing something that was displaced."

"And that was?"

"A porous plaster."

MARRIAGE BY PROXY.

A curious custom among the rulers of the old world is marriage by proxy. For instance, Francis II, the ex-King of Naples was wedded by proxy, in 1859, to Maria, a duchess of Bavaria. Of course, the marriage by proxy goes no further than the ceremony. Exactly why it should be done at all is not clear by past or present history, unless to save the prince the trouble of going after his wife and giving her a decent excuse for coming to him. In the case of Francis, he had never seen Maria, and their first interview is said to have been attended with considerable disappointment. In fact, if the young man had not already been married by proxy he would probably have never married the lady at all.

Leopold, King of the Belgians, also married his Austrian wife by proxy, but he knew what he was about, having met her a month previous during a visit to Vienna. At the time of the marriage he was but a mere stripling, and his wife was chosen for him by his royal parents, who, however, gave him the privilege of seeing her in advance. On his return from Vienna, Leopold was sick for about a week, and, according to general report, not lovesick, at least with his appointed wife. Their married life, however, has not been unhappy, so far as the world knows, except through the extraordinary misfortunes which made Charlotta and Stephanie widows of the house of Austria.—Drake's Magazine.

THERE WAS ALUM IN IT.

It Cost G. McCulloch $40 to Sell Unlabeled Alum Baking Powder.

The case of G. McCulloch, the clerk for the Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company, who was charged with selling alum baking powder in violation of the state food law, was called in the police court this morning. He changed his plea to guilty, his attorney, Chas. S. Jelly, pleading in extenuation that the company had changed its local manager and that the present management knew nothing of the law. Judge Elliot imposed a fine of $40.—Minneapolis Journal, Feb. 4, 1892.

G. McCulloch, of the Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, was arrested Wednesday for selling a preparation intended to be used as a baking powder, and which, although it contained alum, was not so labeled as provided by the state food law.

Baking Powder Legislation.

The use of alum and ammonia in baking powders has been carried to such an enormous extent by unscrupulous manufacturers, anxious either to swell their profits or to carter to the demand for cheap goods, regardless of the stomach of the consumer, that bills have been introduced during the past year in the leglislatures of many states, among which are New York, Minnesota, Illinois, Georgia, Florida, etc., requiring such inferior articles to be distinctly labeled. Boards of Health and food Commissions in many cities and states have been occupied with the same problem, and in many instances have published lists of powders containing alum or ammonia, so that the public may avoid them. Following is a partial list of such powders: Royal, Calumet, Forest City, Bon Bon, Chicago Yeast, Snow Ball, Kenton and Pearl.

About the Garden of Eden.

"Papa, where was the Garden of Eden?"

"Well, Maud, it is supposed to have been somewhere in Asia."

"I knew it couldn't have been in Oregon."

"Why so?"

"Well, you know they say it rains out there thirteen months in the year?"

"Yes."

"Well, Adam was made out of dust, wasn't he?"

"Yes."

"Then, if he had been made in Oregon, his name wouldn't have been Adam."

"Why not?"

"Because it woul have been 'mud.'"

"Oh!"—Philadelphia Press.

COPYRIGHT 1891

Nothing can be said in favor of the best medicine in the world that may not be said of the most worthless. In one case, it's true; in the other, it isn't;—but how can you distinguish?

Judge by what is done. There's only one blood-purifier that's guaranteed. It's Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery—and this is what is done with it; if it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, you get your money back. Isn't it likely to be the best?

All the year round, as well at one time as another, it cleanses and purifies the system. All blood-poisons must go. For Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Scrofula, Salt-rheum, Tetter, Erysipelas, or any blood-taint or disorder, it is an unequaled remedy.

And nothing else is "just as good." It may be better—for the dealer. But he isn't the one that's to be helped.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

My little girl suffered for three years from a large Abscess on her hip, the result of a fall and dislocation. The Abscess was large, with six openings, all of which discharged puss. I was induced by friends to give her S. S. S., and by the time the fifth bottle was finished the Abscess was entirely healed, and the child was well and happy.—Mrs. J. A. Wiegner, Slatington, Pa.

I had three little girls who were attacked with obstinate ECZEMA or Blood Trouble, which at first resembled heat, but soon grew to yellow blisters, some of them quite large. One of the children died from the effects of it, but we got Swift's Specific and gave to the other two, and they soon got well. S. S. S. forced out the poison promptly. The cure was wonderful.—J. D. THE LOST STAR.

A litt'e star, a single spark,
Had lost its way among the clouds,
And, weeping shed his tiny light
Adown the mist of rainy shrouds.
He saw no pathway in the dark;
He turned to left, he turned to right,
Along the highway of the night.

A gentle wind, from off the sea
Came whispering up the distant vales,
And told a story to the rain.
The vapors spread their humid sails;
And proudly traveled to the lea.
Glad little star, with might and main
He joins his glittering host again.

MY FAIR CLIENT.

It was just such a day as this two years ago, and a year or so after my call to the Bar, that my mysterious little visitor came; and now she seems to have vanished into thin air I was sitting, as I am now, smoking a cigarette, and I believe I was wondering which of my lady friends would be most pleased to entertain me at 5 o'clock tea, and whether my clients would ever be numerous enough to prevent me from paying calls at all. There was a light in my clerk's eye as he showed her in, as if he did not regard her as a client at all. He saw the matter differently after I handed him his fee, and reminded him that the Attorney General had laid down the rule that in non-contentious business there is nothing in the nature of professional etiquette to prevent a barrister from assisting his clients without the intervention of a solicitor.

She looked very much more cool and collected than I did, I am sure, as she walked up to my table and placed on it a little jingling envelope, saying, with a half smile: "One pound three and sixpence—that's right, is it not?" I simply gasped. "What for?" forgetting all about the Attorney General's edict, and thinking that a dear little female lunatic in the smartest of hats and frocks must have escaped from its asylum on purpose to visit me. I may add that she was unmistakably a lady. I have an eye for detail, and my first glance embraced her natty little patent leather boots, her gloves, and general etceteras.

"What for?" she echoed, and then went on quickly: "Why, for your advice, of course. You are Mr. Fairbairn, are you not?" (I bowed.) "I hear that you are very clever" (I blushed), "and I want your help." (I smiled encouragingly.) "You need not try to find out who told me to come to you, for she won't tell you" (the assistance of the fair sex in advertising one's capabilities is sometimes not to be despised); "and you need not know my name, for it has nothing to do with it."

"With what?" I asked, as she paused for breath.

"With my case."

"Will you explain your case to me?" I said, hoping the explanation would be as long as possible.

"I've left all the papers behind," she said, "but they were of no use to Sir Humphrey Raby or Mr. Wigsby when they gave their opinion, so I thought they would be of none to you. My solicitor took me to see them," she added, looking down and sighing as she recalled what no doubt was a painful and disappointing interview, "and they were snuffy, dull old gentlemen, and I've come to you because I was told you were very clever and original and had brilliant ideas." I blushed again. "I have their opinion, as they call it, in my pocket." As the names mentioned were those of the two most eminent leaders practicing at the Chancery Bar, and as my client seemed to think that my original and brilliant intellect would instruct me in the facts of her case without her assistance or the usual sources of information, I held out my hand deprecatingly for the opinion, and read it through a couple of times before I wholly mastered its contents. It ran as follows:

"Opinion: On the instructions before us we can advise the residuary legatee that she has any grounds either for upsetting the will on the grounds of the lunacy of the testator, and so taking as next of kin, or that she can accept what the testator leaves her and refuse his conditions. He bequeaths to her the bulk of his fortune, which we understand to be considerable, on condition that she accepts it within a year of the date of his death, and that before accepting it she marries a husband. To this is appended the further condition that this shall be some other person than a certain Capt. Henry Scott-Shackleford, to whom the testator seems to have borne a particular dislike. Should she fail to accept the property on these conditions it is to be distributed among various charitable institutions named by the testator. It is suggested to us that the will must be absolutely void, on the ground that this condition is in restraint of marriage and so contrary to public policy; we are aware of no authority which would support such a contention, and need hardly point out to the young lady that she is offered every inducement to marry at once, and that her choice of a husband ranges over the whole unmarried bachelor population of the world, to say nothing of the widowers and divorced husbands, with the one solitary exception named. At all events, it is our opinion that the residuary legatee must marry someone, not being the individual specified, before the 15th of May next, if she intends to accept the property."

"Here followed the signatures of the two great luminaries, and I felt I must bow to their authority.

"I'm a common law man," I said, as I handed her back the document, "and they are very eminent chancery counsel."

"Oh," she said, "does that mean that you are cleverer than they?"

"Not precisely," I answered modestly.

"But chancery barristers are always prosy and inky," she said. "I have a cousin who is one, and he and all his friends are simply horrid. They may be very intellectual, of course, but I call them stupid."

"Perhaps," I said, "on this side of the Strand we see more of the practical things of life."

She nodded with a hopeful smile, and I felt I ought to say something else.

"So you don't want to marry," I said.

"Don't want to?" she cried. "Why, it's just that; I do!"

"Then why don't you? Under the circumstances you would be justified in asking—in hinting, at all events—if no one proposes to you."

"But they do," she said; "they propose in shoals, and have done so for months. Only the other day a girl said to me that she could not stay with the Blankneys for the Bicester ball because a man would be in the house whom she had refused. 'Bless you,' I said to her, 'if I were to refuse invitations to all houses where I should meet men who had asked me to marry them I should stop at home for the rest of my life!'"

"Then you cannot fall in love?" I said.

"I am in love—that's just it."

"Won't he propose?"

"He proposed years ago."

"Then why don't you"—I felt myself getting puzzled, but she interrupted me.

"I don't see that you are so clever," she said. "Can't you understand that my horrid old uncle has done his best to prevent me from ever marrying the only man that I ever cared for in my whole life? How would you like someone to leave you money on condition you would not marry your Euphemia?" Her voice began to shake, and there were tears in her blue eyes.

"Are you a friend of Euphemia?" I said gently, to divert her thoughts for a moment. I really never blushed so often in an afternoon before or since.

"No," she answered with a quick smile, though her voice shook as she continued, "I don't know her, but I know of her; and I hear that you love her very much, and when the solicitor said he could do no more to help me, I came to see if you could; and, oh, Mr. Fairbairn, I do want the money so to help my brothers and sisters, as well as myself, and I can't, I can't give up Harry." Here she fairly broke down, and sobbed aloud to my very great embarrassment.

"Well," I said, at my wits' end, after a few minutes' silence, "you ought to marry—to marry—can't you marry—someone else first?"

"What!" she sobbed, "and wait for Harry till I'm an old, old woman?"

"Not exactly," said I; "your husband might—I mean you might div—I mean your marriage might be put an end to after a time, or he might die!"

She did not answer at once, and I felt I had been recommending a divorce by collusion, with the alternate suggestion of murder, and had perhaps said enough for the present.

"He might die," she said, meditatively, apparently rather struck with the latter suggestion.

"Of course he might," I said, cheerfully, "and his life might not be of much value."

"Then he would be sure to live unless he was very, very old to begin with."

"Do you know anyone very, very old?" I asked, a new light dawning upon me.

"No one," she said, "except old Blifkins. He is 102."

"He's the very man!" I cried.

"Nonsense!" she answered. "He's a poor old man in our village, and lives on brandy and snuff."

"Old Blifkins is the very man," I repeated. "Look here! If he's 102 he cannot last much longer, and if you don't like to take him to church, go to a registry office. He will be glad to end his days in affluence, and if you will send him to Jersey or some such place, where liquor and snuff are cheap——"

"Oh, Mr. Fairbairn!" she exclaimed, "I couldn't."

"That settles it," I said rather dryly, rising and looking out of the window as I lit a fresh cigarette: "but, of course, if you could I understand your uncle's fortune is a very large one. There are your brothers and sisters to be thought of, and then there is what's-his-name, Tom, Bill, Harry"——as I said the last word the door clicked behind me, I heard a whisk of feminine draperies brushing the banisters and stairs outside, while a silvery voice growing rapidly more distant called back something about "good-bye," and about my being so clever, but I need not repeat them again.

I have not seen her or heard of her since. My friends could not or would not tell me anything. I was much mystified then, and now the fine spring afternoon has reminded me of her, and I have recalled the whole history of the visit of my fair client.

* * * *

Five o'clock, by Jove! I must hurry home at once and take my wife for a stroll in the park. Euphemia never could stand being kept waiting. I wonder who that is knocking. A good brief, I hope. Probably some little paltry county court case. What do you say, William? A marriage settlement to draw. You know I never do any conveyancing; send it away. What solicitors? Sharpe and Wiseman; very good people, and new clients—about the biggest firm in London. What is the fee? Five hundred guineas! William! Five hundred guineas for drawing a marriage settlement! They must be mad. Who is it? Let me look. "Settlement on the marriage of Captain Henry Scott-Shackleford"—I've heard that name before somewhere—"and Constantia Blifkins, widow." Constantia Blifkins sounds rather high class! Steady, though. Blifkins? Blifkins? Where have I heard that name? Aha, I begin to understand. My little client, this is indeed gratitude. But if we ever meet again, Constantia, it will be for you to blush and for me to say with Talleyrand, "Oho, madame."

"Do you know the surest indications of old age?" asked Dr. Reed of a number of friends at the Lindell. "The surest indications in man," he continued, "are a moist eye, a dry palm and a shrinkage of the calf of the leg. All these indications are due to some action of the nerves consequent upon advancing years. In the matter of the eye, the fifth section is interfered with, and it is this which causes a flow of water. The dryness of the palm is produced by an interference with the functions of the body also due to the action of the nerves, and the shrinkage of the leg follows from similar causes. In old age, too, you notice some men become more corpulent than in the earlier portions of their lives. With drinking men the change is often produced by the quantity of saccharine which they consume with their drink, and with those who do not drink it follows from other physiological changes. As to the hair becoming gray, it results, in the majority of cases, from the partial closing of the hair cells and the reduction of natural coloring matter which the closing produces. With women the dimness of the eye does not come so soon as it does in men."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SEEKING THE PEARL.

SOLVING A MYSTERY.

"What do you think of it, doctor?" asked the prisoner's counsel.

The physician, a celebrated specialist and authority on mental diseases, shook his head gravely in a non-committal sort of way.

"You followed up the clew I gave you?" persisted the lawyer.

"Yes."

"And you think——"

"I shall examine him again to-day," replied the doctor, "I have seen several experts in the new science and they all agree that poor Julian is an impressionable subject, a ready-made victim to any one who might have wished his deed done by proxy; but the motive? Probably some lover's quarrel, some revenge; they say the girl was pretty and coquettish. There is something baffling about the affair," added the doctor with a slight relaxation of his professional caution.

"While I have never had too much confidence in this idea of 'suggestion,' I am not prepared to say that there is nothing in it."

"Let me go with you today, doctor. I will slip in without speaking, listen to the story he relates, and one of us may chance on some word or idea to give us the indication we seek."

So it was agreed.

"How do you feel today?" asked the doctor kindly, as they entered the prisoner's cell.

The man was lying on his hard bed, staring in front of him, with hollow, vacant eyes.

"My thoughts," he replied, "flutter about aimlessly; sad, oh, sad, as long snow-covered plains under the light of the moon. I have worn myself out with walking to and fro. My limbs ache as if I had been beaten. I feel very cold, but the palms of my hands are burning up with fever, and I have a dull pain at the base of my brain."

The physician nodded gravely and said a few soothing words, then requested the patient to relate all he could remember about the crime.

"But, doctor," objected Julian, "I have already told you twenty times or more. It will be monotonous to go over all that again, though to be sure, there is nothing better to do here. Well, then, place yourself there, opposite to me, so that you will hide that white wall; it looks to me like a canvas on which is painted that unfading image, the coffer with the head upon it! When you go away my terror will return. If they would only soil that wall a little; it seems to me the slightest stain would obviate this fancy. I tried to soil it, and the janitor scolded me as if I had been a schoolboy."

"Go on with your story," said the doctor, quietly.

"I was walking along aimlessly when from a long, dark, narrow street I emerged on the thoroughfare. Lights were shining here and there under the trees like great flowers of flame. The yelling of showmen, the music and bells of the merry-go-rounds, the trumpets and drums, hurdy-gurdies and squeaking playthings of the children made a most horrible din, for the annual festival was in full tide.

"Cornered by a group of curious people, I was crowded and crushed, raised off my feet and carried along before a booth. Above the door I read the word 'Metempsychosis.'

"A fat man was selling tickets; he was pitted by small-pox and had one eye smaller than the other.

"Inside it was very, almost quite, dark.

Before us a square of light opened in the canvas which was stretched at the further end of the booth. Within this frame appeared a table with a gauze screen separating it from the spectators.

"The fat man passed around a pastboard head such as milliners use for bonnets. When it had gone from hand to hand and was acknowledged to be truly what it happened to be, he placed it on the table and fastened the gauze screen. The light brightened; by transitions impossible to catch, without anything seeming to move, as the man announced a transformation the pasteboard head turned into a vase of flowers, then into a cage full of birds, after that into a death's head, which became the mask of celebrated statues representing successively Venus, Juno, Cleopatra, Anne of Austria, Marie Antoinette and so on and on, until the showman said: 'Instead of pasteboard and stucco you shall now see living flesh.'

"Slowly the face dislocated, the features became hazy, confused to form again little by little, and appear distinct, animated, humanized.

"'An ingenious trick,' I thought; 'I don't even care to know if it is accomplished by the aid of mirrors.'

"The head of a young girl, sweet and fair, had formed behind the gauze. She opened her great black eyes, which, without definite expression, followed me with the strange fixity of a portrait, while across her face flitted the rather silly smile of the antique statues.

"This steady stare seemed to turn me to stone. My limbs grew rigid. I felt very strangely, though it was neither fatigue nor pain, and there was something oddly familiar about the head. Where I could have seen it before under different circumstances and in different attire I can no more remember now than I could then.

"I remained through another representation. When the young girl appeared in the last act I experienced the same singular sensation of torpor, and could not move hand or foot until she vanished from the square.

"The showman walked towards the door and I followed him.

"'Why,' I asked did you write metempsychosis on your sign instead of metamorphosis?'

"'Then I must have been mistaken,' he said. Bah! never mind; very few will know the difference.'

"Profiting by a push of the crowd, I slipped behind the man and hid against the canvas. He went out, saying:

"'Don't be impatient, Millie; I am going out to get something for supper.'

"I raised the canvas. On a large coffer covered with some Algerian stuff and ornamented with copper nails, I saw the pasteboard head. A young girl, tall and thin, dressed in a gray wrapper, was combing the long hair that fell over her. She threw back her hair as she heard my step, and recoiled so that the floor of the booth rattled. It seemed to me that she was trying to break through the boards to escape from me. She looked pale—supernaturally pale. It might have been an effect of light, for the gas was directly above her head.

"I gazed alternately at her bloodless face and at the white face of the manikin; they seemed to grow confused in my mind.

"The girl's eyes shone, haggard and dilated, like those of a somnambulist. Her pallid lips moved:

"'You have come to kill me?'

"'Kill you? Nonsense! What weapon could I use?' I remember laughing as I said these words and that is all."

"Collect your mind. Force your memory to obey you," said the doctor anxiously.

"That is all I can remember. The next thing I can recall is that a man's hands closed around my throat and the man was shrieking with sorrow. His grasp must have been furious, yet I felt nothing.

"Over his shoulder I peered about to see the coffer without trying to free myself. The coffer was still in the corner and the head was still on top of it. There was blood on the floor. The head looked like a pale young girl. Beside it lay a shining sword of curious shape, like an African weapon.

"The sword was in the booth," explained the physician, "you took it to cut off the girl's head. Then you substituted her head for that of the manikin. All that was accomplished with a strength and rapidity only explicable by vertigo—temporary insanity—aberration, call it what you please."

"Decidedly, you insist upon it as firmly as the examining magistrate," said Julian. "Yet I can never admit myself guilty of an act I am unconscious of having done."

"You were out of your mind," said the doctor. "What happened next?"

"I remember gendarmes with drawn swords. A walk past the booths of the showmen. And I think they hooted and jeered. All the clamor mingled and confounded and became one great sound of rushing waves; then that noise resolved itself into a harmonious concert, with dominating chords of deep, sweet sound. After that I found myself here, and you know the rest. You, doctor, felt my pulse, my forhead, and questioned me searchingly, but without succeeding in establishing my irresponsibility. I have never been subject to epilepsy, nor to somnambulism and my brain is not diseased. My own opinion? I have given it and been laughed at. Yet if I really did this hidious thing I am accused of, the very thought of which freezes the blood in my veins, then I have been the instrument of another's crime, a victim of suggestion. I am excessively nervous and suspectible to hypnotic influence, and I have submitted to experiments until I have become a 'good subject' I have no hope of this theory being accepted. I offer it merely as my own conviction."

"Have you arrived at any conclusion?" asked the lawyer three days after, as he entered the doctor's office with a curious expression on his keen face, and a certain pallor and subdued excitement that at once attracted the physician's attention.

"Why no; I am just where I was," replied the latter. "I can make nothing of it. And you? You have found some solution?"

"The solution—the motive—all," said the prisoner's counsel, unfolding a package of manuscript. "The girl had been insane, melancholy, sucidal mania, and all that, but had been cured, as it was supposed, and was not considered dangerous. The idea fixed, however, still enthralled her brain and like all demented women, the more fantastic the mise en scene of the crime the better it would please her warped imagination. She conceived the idea of employing hypnotism, attending lectures and seances, and became an expert pupil. At one of these pseudo scientific gatherings, which were frequented by some medical students of the Latin quarter, she met Julian and—incredible as it seems—hypnotized him and suggested her own murder. This MS., found a few hours ago among her effects; contains a calm statement of the facts, and completely exonerates the prisoner."—Translated for "Romance" from Le Pelit Journal by Edith Kirkwood.

The Dead Sea.

Dr. Lorter, in his curious report published in the organ of the Palestine Exploration Fund, calculates that the Dead Sea loses every day by evaporation no less than 6½ million tons of water—an enormous mass, but one which is easily drawn up by the rays of a fiery sun—the valley wherein the sea, which is of about the size of the Lake of Geneva, is situated being one of the hottest points upon the globe. The vast basin in which it lies also remarkable as the deepest depression upon the surface of the earth, being more than 1,300ft. below the level of the Mediterranean, Rocky walls, rising to 2,600ft. in height, surround it on all sides. It is nourished only by the river Jordan, whose constant tribute of waters must be absorbed by evaporation only, there being no outlet at any point. It is, as Dr. Lorter shows, more than absorbed. As a consequence, its waters have been concentrating more and more, and so great has its density become that Dr. Lorter has ascertained by actual experiment that the human body floats easily on the surface without any exertion of hands or feet.

Possibility of Brains Some Day.

"So they sent your poem back?"

"Yes, but the editor gave me a very favorable criticism."

"What did he say?"

"He said he was glad to see that I had at last learned to write only on one side of the paper."—Washington Star.

BABY'S DOINGS.

What a Baby Did In One Hour.

He was the good-natured bachelor of the family, and, being the child's uncle, was left in charge of the baby one day while everyone else was out, and out of curiosity he made a list of what the baby did in one hour. Here it is:—

1. Yelled fifteen minutes without taking breath. (The bachelor timekeeper declares solemnly that this is a true statement.)
2. Pulled enough hair from his uncle's head and whiskers to stuff a sofa-pillow.
3. Further decorated the wall-paper as high as he could reach with the poker.
4. Broke a glass vase by sitting down on it.
Swallowed six buttons and a good part of a skein of thread.
6. Emptied the contents of his mother's work-basket into the fire-place.
7. Tried to squeeze the head of the cat into a cup, and was scratched badly in the attempt.
8. Knocked the head off a fine wax doll belonging to his elder sister by trying to drive a tack into a toy wagon with it.
9. Fell off the edge of the sofa and brought down with him two costly vases, which were ruined.
10. Broke two panes of window-glass with a cane which uncle let him have.
11. Fell into the coal-scuttle and spoiled his new white dress.
12. Set fire to the carpet while uncle was out of the room hunting up something to amuse him.
13. Crawled under the sofa and refused to come out unless uncle would give him the jam pot.
14. Got twisted amongst the legs of a chair, which had to be broken to get him out.
15. Poured a jug of milk into his mother's slippers.
16. Finally, when he saw his mother coming, he ran to the door and tumbled off the steps, making his nose bleed and tearing a hole a foot square in his dress.

And still that youngster's uncle thinks that boy will make something yet.

HE WAS A STICKER.

The head barkeeper at the Ebbitt has an amusing story that he likes to tell, says the Washington Post. About ten years ago, when the proprietor of that house concluded to remove the bar downstairs, a man had been there all the evening and had imbibed rather freely.

Toward midnight some of his friends took him home, but he was restless and could not sleep, and in a few hours he concluded to go back for several more drinks. When he reached the Ebbitt he was surprised to find that a sign had been placed on the door which read, "Bar removed to the floor below."

"How's this?" he inquired. "I was here not long ago and now you say the bar has been moved."

"Yes," remarked one of the attaches of the hotel. "If you want a drink badly and must have it the men are at work downstairs and you can probably get it."

Downstairs they went, and sure enough the visitor was accommodated, but he actually remained there all day, from 5 o'clock in the morning until 10 o'clock at night, in one place, and kept drinking plain whiskey. His friends heard of it, and at the last-named hour besought him to go home.

"Blamed if I do," he ejaculated. "I know the trick. I went with you last night and they moved the bar downstairs while I was away and if I go now they'll move it somewhere else. Not much."

Finally his friends succeeded in getting him away and soon afterward he disappeared from Washington and did not return in ten whole years. He made much money out west and when here recently opened a few bottles of wine in the Ebbitt for the sake of old times.

BIG ALLIGATORS.

I have seen numerous specimens of our saurian no longer than an ordinary lead pencil; this was the season of their hatching. I have also seen a few living specimens about sixteen feet in length. In the autumn of 1875 I obtained for the late Effingham Lawrence, member of Congress and Commissioner from Louisiana to the Centennial Exhibition, the dried skin of an alligator which, after at least fifteen inches had been cut from the snout and skull and ten inches from the end of the tail, still measured seventeen feet ten inches in length. Allowing more than six inches for shrinkage in drying, this monster of his kind, when alive, must have measured more than twenty feet. He was killed in the lower part of Bayou Lafourche.

Probably the largest alligator ever seen in Louisiana was killed in a small lake on the plantation of H. J. Feltus, in Corcordia parish. According to the statement of Mr. Feltus, now of Baton Rouge, this specimen measured twenty-two feet in length. The great reptile had long been famous for miles around, having destroyed numbers of hogs and hounds owned in the neighborhood of his retreat. He had become so wary, from the number of ineffectual shots fired at him, as to be almost unapproachable. Finally he fell a victim to a long shot fired from a Mississippi rifle in the hands of Mr. Feltus, who had perseyered in hunting him, having been the greatest loser by his depredations. The huge carcass of this reptile was towed to the bank by a boat. It required the strength of a pair of mules and a stout rope to haul it ashore, where the measurement was made with the result noted above.—Century.

THE JAPANESE WAITRESS.

A Vision of Perfection That Seems to Americans Impossible.

The Japanese waitress is evidently a creature full of kindliness and winning graces. Sir Edwin Arnold met her at a dinner in Japan, where she contributed greatly by her tact and courtesy to the success of the occasion. To each guest there entered a pretty, bright, well-dressed Japanese waitress with hair decked "to the nines," stuck full of flowers and jeweled pins and shining like polished black marble.

She never speaks or settles to any serious duty of the entertainment without falling on her little knees, smoothing her skirt over them and knocking her nice little flat nose on the floor, and will either demurely watch you use your chopsticks in respectful silence, or prettily converse and even offer her advice as to the most succulent dishes, and the best order in which to do them justice.

It is not very difficult to use the chopsticks, those simple knives and forks of Eastern Asia, if once you learn the secret of the guiding finger between them. Otherwise you will drop the first mouthful from the soup bowl on your shirt front, to the gentle, but nevertheless satirical laughter of your waitress.

Amid the talk which buzzes around, you will have inquired of her already, "What is your honorable name?" and "How many are your honorable years?" and she will have told you that she is "Miss Starr," "Miss Camellia," or "Miss Antelope," and that she was 18 or otherwise on her last birthday.

She counsels you to seize that tiny lump of yellow condiment with your chopsticks, to drop it in the soy, to stir up and flavor these with the pink flakes of salmon, and you get on famously, watched by her with the warmest personal interest.

Now and again she shuffles forward on her small knees to fill your cup or to rearrange the confusion into which your little bowls and platters have somehow fallen, always with a consummate grace, modesty, and good breeding. With the condiments her little fingers have mixed, the uncooked trout is so good that you cease presently to feel like a voracious seal, and wonder if it be not wrong, after all to boil or fry anything.

Environed by all these tiny dishes, and lightly fluttering from one to another, you begin at last to be conscious of having dined extraordinarily well. So you say, "Mo yoroshii," it is enough, and the service relapses a little for music and dancing.

JUSTICE TO THE GOAT.

He Does Not Live on Tomato Cans, Hoopskirts and Such Food.

"I am satisfied," said Col. Calliper "that the phrase 'as full as a goat,' conveying as it does the idea of surreptitious and reprehensible enjoyment, does the goat great injustice. It appears to be based on misinformation concerning the goat's nature and habits.

"According to the popular notion the chief articles of a goat's diet are discarded hoopskirts, empty tomato cans and circus posters. It is difficult to see how a goat could ever get very full on food of this kind, or how anybody could ever have imagined that such food, in whatever quantity taken, could impart a large measure of joy. But even this bill of fare must be materially curtailed. Whether goats ever actually did eat hoopskirts or not they certainly do not do so now, and the goats of the younger generation could never have eaten at all, for hoopskirts have not been worn for years. The son of my next door neighbor, an intelligent boy of 12, says that it isn't so about goats eating tomato cans; that they never do. This boy has always been a close observer of goats; he has personally owned one for the past six months, and I regard his testimony as conclusive. This leaves only the circus posters. It is generally conceded that goats do eat circus posters. The circus was never so glorious as now, and the posters are larger and more glorious than ever, but there can be nothing in hard paste or in dry paper, however brightly colored, which could cause that hilarious activity which the goat sometimes displays, or produce that appearance of placid contentment which is after all, the goats chief characteristic.

"The fact is that the joyousness of the goat proceeds not from anything that it eats or drinks, nor from any condition of fullness, but from inborn good nature and love of fun. An empty goat might be as lively as a full one, perhaps even more so.

"The goat never gets drunk, and when a man who is filled with the transitory joys of whisky likens his condition to that of the goat, whose joy is perennial and wholesome, he utters a gross libel on the goat."—New York Sun.

STOUT-HEARTED WOMEN.

What They Have Done to Help In Developing the West.

The life of the West is one to induce heroism on the part of both men and women. The latter are often left alone for days in the little sod cabins or in the dug-outs that dot the hillside along the water courses. They learn to be self-reliant and strong-natured. There are in every settlement events recorded, any one of which would in Massachusetts, New York, or Ohio give the actor a State wide reputation, but which in the far West are not thought of seriously. With the difficulties of outlaws, Indians, and the terrific forces of nature to combat, it is remarkable that more tragedies do not occur.

But the women of the plains realized when they came from the old homes in the East that they were coming to face hardships and danger, and the elements of bravery in their nature came out strongly, and whenever the tears came there was the hearty and hardy spirit to meet it. Much as the men have done to develop the country, women have done more and the wives and daughters deserve all possible credit. Here and there a deed stands out in relief, but for the most part the stories of the heroines are confined to their immediate neighborhoods and never reach the out side world.—St Louis Globe Democrat.

Titled Kleptomaniacs.

A French journalist has recently given some curious information about the women who are tempted, and who fall during their shopping expeditions. He says that in Paris no fewer than 4000 women are found stealing before the counter. The number of titled ladies seized with kleptomania while examining the fashions is almost incredible. Among the most recent culprits were a Russian princess, a French countess, an English duchess and the daughter of a reigning sovereign. As a rule, these more distinguished offenders are let off on the payment of a round sum for the relief of the poor, and when the shoplifter is known to be rich the sum exacted rises to as much as 10,000 francs. The police authorities consent to this kind of condonation.

Youth.

The whole period of youth is essentially one of formation, edification, instruction, in taking of stores, establishment of vital habits, hopes, faiths. There is never an hour of it but is trembling with destinies, not a moment of which, once past, the appointed work can ever be done again or the neglected blow struck on cold iron. Take your vase of Venice glass out of the furnace, and strew chaff over its transparent heat, and recover that to its clearness and ruby glory when the north wind has blown upon it. But do not think to strew chaff over the child fresh from God's presence, and to bring the heavenly colors back to him, at least in this world.—Ruskin.

Bacilli In Dust.

If bacilli are in the air there seems no reason why they should not be in the dust, in fact, a Viennese doctor, by his experience with some grapes which he bought, has been led to the unpleasant suggestion that the tubercle bacilli may be in the dust of our streets. After rinsing the dust from these grapes in pure spring water, he found the water very dirty. As an experiment, he injected some of this water into three guinea pigs. One died in two days of peritonitis; the other two also died, but after a lapse of over a month. On examination the bodies showed pronounced tuberculosis originating in the site of inoculation.

Can't Cook as Mother Did!

How many a young wife's heart has been saddened by hearing the above remark! And yet how often the words are true; especially when cake, pastry or biscuit are in question! The reason is plain, yet it is "like telling a secret."

Our mothers used and are using Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder. They cannot be misled into using any of the ammonia or alum powders. No dyspepsia no sallow complexions, when mother did the cooking.

The first symptoms of ammonia poisoning, says a New York paper, which appear among those who work in ammonia factories, is a discoloration of the nose and forehead. This gradually extends over the face until the complexion has a stained, blotched and unsightly appearance

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is the only pure cream of tartar powder that contains the whites of eggs.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is reported by all authorities as free from Ammonia, Alum, or any other adulterant. In fact the purity of this ideal powder has never been questioned.

RIOTS RENEWED.

Another Fight With Police, in Which Many Rioters Are Injured.

BERLIN, Feb. 27.—Inflamed by their excesses of yesterday and last night the riotous crowds, many of the members of which had passed the whole night on the streets, began to renew their disturbances this morning.

At an early hour menacing crowds of workingmen began to assemble in the Unter den Linden. There was a strong force of police present, however, and they kept the crowd of idlers continually moving. They would allow not the slightest attempt at speechmaking, and even a muttered reference to lawless acts, if it fell upon the ears of a policeman, was a signal for the arrest of the man who made it.

By noon the crowds had been augmented to such an extent that the police felt it would be dangerous to allow them to remain in the streets, especially as threats of looting shops were being made. They therefore charged the crowds, but were met with a determined resistance, and repeated charges were necessary before the crowds were dispersed. The mob that had gathered in Kaiser Wilhelm strasse was specially determined to hold their ground. The first charge of the police upon them had no effect whatever, and the police were compelled to withdraw, some of them having been

by the sticks and stones of the mob. The police then drew their swords and again charged the crowd, slashing right and left. The mob still held their ground, and returned blow for blow, but finally they began to slowly give way to the onslaught, contesting every inch of the ground. The police, enraged at the resistance offered them, rallied and made another determined charge, and after a sharp scuffle the mob broke and ran in every direction, abject fear taking the place of the brute courage that had sustained them such a short time before. Quite a number of the mob were severely hurt and all the leaders fell into the hands of the police.

During the morning dissatisfied and disorderly workingmen assembled at several other points in the city, notably in the vicinity of the Brandenburg gate, the museum and the square in front of the opera house; but when ordered to disperse by the police they did so, muttering threats but offering no resistance. At noon another large crowd collected in the opera house square. This mob was exceedingly unruly and refused to obey the police orders to move on. Without bandering words to secure a compliance with their orders the police charged the mob with drawn swords and dispersed them with little resistance. Seven of the ringleaders of this mob were arrested by the police and

HUSTLED OFF TO JAIL.

To illustrate the forbearance of the emperor and the military authorities, a case can be cited. At 1 o'clock this afternoon a relief detachment of soldiers, headed by a band, was marching towards the castle to take the places of the guards on duty there. They were accompanied by a large mob of roughs, who in every way taunted them with upholding the rich against the poor. With measured step and eyes to the front the soldiers marched as though they were on dress parade. For all the notice the soldiers took of their insulters, they might have been marching through a deserted street.

A body of police had been drawn across the street near the imperial residence to prevent any one but the guards from entering the castle square. The roughs tried to break through this line and a violent encounter ensued. The soldiers marched through to the castle, still heedless of the row between the mob and the police. The latter stood with drawn sabers, and as the mob made their onslaught they struck right and left with their sabers, inflicting severe wounds on those who came within reach of their weapons.

Finally a detachment of mounted police that had arrived on the scene rode down on the mob, which broke and scattered in every direction. Many of the flying roughs were knocked down and trampled upon by the horses, but the policemen had no mercy on the fugitives and drove their horses at headlong speed over any of the mob who stood in their way.

TIRED OF CAUSING TROUBLE.

As the day wore on the riotous element, evidently tired out by their long, and repeated efforts to make as much trouble as possible for the police, began to disperse and make their way to their homes. At this hour (7:20 p. m.) the crowds have thinned and the streets are gradually taking on their normal appearance.

Many things have been said for and against Emperor William, but he has never been accused of cowardice. Though he is no doubt greatly disturbed by the events of yesterday and to-day, he does not show any anxiety in his face as to what the final outcome will be.

There was great excitement in the vicinity of the castle this afternoon when his majesty, attended by one aide and preceded by two mounted policemen, emerged on horseback from the castle court room and rode slowly through the streets, notwithstanding that they were packed by excited masses of people. He was loudly and enthusiastically cheered by the masses through which he proceeded. He rode along the Unter den Linden to the Thiergarten, and was everywhere the recipient of a most hearty welcome from the excited populace.

No Signs of a Compromise.

LONDON, Feb. 27.—Chancery proceedings are about to open, following a writ served upon Mrs. Parnell and Justin McCarthy jointly at the instance of Messrs. Redmond and Harrington and others, with the view to decide the custody of the Paris funds. A legal declaration of the chancery court will only assist the subsequent action of the party. The proceedings signalize the fact that Parnellites see no chance of an agreement with the McCarthyites. The special fund which the Irish National federation started a year ago for electoral and other purposes is progressing. The total is now £12,000, and the fund is growing. The American contributions are increasing.

FRIDAY FEB. 26.

SENATE.

The finance committee of the senate presented a resolution in that body providing for a joint committee to confer with the authorities of West Virginia with regard to that state's proportion of the Virginia debt, and in the event that no settlement is accomplished, to bring suit in the United States courts in the name of Virginia against West Virginia.

Senator Morrill, from the committee on District of Columbia, reported several local bills favorably.

A conference was ordered on the disagreeing vote of the two houses on the census deficiency bill.

The Idaho contested election case was taken up again, Senator Vance having the floor. At the conclusion of Mr. Vance's remarks Mr. Stewart introduced Mr. Claggett, the contestant, who was recognized for a two hour's speech. At 4 p. m., the senate went into executive session and shortly afterward adjourned until Monday, with the Idaho case still pending.

HOUSE.

The house has ordered to its engrossing a bill appropriating $35,000 for a World's Fair exhibit.

A bill appropriating $8,000,000, with a proviso that a similar amount be expended each year, was introduced in the house by Representative Byrnes, of Missouri, to improve the Mississippi river from the Falls of St. Anthony to the jetties, the improvement to be under the direction of the war department.

Mr. Sayers, of Texas, submitted the conference report on the urgent deficiency bill, and it was agreed to. As agreed to the bill appropriates $428,664, being $140,483 more than it carried when it orignally passed the house, and $30,333 less than it carried when it passed the senate.

Uses for Aluminium.

Prof. Fan Laughen says that aluminium renders iron softer and naturally increases considerably the force of transverse resistance of white cast iron, which is ordinarily porous. It also improves gray cast iron, though to a less extent. The presence of aluminium has a still greater effect in augmenting the resistance of shocks. Aluminium augments the elasticity and diminishes the strain due to internal tension.—Once a Week.

Sentenced to Death.

PARIS, Special—Lieut. Annistcy was sentenced to death to-day for the murder of Baroness Dellard in this city a few months ago. The prisoner confessed his guilt and gave a detailed account of the crime. Baroness Dellard, who was the mother of a prominent official in the war office, was murdered on Dec. 4 last. She lived in handsome apartments in a large house in the Boulevard du Temple. She was alone at the time of the murder, but her maid returned home soon afterward and was also attacked by the murderer, being stabbed in the throat and breast from behind. The murderer then escaped, leaving his knife and the jewels he had intended to steal. He was a lieutenant of an infantry regiment in the French army, and was retired only two days before he committed the crime.

NOT CROWDED.

Sue, will you skate with me?" he whispered,
"If you're rested now, you know."
And the little boy and maiden
Glided through the straying snow.

On each side the banks tower upward,
Gray and rugged tree-crowned hills,
Worn in many sinuous courses
By the spring-time's storm-born rills.

On they glide with daring swiftness—
Rounded cheeks and roses bloom,
Colder still the wind is blowing,
Daylight dies in graying gloom.

"Just once more up creek," he urges,
Then he adds with sheepish air,
"It's the nicest—don't you think so?
'Cause there ain't so many there."

SOME MYSTERIOUS DEATHS.

FROM THE RECORDS OF A FRENCH POLICEMAN.

I had some renown as a successful rogue-catcher; and I had some experience, too. My field of operations, as a usual thing, lay within the confines of the Department of the Lower Alps; and though I served under the Sub-prefect of the Third Arrondisment, yet the prefect of the Department called on me when he chose. One morning—it was in the latter part of May—I received a note from the Prefect, ordering me to come to Digne, and see him with all possible despatch. The missive came through the office of our Sub-prefect, so I had nothing to do but get ready and start. I took an early dinner; assumed the dress of a peasant; browned my face and hands; and set forth. I reached Digne just at nightfall, and as soon as it was dark I waited upon the Prefect. He seemed to be relieved when he saw me, and at once took me to his private closet.

"Now," said I, "have you got work for me?"

"Yes," he replied. "Sit down and listen."

We sat down, and having tasted a glass of wine, he proceeded:

"Within a few months past there have been some of the most mysterious murders committed in this department, and the Department of Var, that have ever come under my notice. They are done, mostly, on the road from Castellane to Aups. The first victim was a Marseilles merchant, who had come up to Castellane to purchase preserved fruits. His body was found by the road side, near the line between the two departments; and at first it was supposed that he must have fallen there and died in a fit, as no mark of violence could be found upon him. His pockets had been rifled, however. The next one was found near Annot, and under the same circumstances. He was a merchant also, and from Nice. Since then five or six more died upon the road in the same mysterious way; and no marks of ill-usage have been found upon any of them! but they all have been robbed."

"Have most of them stopped in Castellane?" I asked.

The Prefect told me that they had.

"And I suppose they must have put up at the same inn there?" I remarked.

"Yes," said the Prefect.

I then supposed that some of the landlords must be concerned. But my companion informed me that they had been narrowly watched, and that no shadow of evidence rested against them.

"But," said I, "is there not some poison in this matter? Some innkeeper may administer the potion, and then send an accomplice after the victim."

"No," returned the Prefect, with a shake of the head. "Experienced physicians have examined the stomachs of several of the dead men, but no trace of poison has been found. It is a mysterious affair. The Sub-prefect has done all he could, but without effect; and now we mean to give the whole thing into your hands. You must go to Castellane at once, and there you can get such further information as the Sub-prefect can give you."

After conferring a while longer with the Prefect, he let me have a suit of ordinary tradesman's clothing; and thus habited, I went to a hotel and put up for the night. In the morning I procured a horse, and set out, reaching Castellane before noon. During the day I pretended to be doing business. I went to the woollen factory and examined a lot of stuff; and also visited several places where preserved fruits were put up. I learned that most of the people who came there on business stopped at an inn kept by a man named Juan Fontaix; so I left my horse there, and engaged lodgings.

After dark I called upon the Sub-prefect. He told me that he had used all the means within his power, but had been able to gain no clue to the guilty party. Most of the murdered victims had been from Marseilles, and the excitement in that city was intense. Gendarmes had been sent out upon the watch. The last victim had fallen only four days before, and the deed was done fifteen minutes after the policemen had passed the spot.

I asked the Sub-prefect if he had any suspicious. He answered that all the suspicion he had held was fastened upon Juan Fontaix, the innkeeper. Nearly all the murdered men had stopped at his house, and he must have known something of this business.

I bade the officer keep perfectly quiet, and not even to let one of his own men know of my presence. Then I returned to the inn, and finally entered into a conversation with my host upon the subject of the mysterious deaths. He pronounced it wonderful; and assured me that it had injured him more than he could tell.

"By Jove!" he muttered, "they will be suspecting me next, if they have not done so already."

I was soon satisfied that Juan Fontaix knew nothing of the guilty party. He was very fearful, and at times blanched and trembled at the thought of being apprehended for the crime. Most people would have seen in this signs of guilt; but I thought differently.

I spent all of the next day in the town, ostensibly engaged in business with the factories, but in reality hunting after some clue to the object of my mission. Night came again; but I had found nothing new. I was perfectly satisfied that the murderer had laid his plans so deeply, that no circumstantial clue could be found. If I would find him, I must catch him with the proof upon him.

I had given an assumed name at the inn, and stated that I belonged to Toulon. On the next morning I called for my bill, and informed my host that I was off for home. Then I went to the fruit preserver's and told him the same, stating that I must confer with my partner before I concluded my bargain. After this I went to the woolen factory, and saw the business agent. His name was Louis Cazaubon, and he had come to Castellane about a year before. He seemed to be a straightforward, business man, and yet he was the only one I had seen whom I really wished to suspect. In conversing upon the murders, he had been a little too free and off-handed, treating the subject more cooly than a man with a heart would be apt to do. But still I had thus far been able to find nothing against him. On the present occasion I told him, as I had told the others, that I must return to Toulon.

"If you have not the ready money with you, we can give you credit," he said.

I told him I had plenty of money; but I was not fully prepared to pay the prices he had demanded. He said, "Very well;" and added, that he should be happy to sell to me when I came again. I bade him good-day, and then departed. As soon as I was alone, I began to suspect Monsieur Louis Cazaubon in earnest. When I told him that I had money, but did not purchase, because he charged me too much, why didn't he banter me? Simply because he wished me to leave town with my money in my pocket. At least, so it appeared to me. This was sufficient ground for me to work upon, and I rode to an out-of-the-way place, and left my horse, and then returned and concealed myself in a position where I could see the movements of Louis Cazaubon. In a few minutes he came out from his factory, and walked away. His step was hurried and eager. I felt sure that he was not the man who did the direct work of death. The plot was deeper than that, or he would have been discovered ere this. So I resolved to wait a while and see if he returned. I would have followed him, if I could have done so with safety; but he might have detected me and that would not do. However, in less than fifteen minutes he came back. He walked now with a sober, innocent air. It seemed to say—"Oh! I haven't been up to any mischief, as you can see!"

I saw Cazaubon at his desk again, and I returned to my horse. I knew that I had a risk to run now, but I was ready for it. If the factory agent was at the bottom of the crime, and meant to have me robbed, he had already set his machinery in motion, and the next development would be upon the road. I examined my pistols, and then left the town, taking the road along the river, towards Aups.

At the end of half an hour I came to the slopes of the Barjols mountains, and soon afterwards entered the wood. I now began to be very careful and keep my eyes about me. I will not say that I was wholly without fear; for the mysterious manner in which the murders had been done, verged so closely upon the marvelous that a sort of superstitious dread attached to it. Had the victims been shot or ran through with a sword, or had their throats cut, I should have felt no sort of dread. But this was new ground. Death had come here, nobody knew how. It might have come from an invisible hand, and in dead silence. Yet when I reasoned upon the subject, I felt sure that the murderer must approach very near to his victim ere the blow was struck, since it must be some direct and powerful agent that could cause death in so strange a manner.

I had crossed the little cascade of Saint Esprit, and was descending a short steep hillside, when I saw a boy by the roadside, at the foot of the descent, engaged in whipping a mule. He was a slightly built fellow, not more than fifteen years of age, and his coarse garments were covered with meal. I knew that there was a mill upon a branch of the Verdon, not far back, and I supposed he might be the miller's boy. As I came nearer, I saw a large sack upon the ground, close by where the mule stood.

"What's the matter, my boy?" I asked, as I drew up near him.

"This ugly mule has thrown both me and my bag of corn from his back," the boy answered.

"Are you hurt?" I continued.

"My left shoulder is hurt," he said, "and I can't lift this sack again. If monsieur would help me, I would be very grateful."

Until this moment the idea of suspecting the boy had not entered my head; but the suspicion flashed upon me now. He was altogether too keen a looking fellow for a miller's apprentice. He gave me a glance from a pair of quick, sharp eyes, that meant more than he had spoken. And then, if I had not been very much mistaken, I had seen him holding his mule firmly with that left hand.

I leaped from my saddle, and moved towards the boy, being careful to watch his every movement.

"Now," said he, "if you will take hold of that end, we will put it on." He lifted at the other end, and pretended that it hurt his shoulder; and he begged of me to lift it on alone.

I professed to be willing to comply, and stooped down for that purpose, keeping my head in such a position that I could watch him by a sidelong glance. As I bent over and took hold of the sack, I saw him carry his hand in his bosom, and draw something out. I saw his dark eye flash, and heard his quick, eager breathing. In an instant I seized his wrist, and bent it upward, and as I did so, I heard a sharp report, like the explosion of a percussion cap, and saw a tiny wreath of smoke curl up from the hand held. He struggled to free himself from my grasp, but I held him with the grip of iron, and fastened my gaze upon him.

"I've found you, have I!" I said, drawing one of my pistols, and cocking it. "I will simply inform you, that I am an officer of the Prefecture, and that I have been hunting for you. Just offer a particle more of resistance, and a bullet goes through your brain. Now give me that weapon."

The boy was frightened, and trembled violently.

"It is only a tobacco-pipe," he said, as he handed it to me.

And certainly it looked like nothing more; but I had seen enough of it to know that evil was in it. It appeared to me to be an ordinary meerschaum pipe, the bowl colored as though by long use—only the amber mouth-piece was missing. I did not stop to examine it then, but turned my attention to its owner. I saw that he was still trembling with fear, and I knew that now would be the time to work upon him.

"So you are selling your soul to Monsieur Louis Cazaubon?" I remarked, by way of letting him know that I was thoroughly informed.

He started, and I saw very plainly that he knew just what I meant; but he tried to recover himself, and clumsily asserted that he did not know anything about the individual I had named.

"You needn't lie to me," I sternly replied, "for I know all about it. Louis Cazaubon has been watched by me when he didn't dream of such a thing. He thought I was a tradesman. But you are young, and I would save you. Confess everything to me, and I promise you that your life shall be spared."

I saw that the boy wavered, and I followed up my advantage; and ere long I had him bent to my wishes. I made him understand that I held his life in my hands; that I could protect him from the vengeance of any one whom he might criminate; and that he had everything to gain, and nothing to lose, by a full confession. He came to it gradually and reluctantly; but my wit finally triumphed, and I gained his secret.

His name he said, was Henry Dupin. He was born in Paris, but never knew who his parents were. He went to live with Cazaubon when quite young, and had been with him ever since. He said Cazaubon used to be a chemist, and did some business in that line; and it was in Paris that he invented the infernal machine, which they have since used with such fatal effect. About two years previous to the present time they left Paris together, and spent nearly a year in traveling over the kingdom, murdering and robbing for a living. Finally they came to Castellane, where the master obtained his present situation, while the boy went into a mill close at hand. Cazaubon marked the victims that were to be robbed, and the boy then did the work. He used various artifices in carrying out his plan, but the usual one was the same that he had tried upon me.

The boy then explained to me the secret of the pipe. Only the outer surface was of meerchaum. Within it was a pistol of the finest steel, and of the most exquisite workmanship. The stem was the barrel, and the lock was concealed within the bowl, and covered with tobacco. A thin plate of metal protected the curiously contrived lock, and upon this the tobacco rested. A pressure of the thum or finger upon this plate discharged the weapon. In order to cock it, the plate had to be removed. And now comes the infernal feature of the contrivance. The powder used in the little barrel was Cazaubon's own manufacture, and very powerful. For a wad a piece of felt was used, and on the top of this was placed the missle which did the mischief. The boy had two of them with him, stiched up in the lining of his cap. He took them out and showed them to me. This projectile was a tiny arrow, not larger than a cambric needle, with one end sharp and the other beat down to a thin feather. It was of fine steel, but coated with a greenish yellow substance, which was the most virulent and speedy poison that the chemist could concoct. That needle once within the course of the blood, and death was already at the heart. Its wound no mortal eye could detect. It punctured the skin not so palpably as the prick of a pin. He who sent it on its fatal errand made sure of his aim, generally striking the neck, and the victim would fall into insensibility ere he could comprehend what had hurt him.

I returned to Castellane with the boy; and having left him in charge of the Sub-prefect, I took a gendarme along with me, and went to the factory. Monsieur Cazaubon was surprized to see me back so soon; but he was more surprised when I asked him to take a walk with me; and when I called in the gendarme, and bade him put on the hand-cuffs upon him, he was ready to sink to the floor. We had him secured before he had sense enough to resist, and he was conveyed to the office of the Sub-prefect without trouble. At first he denied everything; but when he found that this would not avail him, he swore he would kill the boy.

In due time Monsieur Louis Cazaubon was tried and condemned to death; and the Prefect of Dinge took possession of the infernal machine. Before the villain was executed he confessed his crimes—told how many years he had worked to perfect his fatal instrument, and produce the poison—and also owned that the boy Henry had been driven to help him through fear of his life.

So the rasca,l was executed. Henry Dupin spent two years in confinement, and was then set free, and commenced an honest life. As for me, I got all the praise I deserved, and perhaps more. At all events, I had done the country some service, and the people were not slow to acknowledge it.

AFTER THE BUGS.

The late Rev. Dr. Hill, the honored ex-president of Harvard, was once on a crowded train with a number of emigrants and spent his time making paper dolls for the cross, tired children of a poor emigrant woman who was overcome with poverty, trouble and the perplexities of travel. Soon after he came to Portland canker worms began to annoy the beautiful trees on State Street very much and it was feared that they would be destroyed. Dr. Hill was equal to the emergency, and with all his knowledge of bugs and worms did not propose to have the handsome trees in front of his residence destroyed by insignificant canker worms. According he made a preparation largely composed of printers' ink and girdled his trees. While thus employed in raiment suitable for the work a lady sailed down the street and asked him about the remedy. She explained that the trees about her residence were injured by the worms, and asked him if she could not engage him to treat them. He said he would if he could get time. She asked him his name and he said "Hill," and after extracting from him a promise to come up and examine the trees, she went home and proudly told her husband what she had done. He recognized the divine by her description and was appalled—but Dr. "Hill" kept his promise, in spite of the mortified lady's protestation; and the trees are alive and thrifty today.—Fairfield, Me., Journal.

Donald and Gladys.

One day Donald and Gladys had a quarrel. You see, while both were gathering more stones for the high tower they were building, Gypsy, the dog, came up to smell of the new edifice, when—crash! it tumbled right down on her meddlesome nose. So away she scampered, without waiting to make the call she had intended to make on Donald and Gladys.

Gladys saw the ruin first.

"Why, Donald," she exclaimed, wrathfully, "didn't you know any better'n to knock that down?"

"I didn't knock it down," said Don, stoutly.

"Yes, you did, 'cause I didn't!"

"I didn't!" shouted Donald.

"But you did," persisted Gladys, giving him an angry push, and then, slap! slap! went two small pairs of hands, and "Oh! oh!" cried two distressed voices.

Gladys's mamma called: Gladys, come! Come, Gladys!"

Donald hadn't any mamma, but Miss Little, his old kindergartner, who was taking care of him while papa was in Europe, came down the steps to meet the little ones.

"Why, Donald, how did this happen?" she asked.

"She said I tumbled the tower down, an' I didn't," he answered, defiantly.

"Couldn't you have told her pleasantly that you didn't?"

"No! I couldn't possibly; she was too mean!"

Then what did you do?"

"Oh, I just pushed her—she pushed me first—'n' then she slapped me, and I gave it to her back again!"

"Why, Donald!"

Donald wished Miss Little wouldn't look at him that way, and make her voice sound so sorry; but he said, crossly, "Well, I don't care much!"

He was so hot and cross he wished Miss Little would scold him, so he could say ugly things back to her, as he used to say to nurse. Somehow he never had the courage to say naughty things to any one who wouldn't scold him, although he wouldn't have told the reason why.

"Donald," said Miss Little, after dinner, "why are you not out playing."

"Well, you see," he answered, gloomily, "I keep thinking how mean Gladys was this morning."

"Doesn't that remind you of how naughty a little boy was to slap her back?"

"No, sir, ma'am! She said I did when I didn't; and, Miss Little, I'm 'most sure I can't forgive her 's long 's I live 'n' breathe!"

"Donald! Donald!" called Gladys's mamma.

"Why, what do you s'pose she wants?" said Don, looking frightened. "I didn't slap Gladys very hard."

"No," said Miss Little, as she went out to meet Gladys and her mamma and Uncle Bert; "probably she wants to see you for something else; but, Donald, just think how badly you would feel if you had hurt her! We never know how hard we strike when we're angry. You must be thankful you did not hurt her so that perhaps she would never be well again."

"My!" exclaimed Donald. "I believe I'd be so thankful I'd forgive her quick's a wink."

"Oh, Don!" cried Gladys, running up. "You didn't knock it down! Truly, you didn't!"

"I know it," said Don, heartily. "And, say, did I hurt you very much?"

"Hurt me? Oh no! But you see, Don, Uncle Bert says it was Gypsy who knocked it down. I'm sorry I said 'twas you. I think I must be a naughty girl."

Real Friends.

You have heard your mother tell how, when she went to school, she had such a dear girl friend, and how they have kept up the friendliness for many long years, and you have perhaps heard her say that school friendships are the most enduring of any. Then you have wondered if you and your present "best friend" will love each other when both of you are gray-headed. Now let us see how things stand between you and your best friend Anna. Of course you like her very much, but you must confess that very frequently there comes a little "tiff," and you "fall out." When such a thing happens you straightway transplant your affections to some other girl, and your friend does likewise. You two scarcely speak when you meet, and generally make a point of showing great devotion to the new friend in the presence of the old one.

Now isn't it rather silly to have these unhappy differences so frequently? If Ann does some very unworthy act then she deserves the loss of your friendship; but is your regard so frail a thing that it cannot stand small differences of opinion? Cannot you be more generous?

If your friend is lovable and you are the kind of girl you ought to be, then you will bear with her inconsistencies and put up with some of her faults. Perhaps you are not quite perfect yourself, and she may have to bear some things from you. If your friendship is the real thing, you will remember that love "hopeth all things," "beareth all things," and so bearing many things patiently and sweetly, you will find that years will not weaken, but will rather strengthen, your mutal bond of intercourse.

What Hazel Thinks.

I think boys are very queer. They want to be like some great hero, and they make so much talk about it, and they try to be like him in a few show things, and never seem to mind about the things that truly make a man great.

There is my brother. He talks about George Washington, and he lords it over the little ones, because he says that Washington was a great commander. And he gets on an old uniform that Uncle Henry wore when he was a drummer-boy in the war, and he flourishes a sword and talks big, and seems to think he is being like Washington.

Now I think that George Washington would have been just the same in plain clothes, without a sword. I think it was what he was and what he did that made him a famous man.

And if my brother would keep on his every-day suit, and help Neddie with his examples—as he wanted him to yesterday afternoon, when mamma was busy with her mission people, and I had my mending to do—and be polite to me, and go across the street with me when it is so crowded with teams,—instead of running ahead, and saying, "Oh, 'fraid of a horse! 'fraid of a horse!" as he did this morning,—he would be a good deal more like Washington. That's what I think.—Youth's Companion.

Pat's Device.

The following incident, told by the Utica Times, of the method employed by a clever son of Erin to induce his passengers to walk up hill, shows that a graceful, witty hint is pretty sure to prove irresistible.

Up one of the long hills of county Wicklow a mare was drawing a heavy load of travelers. The driver walked by her side, trying to encourage her as she toiled slowly end wearily along.

The six passengers were too busily engaged in conversation to notice how slowly the car progressed. Presently the driver opened the door at the rear of the car and slammed it to again. Those inside started, but thought that he was only assuring himself that the door was securely closed.

Again Pat opened and slammed to the door. The travelers inquired angrily why he disturbed them in that manner.

"Whist," he whispered, "don't spake so loud—she'll overhear us."

"Who?"

"The mare. Spake low," he continued, putting his hand over his mouth and nose. "Sure, I'm desavin' the crayture! Every time she hears the door slammin' that way she thinks one of yez is gettin' down to walk up the hill, and that raises her speerits."

The passengers took the hint.

Passing Over Cruel Words.

Some one has wisely said that "evil words hurt only two; him who utters them, and him who foolishly takes the time to listen to and place credence in them." Such was the belief of Prince Albert, of England, the consort of Queen Victoria, as will be seen by this incident told by a recent historian:

The prince was really one of the noblest men of the century. His modesty and consideration for others, and thoughtfulness in little things, were beyond all praise. He cherished no resentment for injuries received, but felt rather compassion for men who could stoop to do wrong or mean things. The scientist, Alexander Humboldt, on one occasion used some cruel words against the prince, designed to cause pain; when a friend was complaining to Prince Albert of the wrong done to him, he replied, sweetly,—

"I pity poor Humboldt. Such things injure one whom I have loved and admired." And this was all the reference he ever made to an attack that, to many others would have been cause for a lasting resentment.

Feminine Tact.

Tact is distinctively a woman's characteristic. Man may be gentle and thoughtful and tender where his affections are aroused. He may be diplomatic, and, in general, sufficiently a citizen of the world to avoid giving offense, yet he always lacks that delicate intuition which is so great a part of woman's charms.

A delightful quaint example of this womanly instinct, as developed in a child, occurred up town not many evenings ago. Little Vincent is only 6 years old, while his blue-eyed sister Molly does not yet tip the scales at four. The children had been made ready for bed, and were sitting up to see Mamma "dwess for ze party." Molly, who was in her night gown, was perched up on a high chair.

"Dear me, Vincent, I's dwedful told," she exclaimed.

Vin wanted to make her warm, so he wrapped up her feet in a newspaper, but in doing so he upset poor Molly, who slipped and fell solidly on the floor from her high chair. "Oh, Molly," said Vin in tears, "did you hurt you?" "No," said Molly winking back the tears which would come; "No, bruver, I fell on 'e paper."

Making the Most of Things.

The satisfaction to be gotton out of life, says the Congregationalist, depends less upon what one has than upon his faculty to make the most of things as they are. Many a rich man realizes far less joy and comfort all through life than others who are counted poor. The difference grows out of the fact that some men know how to use what they have to the best advantage, while others do not. The same principle extends even to the art of giving. Some people take so much interest in studying the needs of different objects that they find great delight in giving even a little, while others with less knowledge and discrimination draw their check for hundreds, it may be, doing it rather from a sense of duty than because it brings them any real joy. Blessed is the man who knows how to make the most of what he has.

From Bad to Worse.

A lady whose Christian name was Jane, and whose little daughter was named after her, engaged a housekeeper whose name was also Jane.

Thinking that three Janes in one household might occasion confusion, the lady said to the newcomer, who was a tall, angular woman, with a rigid air and an uncompromising cast of countenance, "I think, Jane, it will be better for me to call you by your last name, if you have no objection."

"No'm, I have no objections," answered the housekeeper, standing stiffly erect, valise in hand. "Call me 'Darling,' ma'am, if you prefer. That's my name!"

GOVENOR WINANS, of Michigan, is one of those early birds who are around bright and chipper in the morning, long before most prominent men have rung for their shaving water. He is at his desk in the Capitol at 8 o'clock, and sets a good example to his subordinates by getting early to work and keeping at it until the work is done.

PARIS, in the heart of Kentucky, has a newspaper which is owned and edited by a colored man. The enterprising editor has been clubbed once and now has a libel suit of respectable dimensions on his hands. A few more men like our esteemed contemporary would solve the negro problem in the South.

MISS SOONDERBAI POWAR, a native high-caste Hindoo, has been sent by India to this country as a missionary. She comes to point out the evils of the opium traffic. She wears an oriental costume, but speaks English fluently. Her oratory is simple and direct, and she excites the sympathy of her hearers.

THOUGH dull and uninteresting, the present session of Parliament seems to be getting to its end with a jump. Even the staid London Chronicle says that things never looked so much like a collapse since Sir Stafford Northcote started his fellows a dozen years ago with his sudden announcement of dissolution. Thus far the Conservatives have been staking their fortunes on the claim that the Liberals had nothing definite to offer the Irish members, whereas they had. But Mr. Healy laid that ghost on Monday by the statement that he had the fullest confidence in Mr. Gladstone.

REV. W. H. THORNE, editor of the Globe, is laid up with a serious attack of grip, attended by dangerous complications, at Gardiner, Me., and has no hope of being able to preach again or to do any work for a long time to come. Mr. Thorne gave up his parish at Mount Desert at the beginning of the year, threats of brain fever compelling him to resign pastoral labor. He went away to Gardiner, expecting to be able to return to his parish in February. In this he has been disappointed and the indications are that the severance will be final.

Workmen opening up a new stone quarry two miles south of Alden, unearthed the skeleton of a man. The bones were white with age but in a state of preservation. It was at a lonely place in the timber and old settlers are inclined to think some foul play was committed several years ago on one Johnson, who disappeared very mysteriously.

The family of Matthew Cheney, living in the northern part of Sac county, was suffocated by coal gas. A neighbor who went to the house found all the family insensible, and at once summoned a physician. It was too late to save all the family, and a young man and a child died. All the rest of the family are very feeble.

ONLY ONE SAVED.

Every Soul on Board Except the Captain Goes Down With the Vessel.

LONDON, Feb. 27.—News of a terrible disaster on the North sea by which a steamer went to the bottom, carrying with her every soul on board with only one exception, was received in this city late tonight.

Only meager details of the catastrophe have yet been obtained, but from the dispatches already at hand it is learned that the steamers Loughbrew (British) and Forest Queen came into collision off Flamborough, a village of York county, East Riding, on the North sea. The vessels crashed together with great force and the Forest Queen was torn apart by the bow of the Loughbrow.

The damages sustained by the Forest Queen were so extensive that the sea began to rush through the breaches made in her hull in a great volume. So quickly did the Forest Queen founder that her crew had no chance to save their lives, and all hands with the single exception of the captain went down with her to a watery grave.

The dispatches give no information as to the extent of the damage done to the Loughbrow.

There were about fifty-five men on board the sunken steamer.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION.

A Plot to Take a Mayor's Life Discovered.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Feb. 27.—What is believed by the police to have been a conspiracy to assassinate Mayor B. B. McDonough came to light to-day. Late Wednesday night two negroes called at the mayor's residence and endeavored to allure him out of doors by claiming to be the bearers of a message from police headquarters.

The mayor has telephone communication between his residence and the headquarters and refused to respond to the message, as the officers would have summoned him by wire if his presence had been required. Inquiry next morning developed that no message had been sent by the police. Later in the day a negro told the mayor that two white men had offered him $50 to call the mayor out of his house and then get him out of the way. The negro was frightened and fled, followed, he said, by the strangers, who threatened to kill him.

Mayor McDonough has recently begun a rigid enforcement of the Sunday-closing law and has incurred the enmity of the grog-shopkeepers in the low quarters of the city, and to these men the friends of the mayor attribute what they believe to have been an attempt to murder him.

MURDER SUSPECTED.

The Father of Starving Children Under Arrest.

ASHLAND, Wis., Feb. 27.—A sensational discovery was made to-day by a police officer. A family of three little children were found in a squalid hut nearly frozen, and starving to death, one of them a nursing babe. They had burned their feet trying to keep warm. The father had been on a spree, and their mother had disappeared mysteriously over a week ago and had not been seen since.

The father, Charles Crowler, has been arrested on suspicion of foul play, as it is alleged that he made threats to put his wife out of the way, and the little children say he said he was "Going to get them a new mamma." A search is being made for the body as the circumstances now strongly indicate that she has either been killed and the body hidden, or else she committed suicide, as there is no clue to her having been seen by any one for over a week.

The case has caused considerable excitement, and several detectives are now at work. Crowler says his wife has left him several times before, but never stayed away so long.

Unprofitable Whitecapping.

BRANCHVILLE, Ind., Feb., 27.—Robert Underhill, a deaf mute, was attacked by five men. By the aid of his wife and sister the assailants were fought off until Underhill secured an ax, by which he committed damage yet unknown. Ed Keefe, a young man of unsteady habits, is missing, and Lewis Falkenburg is lying in bed badly wounded in the shoulder blade. He says he was kicked by a horse, though others think the wound might have been made with an ax. Underhill is badly wounded in the head, face and neck with shot, and will doubtless die. Falkenburg will be crippled for life.

Won the Money Betting.

ASHLAND, Wis., Feb. 27.—M. L. Blackwood, Fred Kirkwood and Phelps Perrin were the only witnesses examined in the Baker case to-day. The defense, by today's testimony, are showing where Perrin secured the money he gave Baker to commence business with. Mr. Blackwood states that $1,000 had been secured by a note, using his name as a surety. Perrin testified to giving Baker $1,500 from his safety box at the bank. This money Perrin claims to have won on election and prize fight bets.

Held for Extradition.

WINNIPEG, Special Telegram, Feb. 27.—Begsley, who escaped from Cavalier, N. D., to Manitoba, after having committed rape on an aged Icelandic woman, was tried before the Canadian courts to-day and sufficient evidence adduced to warrant the judge holding Begsley for extradition. Attorney Kneeshaw of Pembina conducted the case for the state.

A Forger Arrested in Iowa.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Feb. 27.—W. Z. Smyssen, a forger, who is wanted in Oshkosh, Wis., for forging two notes for $7,000 each, was arrested here to-night and is now confined in the city jail.

Killed by a Teacher.

ELROY, Wis., Feb. 27.—Last night at Valley, a small town sixteen miles west of this city, Albert Coucutt died from the effects of a whipping he got at school yesterday afternoon from J. N. Allen, the teacher. Coucutt was requested to remain in doors during recess. Coucutt got up to go out with the other pupils and was requested by Allen to be seated, which he refused to do. Allen took an ironwood club which had been used as a stove poker and struck Coucutt over the head with it. The young man was carried to a neighbors, where he was taken with convulsions and died. There is talk of lynching Allen.

Both Feet Cut Off.

MANDAN, N. D., Special Telegram.—A tramp tried to steal a ride on the west-bound passenger train to-day and fell under the trucks and both feet were cut off. He died in an hour. He is a German named Gottlieb Daub, and from papers in his possession it is believed he formerly lived at Elgin, Ill.

Advertised a Lottery.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Feb. 27.—Physicians here have had quite a discussion during the past few days as to the sex of a convict named Hannah Baz, sent from Monroe county to serve one year for larceny.

When brought here the convict had on man's clothing, and persistently claimed to be a man, but requested that he, she or it be not placed in the men's wing. The warden called on the members of the state board of medical examiners and several other physicians and all signed a request that Gov. Buchanan grant a pardon on the ground that they could not determine the sex of the convict. Hannah has small hands and feet and a woman's face, is rather good looking and aged nineteen. Gov. Buchanan granted the pardon.

BURNED TO DEATH.

VIENNA, Feb. 27.—The details of a most horrible story were received in this city today, telling of a fiendish act committed, it is alleged, to avenge another terrible crime.

A band of masked men, whose features were completely concealed, collected during the night in the small village of Minin, in the province of Bukowina. They went to the house of a handsome young woman named Mary Leppers, forced their way into a bed room occupied by the woman and bound her securely with cords. They poured a large quantity of petroleum over her. A match was then applied to the oil-soaked garments, and in an instant the woman was enveloped in flames.

The poor victim's shrieks and cries were blood-curdling, but the terrible agony suffered by the woman as she was roasted to death had little effect in arousing pity from her assailants, who watched the woman's cremation. The band stood gazing on this horrible spectacle until the woman's convulsive struggles had ceased and her anguished moans had died away, and not one of them stirred from the spot until nothing remained of the woman's body but a black and distorted mass. The murderers then left the place as secretly as they had arrived.

The motive assigned for the outrage is that the woman was suspected of having murdered her husband, and it is thought that those who took part in the burning were friends of the dead man.

WELCOME GIFTS.

American Contributions Thankfully Received in Russia.

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 27.—The subscriptions made in America for the relief of the famine sufferers in this country are exciting much interest. The relief movements in the northwestern part of the United States and Philadelphia, New York and Baltimore, all of which have been reported here are greatly appreciated.

All the American contributions will be handled by trusty agencies, and no fear may be entertained that anything will be devoted to other puposes than those intended by the charitable doners of these welcome gifts. Charles Emery Smith, the United States minister to Russia, has had frequent consultations with the leading members of the private charitable institutions here and with the government authorities, with all of whom he reached the most satisfactory conclusions regarding the manner in which the American gifts would be distributed. In conversation with a representative of the Associated Press in St. Petersburg to-day the American minister said:

> You can say to the American donors that their generous gifts will be faithfully applied as they may indicate through reliable agencies, and this will be done with the approval and support of the Russian authorities.

Mr. Smith added that he had received a letter from a friend who was examining the condition of affairs in Samara. This letter was delivered from the village of Patrofla, and in it the writer said:

> In the city of Samara I saw many sad sights, but the misery I now see daily around me is past description. People are dropping daily from hunger, typhus fever and influenza. Thousands must die in the province of Samara before spring unless immediate help is given them. Three persons have died of starvation in Patrofla in two days. Hundreds of starving peasants surround my house all day long, appealing to be saved from death. In every other house there are cases of typhous fever or influenza. The patients appear to be walking skeletons. The grain is exhausted and nearly all the horses in the vicinity have been sold. An official informs me that there are 200,000 persons who require relief in Samara alone. Yesterday I visited three dying peasants, one of whom is now dead.

Sentenced to Death.

PARIS, Feb. 27.—Lieut. Annistey was sentenced to death to-day for the murder of Baroness Dellard in this city a few months ago. The prisoner confessed his guilt and gave a detailed account of the crime. Baroness Dellard, who was the mother of a prominent official in the war office, was murdered on Dec. 4 last. She lived in handsome apartments in a large house in the Boulevard du Temple. She was alone at the time of the murder, but her maid returned home soon afterward and was also attacked by the murderer, being stabbed in the throat and breast from behind. The murderer then escaped, leaving his knife and the jewels he had intended to steal. He was a lieutenant of an infantry regiment in the French army and was retired only two days before he committed the crime.

Guatemala's Thayer.

SAN JOSE DE GUATEMALA, Feb. 27.—The rival candidates for the presidency were Lienfiesta and Barrillas. The former received the popular vote and was declared elected, but Barrillas declined to hand over the reins of government to him. His excuse was that the country was very much disturbed, and as trouble was expected it would be impolitic to change the government at that time. It is asserted that Barrillas only wants time to find out the sentiment of the army. If the troops will side with him Barrillas will refuse to resign.

Mrs. Osborne's Case.

LONDON, Feb. 27.—Sir Charles Russell, after Mrs. Osborne pleads guilty in her trial on March 7, will appear in court to deal with the case under the first offenders' act, which will enable the judges to release the accused under a bond to reappear and undergo sentence. There is a question whether the act applies to this case. A legal opinion is that, although the charge against Mrs. Osborne is not included in the act, the judges have power to apply the principle.

Germany Will Pull Out.

BERLIN, Feb. 27.—The government has determined to abandon the German possessions in Southwest Africa.

Foster's Plan Discussed.

LONDON, Feb. 27.—The proposals of Secretary Foster for restricting European immigration to the United States are anxiously discussed by the Atlantic steamship companies. The suggested increase in the head tax implies increased passenger rates. A high steamship authority says that while the scheme will create positions in European ports for a new class of officeseekers at the cost of Atlantic steamship lines, it will impel immigration to other countries, especially to Canada. The exacting of a bond of $50,000 from steamship owners as a pledge for the return of objectionable emigrants within two years, he holds, will be impossible of observance.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

The Grand Forks News says: "The News leads all others do but follow. Fisher raised $1,100 for the World's Fair exhibit. Crookston has her notes for $600 in bank!"

Oh, rats! That looks like it. The assessment for the whole of Polk County was only $1,100, of which amount the city of Crookston guarantees $600, the villages dividing the balance among them.

Engineer Jack Bunnell went out on Friday morning with a bran new engine, No. 214 which came up from St. Paul that morning for Jack's especial use. We 'spect Jack will be so awfully stuck up that he can't afford to call on poor neighbors like impecunious printers any more. Never mind, Jack, don't put on lugs; we may buy us a little ingine ourself one of these days; then we'll race you.

Chas. Vine lost a valuable horse on Wednesday morning. He had about 800 pounds of meat in his wagon driving up the hill on Main street. The horse pulled it up all right, showed no signs of distress and at the top of the hill stopped to blow a minute. Directly he commenced to shiver, fell and died in a few minutes. Charlie bought the horse of Chris Anderson only a few weeks ago.

S. L. Collins will receive a carload of fine young mares on Friday's freight and will be ready to show you as fine a lot of young horses as ever stepped in Polk County. Mr. Collins has been in this city ever since we had a city, has bought and sold hundreds of horses in that time, is one of the best judges of good horse flesh in Polk County, and every man who has ever dealt with Collins knows that his word is as good as his bond. Go and see this fine lot of animals.

If the people of the Eastern, Middle and New England States fully understood the advantages this country enjoys there would be such an immigration here this spring as was never before seen. Here the same exertion required to keep body and soul together there would make a man independent in a few years, and if he should come with a very little capital to start on so much the better. Very many who came here with nothing a few years ago have now a good farm and are in good circumstances.

Last week, one Carl Swanson stole a span of horses from L. E. Larson, of East Grand Forks, took the team to Fertile and traded them for one horse. Sheriff Grundysen soon learned of the whereabouts of the team and went down and raked them in, whereupon the man in whose possession they were found organized a secret detective force consisting of himself, took after the man and by an unerring instinct followed him until he run him to earth, whereupon he resolved himself into a full fledged officer, arrested Mr. Man and brought him to this city. The $200 State reward for catching horse thieves will amply repay him for all the inconvenience he suffered in the deal.

A paper is in circulation asking the Great Northern railroad authorities to erect new depot and freight buildings this spring, in view of the fact that the raising of the tracks will necessitate some changes. Mr. E. M. Walsh makes an excellent suggestion as to a site for the depot with hotel in connection therewith; and that is to take the Sherman house property on the corner of Main and Robert streets, add enough to make 150 feet fronting Main street, thus acquiring a tract 150 by about 160. This would give ample room for a magnificent hotel and depot building and is not so very impracticable after all when you come to think of it. It would be a very graceful thing for the company to do.

A case of extortion was related to us last week by a citizen of Maple Bay which looks more to us like a case of downright robbery than anything else. A man borrowed a sum of money in the summer of '91 on what was called 10 per cent straight. He gave a mortgage for the principal sum bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, then a second mortgage to secure a note for 4 per cent of the amount, due November 1st '91. When the latter note became due he had not quite enough to meet it, and owing to bad weather had been unable to thresh, so he wrote the company stating the circumstances and promising to do his best to meet the note at an early day. A few weeks thereafter, not having heard from his first letter he wrote again but got no reply so he concluded everything was all right and got his threshing done just as soon as possible, sold his wheat and came down on Thursday to pay his note, and to his surprise found that the mortgage had been foreclosed. We call this about the meanest thing of the kind we ever heard of and it looks like a deliberate attempt to steal the farm or to cause the man a great deal of needless extra expense to save his little home from the sharks. It is such cases as these that sours the dispositions of most mortals and makes them regard everything as through a glass darkly, and there should be some remedy provided to prevent the possibility of like occurrences.

Bentson, L. D.	Knudson, Miss Julia
Olson, Miss Emma

Persons calling for the above please say advertised. WM. B. DAWLEY, Postmaster.

Read the noble letter of John D. Knudson, elsewhere in this issue. It makes one's heart warm to read such sentiments, as it convinces one that real genuine christianity is not entirely extinct in the heart of man. In stating the cases of these men whom THE JOURNAL seeks to relieve, John omitted to say that some of them have lost crop after crop until this disaster made the fourth crop totally destroyed, and now all they have left is their farms, their teams and an indomitable determination to try it again if they can procure seed and feed for their teams. They could in no way have gone through the winter without help from their neighbors and some of the business men of Crookston, who have given them groceries and provisions and clothing. If they can now secure grain to sow they have a chance to catch up and live amongst our people, but if they don't the most of them will be absolutely obliged to sell their teams, give up their farms and go to some new country and try it again. We have been trying to arrange with the Great Northern Road to ship all contributions from points on their line in Polk County, and we have assurances that this will be done, although the company has not issued official orders to that effect as yet. Mr. Knudson's suggestions are wise and timely and are just what are needed at this time to stir up an interest in this matter that shall bear excellent fruit. Why, can it be possible that for the lack of a few bushels of grain each, the farmers of Polk County will allow a few of their number to be driven out of the county? We mistake the material of Polk County farmers if it is.

AUCTION SALE.

The undersigned will sell at his farm in the Town of Roome, on Wednesday, March 16th, 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m., the following property to-wit: Four good work horses, 1 heavy mare with foal to an imported horse, 1 pair yearling colts, 2 cows, 1 heifer, 2 farm wagons, 1 two-seat spring wagon, 1 pair sleighs, 1 cutter, 1 16-shoe drill, 1 field roller, 2 setts harrows, 3 plows, 1 cultivator, 1 fanning mill, 2 mowers, 2 rakes, 1 sett blacksmith tools, 3 setts harness, household furniture, also 1001 other small articles too numerous to mention.

Terms—All sums of $5 and under, cash; on all sums over $5 time will be given until November 1st, 1892, on good approved notes bearing interest at 8 per cent per annum. A discount of 5 per cent will be given on all sums over $5 for cash. [46-47] CHRIS. KERN.

Mentor Items.

Our proprietor of the young Dalrimple farm who went down to Steele County last fall, has returned with a blooming bride and Messrs. Moe & Buhn's cigars were well tested. The boys say the cigars were all right, but if the beer don't soon come a storm might burst over Dalrimple before he expects it.

The new cottage at Mentor is drawing near completion. Pete promised to do the thing up brown. We can look for our oyster supper in due time. Brace up, Pete, don't get nervous.

We are expecting a lively time this coming summer on the banks of our Maple Lake. Lots of lemonade and ice cream for G. Deniston is rolling up the ice to beat the Dickens.

The underbrushing has been going pretty lively for the past two weeks, The brush or poles being hauled to various places on the prairie, to be burned at the time that best suits the jayhawkers, leaving room for business to start in earnest on the new town site.

We would like to hear a little more about the old man Kramer, whose death occurred a few days ago. If he was buried as a pauper or rolled in the ground like a dumb brute, or are the reports false?

Wood hauling has been pushing rapidly here this winter, but unless more snow comes the teamsters will have to strike at other work.

If you havn't room in the JOURNAL for the Mentor items you know where the scrap basket is.

MENTOR GRIP.

The Song of the Democrat.

BY FRED W. DAVIS.

PRELUDE.

When you chance to meet a dem. upon the street
He will draw you 'round the corner and kindly pay the treat,
And preach to you his politics and show you this and that,
And then wind up by singing "The Song of the Democrat."

SONG OF THE DEMOCRAT.

If you will vote for us next election,
We will diminish your tax
By rooting out the pension laws
And breaking old veterans backs.
We'll cause things to be cheaper
By putting in free trade,
And upon home industries
We will make a raid.

CHORUS—Which is joined by the bartender and red nosed gentlemen about the bar; also by a rich baritone in the shape of a prolonged howl from a scrawny, brindle bird dog at the door.

Oh! Yes! You bet we'll run things fine,
On that point do not fear.
We'll cross Mason and Dixon's line
And give the confederate cheer.
Oh! We're in for free coinage
And all the other schemes
That tend to destroy a government,
And rob the treasury's beams.
We want to put high tariff
On the things we do not use.
And put upon the free list
The things that we produce.

CHORUS—

We want our favorite, (Cleveland,)
Of old confederate fame.
To win a large majority
In the next campaign.
In short, we'd like to demoralize
This government's whole foundation,
And hand it over, "head and heels"
To the "John Bull" English nation.

CHORUS—

At the conclusion of this song the democrat politician proposes a horn in honor of the democrats' "golden calf," (figuratively speaking) which the red nosed gentlemen are not loth to accept, after which they all disperse and the baritone, with a satisfied expression on his face and a tear of silent joy in his eye, sneaks off down a neighboring alley.

The Republican State Central Committee met in St. Paul on Tuesday to set the day for the State Convention to elect delegates to the National Convention. The day fixed was May 5th. Polk County is entitled to 9 delegates.

BOON TO FARMERS.

They can get $1.00 per Bushel for Their Wheat by Running Alliance Mills.

BLAKELY, Minn., March 1.—J. H. Johnson, the owner of a 50 barrel flour mill here and a devotee of farmers' alliance doctrines has created a good deal of comment in this neighborhood by issuing a letter to the farmers urging them to organize a farmers' alliance milling association. He has printed and circulated thousands of his three column documents, the burden of which is to show that the farmers of the Dakotas and Minnesota have lost $28,000,000 on the wheat of the last crop up to the ninth of December, 1891. He then proceeds to show the farmers their folly in not building their own mills and thereby securing $1 per bushel for their wheat with a ton of feed per hundred bushels together with some minor advantages. Any community that can deliver 75,000 bushels of wheat, he says, can thereby keep a fifty barrel mill running for a year and the mill can be built for almost $7,000. That, Mr. Johnson says, will secure $1 a bushel for every bushel of wheat raised by the shareholders. Mr. Johnson would allow 50 cents a barrel for the handling of the flour, and the agents he would send abroad to dispose of it would be the farmers' sons.

OATS WANTED.

S. L. Dobson wants to secure all the oats in Polk County that are suitable for his business, for which he will pay the highest market price.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk, } ss.

You are hereby summoned to be and appear before the undersigned, one of the Justices of the Peace in and for said county, on the 31st day of March, 1892, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, at my office in the city of Crookston in said county, to answer to Nathan P. Stone and D. N. Taylor, co-partners as Stone & Taylor in a civil action. Should you fail to appear at the time and place aforesaid, judgment will be rendered against you upon the evidence adduced by said Nathan P. Stone and D. N. Taylor, co-partners as Stone & Taylor for such sum as they shall show themselves entitled to.

Given under my hand this 27th day of February, 1892.

McINTOSH, Feb. 26, 1892.

ED. JOURNAL:—In your issue of the 18th inst. I notice a communication from President H. G. Mitchell of the Polk County Alliance, in which he recommends that each sub-alliance appoint a committee to solicit aid to our unfortunate fellow citizens who lost their crops by hail last summer, and as a consequence of such loss are utterly unable, without aid from their more fortunate fellowmen, to proceed with the cultivation of their farms, and as a result will loose their homes. I heartily approve of Mr. Mitchell's recommendation and would add: Let it be done at once; let every sub-alliance appoint their committee and the committee take action in the matter immediately. There is no time to be lost; seeding time will be at hand soon. It is a noble idea to help the starving Russian, but when your neighbors need help I think it more proper that they should have your attention first. Another word: I believe that "charity should begin at home." These men who lost their crops last year, came here to build up this county and help you to bear the burden of taxation. They lost their crops last summer, you may loose your crop next summer or some other time in the future. No one fully realizes the situation these men are in until they have had a taste of it themself. All the business men in the county should take hold and help this matter along for the simple reason that the success of business men depends on the success of the tillers of the soil. If you are a minister of the gospel, you certainly should be the leading star in advocating this important necessity to your brethren. If you are a Christian take hold and do what you can and show us a little practical christianity, for it is this kind of christianity the world has been short of and needs to practice more in the future than what has been done heretofore. You may say: I am too poor to help any one; all I can do is to try and get along myself, and I cannot do anything for these people who suffered from hail. To these men I will reply that there is not a single farmer in Polk County (I mean those who did not loose any of their crop) but what they can give at least one bushel of wheat or two bushels of oats, if not any more, and if every one would proceed in this manner and do what they could, give as much as they could afford, it would be no difficulty at all to collect a sufficient quantity of grain to supply these unfortunate men with feed and seed so as to enable them to go on with their farming operations.

J. D. KNUTESON,
Sec'y Polk County Alliance.

Walter C. Lee has been prominently mentioned as a candidate for mayor at the coming election. Mr. Lee has been for some time a prominent citizen of this city and is a man thoroughly identified with her interests, a man of broad and liberal views and such a man as should at this time be at the head of our municipal affairs, and if Mr. Lee would accept the thankless position our citizens would do well to nominate and elect him. This is saying nothing against our worthy present mayor who has filled the office two terms very creditably to himself and the city.

World's Fair Notes.

A parade, participated in by 24,000 bicyclists, may be a sight at the Exposition. Efforts are being made to bring about that result.

The Pennsylvania coal operators want to construct a building entirely of anthracite coal at the Exposition, and to have 50,000 tons of best anthracite on exhibition.

Balsa Brothers, the largest cigar manufacturers in Mexico, will make an extensive exhibit at Chicago, in 1893, and Loring Olmstead, who has charge of one of the largest tobacco plantations in Mexico, which is the property of the Bank of London, and situated in the State of Puebla, will make a very interesting exhibit, illustrating "hacienda" life in Mexico. Mr. Olmstad was formerly an officer in the United States navy, and is a graduate from the Annapolis Naval Academy.

The horticultural department of the Exposition is planning to have a magnificent rose garden in which will be fully 50,000 plants, besides large groups in special areas. The garden will be of classic design with temples, arbors, archways and trellises.

A bill making a World's Fair appropriation of $50,000 and authorizing municipal and county authorities to make additional appropriations for the same purpose has been introduced in the Virginia legislature.

New Hampshire, as a delightful place of summer resort, will be demonstrated by a portion of the exhibit made by that State at the Exposition. At least such is the present intention, and summer resort proprietors, editors, railroad officials and others have been invited to a conference to decide upon the best plan for accomplishing that end.

A state World's Fair conference, presided over by commissioner Lindsay, was recently held at Louisville, Ky., with about 250 representative citizens present from all parts of the state. The Governor's recommendation that the legislature make a liberal World's Fair appropriation was unanimously indorsed and $100,000 was named as the sum deemed necessary for creditable representation. It was recommended that 15 per cent. of this sum be devoted to the collection of an exhibit illustrating the resources and history of the state with a view of first showing it at the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the admission of the state into the Union, to be held at Lexington, and afterward including it in the exhibit to be taken to Chicago.

Some Swiss painters, at Geneva, are painting a large panorama of the Bernese Alps, with the intention of bringing it to Chicago for the World's Fair. The panorama will measure 51 by 345 feet and cost $300,000. The sketches for the panorama were taken from the summit of the Mannlichen, 6,600 feet high.

The resources and industries of the state of Mineas Geraes, Brazil, will be shown at an exhibition which opens at Ouro Prato on June 15, 1892. The best of the exhibits will be brought to Chicago later.

The Governor of Dutch Guiana has appointed a commission of 13 to superintend the exhibit which that colony will make at the Fair.

A New York advisory committee of artists has been selected, which will pass judgment on the admissibility of American works of art offered at New York as exhibits at the Exposition. This committee embraces Eastman Johnson, R. S. Gifford, W. M. Chase, J. C. A. Ward, August St. Gaudens, J. G. Brown, H. Belton Jones and F. D. Millet, all of the National Academy.

The British royal commission for the Chicago Exposition is endeavoring to form a typical collection, illustrating British metallurgy for the British section, and it is now applying to owners and managers of metaliorgical works, asking for specimens of each of their principal metallurgical products, and also for specimens illustrating various processes. Dr. E. J. Ball, the instructor in assaying at the Royal College of Science, South Kensington, has undertaken to classify and arrange the collection which, when complete, will doubtless be fully illustrative of the condition of metallurgy in the kingdom. At the close of the Exposition the collection will be presented to an American museum.

The president of Ecuador has decreed that the governors of each state of the republic shall collect and forward to Quito exhibits of all kinds illustrating the riches and the productions of their several states. The Archbishop of Ecuador has issued an order to the bishops and priests throughout the republic directing them to do the same, and also to collect and forward everything which may be in their keeping illustrative of the history of the country suitable to exhibit at Chicago. The consul-general of the United States in Quito has directed the consuls and vice-consuls and consular agents at different points in Ecuador to assist the governors of states in every way possible in the matter of collection of articles relating to commerce with exterior countries. The entire exhibit so collected and exhibited in Quito during the National Exposition will be forwarded intact to Chicago.

A Berlin despatch states that Emperor William is greatly interested in Germany making a fine exhibit at the Exposition, and that he has personally urged Krupp, the noted gun-maker, and Schlutow, manager of the ship-building works at Stettin, to exhibit the latest and best products of their vast industries.

The Society for the promotion of Physical Culture and Correct Dress has applied for nineteen hundred square feet of floor space in the woman's building to make an exhibit. The exhibition by the society will be by means of statuary, photographs, pictures, and cases containing costumes. The application says as the aims of the society are educational it would prefer not being classed with reforms or charities.

A British woman's committee has been selected to superintend the representation of the work of English women at the Exposition, and to co-operate with the board of lady managers. The committee has for its president Princess Christian, third daughter of Queen Victoria, and includes the Marchioness of Salisbury, Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Countess of Aberdeen, Lady Churchill, Lady Agnes Buren, Lady Brassy, Lady Jeune, Lady Knutsford, Mrs. Fawcett, Mrs. Priestly, Mrs. Forsythe and others.

Robert Mitchell, Secretary of the Polytechnic institute, is in Chicago perfecting arrangements for 2,500 or 3,000 members of the institution visiting the Exposition. They will be brought over at the rate of 200 a week in parties of 50 in charge of a conductor, and will spend two days in New York, two in Washington, one at Niagara Falls, and six in Chicago. The expense per individual for the round trip will be about $115. The Polytechnic conducted similar parties to the Paris Exposition.

In the Washington State exhibit will be included a representation of the methods used by the Makah Indians in catching salmon and other fish. The exhibit will include boats, lines, hooks, seines, harpoons, etc.

The Connecticut members of the board of lady managers have undertaken to raise by contribution a fund with which to pay for a fine bust of Harriet Beecher Stowe. This will be their contribution towards the adornment of the walls of the woman's building. Copies of Mrs. Stowe's literary works will also be contributed.

It is reported from Argentine Republic that strong pressure is being brought upon that government to increase its World's Fair appropriation from $100,000 to $300,000.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

[Last publication, March 3rd, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of one hundred and thirty and 16-100 dollars, interest which is due at the date of this notice, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Alphonse Paridis and Elmira Paridis, his wife, mortgagors, to The Loan and Guarantee Company of Hartford, Connecticut, mortgagee, bearing date the 1st day of October, 1889, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 9th day of November, 1889, at 9 o'clock a. m., in book 48 of mortgages, on page 52.

And whereas the said The Loan and Guarantee Company, the mortgagee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage, and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of nine hundred and forty-six and 82-100 Dollars, with interest on nine hundred and twelve ($912) dollars thereof at the rate of seven per cent per annum from the 18th day of January, 1892, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-east quarter (ne¼) of Section thirty-four (34) Town one hundred and fifty (150) of Range forty-two (42), in Polk County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston in said County and State, on at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of nine hundred and forty-six and 82-100 dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty (50) dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

Dated January 18th, A. D. 1892.

NEWSPAPER LAW.

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office, whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for the payment.
2. If any person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.
3. In suits for subscriptions, the suit may be instituted where the paper is published.
4. The Courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the post office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, while unpaid for, is prima facie evidence of intention to defraud.

UP GOES TWINE!

AN ADVANCE OF THREE TO FOUR CENTS A POUND.

Bigger Profits for the Trust.

Last Year $1,400,000 Was Made in Clear Surplus.

WHAT WILL IT BE THIS YEAR?

The Advance Will Be An Additional Burden on the Farmers That Will Be Resented.

Minneapolis Journal:

Amid all the mists which surround this question of the supply of binding twine for the farmers of the Northwest, one ugly peak pokes up its head to-day. It is brought into plain view by the fact, developed by the Journal this morning, that there is to be a strong advance in the price of binding twine.

As a matter of fact the advance is already on, the price having been put up in the past few days. It will be advanced still farther before the wheat is ripening on the prairies of the Northland. During the fiscal year ending Oct. 31st 1891, the National Cordage Company which some of the interested parties are beginning to believe is a most healthy octopus, made a profit of $1,406,313.45, paying out $1,300,000 in dividends. This is on the authority of the company itself, and it is not likely that too large a profit would be announced. The indications are that the cordage company and the other companies not merged in that concern will be able to show a still larger dividend when the coming year's business is cleaned up.

Last year the farmers could buy their binding twine for from 7 to 12 cents per pound. This year they will have to pay from 10 to 15 cents per pound, and if it does not go higher than that they may consider themselves lucky. President Waterbury, of the National Cordage company, says in the report which he made to the annual meeting held in Weehawken, N. J., three weeks ago, after enumerating the absorption of a new establishment, and the consequent reduction in the cost of production;

"Through these advantages, secured by the control of many mills, and their management under one direction, the company hopes to be enabled to secure an increased margin of profit without increasing the prices of its product to the consumers."

Just how much there is in this statement may be gleaned from the fact, as above stated, that the price of binding twine has already advanced and will still go on higher.

The National Cordage Company now owns and controls 49 different plants. T. B. Lindsay, of Lindsay Bros., the representatives of the Plymouth Cordage Company, of Plymouth, Mass., a company which has not gone into the combine, admitted to a Journal man that the raise was on. He said that they had been advancing their prices for some time and were likely to still farther advance them. He said the fact was they had sold about all the twine already that they cared to; they didn't particularly care about selling any more. He paid his compliments to the Farmers' Alliance folk who propose to go into a combine of their own to secure a lower rate.

W. J. Dean, well known in agricultural circles, confirmed the reported raise. He said that his firm bought their supplies as they needed them. He was unqualifiedly opposed to gambling in binding twine as he was to gambling in wheat. Mr. Dean thought the advance would probably be from 3 to 4 cents per pound, at least, over what the price was last year.

While to the farmer of 50 acres the advance in price will not mean a very great extra expenditure of money, yet he will feel it just the same. No small farmer cares to have even a third increase in the cost of his twine. To the large bonanza farmers the increase is a matter of serious moment. It takes the merest novice in figures to see that if the National Cordage Company made a profit of over $1,400,000 last year, it won't be losing enough to reduce it to beggary when it increases the selling price of its product by from 20 to 30 per cent at no increase in cost. President Waterbury said at the annual meeting above referred to that $1,400,000 profit "merely represents the profits of the mills formerly owned by the company, whereas now its manufacturing capacity has been very largely increased and its earnings should be increased accordingly." Benjamin Seaward, the comptroller of the company, says that the results of the business for the past year has been "fairly satisfactory." For the next quarter ending Jan. 31st, the comptroller estimates that, after deducting expenses, rentals and all fixed charges, the profits will be found sufficient to pay the entire annual dividend of $400,000 on the preferred stock, a quarterly dividend o $250,000 on the common stock, "besides," he adds, "leaving a large surplus."

These facts the Journal has from an indisputable authority—the cordage company itself. These facts, taken in connection with the announcement that the price of binding twine is being advanced, add a significant chapter to the current cordage tale. As Minneapolis is one of the principal twine markets of the country the advance has a peculiar local interest.

THE NEW PARTY.

Midway News.

The third party struggle at St. Louis, this week; the bolt in the New York Democratic convention, and the wide spread dissatisfaction among Republicans regarding the high-handed manipulation of the self-chosen bosses, both in state and national politics, are all evidences of the process of disintegration now going on in political circles. The old Greenback party is breaking up; the Single Tax party is breaking up; the Woman's Rights party is breaking up; the Prohibition party is breaking up; the Farmers' Alliance is breaking up; the Republican planet has many times cast from itself its mugwumpish meteors, and now the old rock-ribbed and rock-bottomed Democratic world is giving signs of decay. This decay and this disintegration, however, is not a mere process of putrifaction, wherein the disintegrating elements at once lose themselves in space, but rather the decay of seeds in fertile soil which promise to bring forth new fruit. Careful observers outside the realms of the various political machines, commonly called parties have not failed to discover the alarming extent to which personal greed actuates their movements. These careful observers in all parties have noticed, in fact, that the most active men in their respective organizations but use the sacred principles underlying the foundation of the republic and the preservation of popular liberty as a means for the advancement of selfish ends, and hence the disintegration in all parties. These careful observers, to be sure, are themselves more or less divided among themselves on account of self interest, but they all realize that the preservation of the political authority within the hands of the people is the first essential to their own welfare and happiness, so that when they see one or two or three self-appointed leaders undertake to rule and govern regardless of the consent of the governed, they naturally rebel. This rebellion is now going on in all parties and in all sections of the country. It has been going on more or less for years, it is true, but one feature of it which must not be overlooked is the present tendency on the part of all the disintegrating portions to come together. The St. Louis meeting is but an aggregation of dismembered elements from the old parties. Some were broken off on account of the old parties' attitude in protecting the liquor evil; some were broken off on account of the old parties' partiality to the bondholders and national banks; some were broken off on account of the old parties' partiality to large employers of labor; some were broken off on account of the old parties' partiality to railroad, telegraph, warehouse and milling corporations, and still others were broken off from the old parties for the simple reason that they were not taken into the machine, there, and given an office. Thus we have the Prohibition party, the Greenback party, the Labor Union party and the Farmers' Alliance, each movement seriously impeded, however, by demagogical leaders who but use the honest sentiments of their followers as trading stock with the old parties. There are certain considerations underlying all this, however, that are worthy of attention.

1. The liquor evil appeals to the old parties for protection on account of the money there is in the traffic—it tends to concentrate wealth.

2. The national bank system, and our interest-bearing bond system upon which it rests, appeals to the old parties for like reason—it tends to concentrate wealth.

3. The consolidation of industry into few hands, and the subjecting of the employe to the employer, too, appeals to both of the old parties because it tends to concentrate wealth.

4. The railway, warehouse, milling and mining combinations also appeal to both of the old parties, and these, too, tend to the concentration of wealth.

The tendency of both the Democratic and Republican parties, then, as now constituted, is in the same direction—the concentration of wealth. The tendency of all four of the new parties, the Prohibition, the Greenback, the Labor Union and the Farmers' Alliance is in the opposite direction and lead toward the dissemination of wealth. Here, then, is found a fundamental principle upon which both of the old parties tend to unite on the one hand while all four of the new parties tend to unite on the other. Wealth gives power, and power enables one to acquire wealth. The concentration of wealth for the development of the earth's natural resources is popularly admitted as right and proper, because in that the masses share with capitalists the benefits of concentration. But the concentration of wealth for the mere purpose of obtaining arbitrary power over the masses is generally feared and will be generally opposed in this country. The abuse of the powers of wealth, in the hands of corporations as well as in the hands of crowned monarchs, is what causes dissatisfaction among the masses; dissatisfaction causes disintegraton from the old parties, until, after a time, as we observe to-day, the disintegrated parts unite and form a new party. If the old parties continue to make the acquirement of wealth and power the chief end of their endeavors, dissatisfaction will increase, the disintegrated parts will be forced to unite for the common good until a new party comes into power. The only hope of the old parties is to place such restriction around accumulated wealth as will keep it into legitimate employment, that is, as Andrew Carnegie says, keep it as a trust fund, in the hands of individuals though it be, for the development of such arts and industries as will promote the good of the whole. If the old parties permit wealth to be squandered in extravagant and luxurious dissipation, then a new party will come in power. The liquor evil must be abated; the cupidity of the bondholders must be restricted; the cruelty of the employing classes must be controlled and the monopolistic tendencies of the channels of transportation must be governed. Upon the course of the old parties on these questions depends the rise of the new party. If the old parties do not meet the popular demand on these essential points statesmen will some day arise, brush off the vagaries and extravagancies put forward by the shallow demagogues now at the head of the disintegrating forces, reorganize them upon a solid basis, and lead them into power. The old parties have reached their crisis. They must either leave off their narrow scramble for spoils and offices and rise to the dignity of true statesmanship or suffer themselves to be supplanted by a new party.

The Phrenological.

The new speaker in the house of representatives leads in the Phrenological Journal and Science of Health for January. He looks the characteristic commonly ascribed to his surname. Dr. Lowber talks well but briefly on Moral Science Made Practical, and a good description of the ancient Syrian methods in art and industry, with illustrations, follows. Dr. Amariah Brigham figures as one of the immortals who helped along in the early days of American Phrenology. A right noble looking man was he. A poem on February is about the average magazine verse. How Phrenology Saved Her Reputation appears to be a true sketch, and A Teacher's Testimony is in a similar vein. A Review of Phrenological Doctrine is the work of a scholar, the social and selfish faculties being considered. Governing Children, On Using Both Hands, and Let Us Live with our Children are conspicuous features in "Child Culture." Modern Football is practically and sensibly scored by H. S. D. Why a Vegetarian and The Little House are right to the point, and the latter deserves special circulation all through the country. If its advice were opeyed there would be little grippe. The Noteam Phrenology show a clever hand in selection and arrangement; they are very instructive. And so, for that matter, are all other departments of this admirable number of the veteran monthly. Published at $1.50 a year, 15c. a number. Address the publishers, Fowler & Wells Co., Pubs., 777 Broadway, New York.

The March Wide Awake is a timely and attractive issue of the favorite magazine. Its frontispiece, illustrating Miss Brastow's characteristic story of "A March Mood," capitally suggests the lingering snow of the departing winter, and there are March pictures and poems suitable to the season. The most important illustrated discriptive articles are Mrs. Stanton's brief but interesting description of Gray's Forest—the famous tract of the Burnham Beeches near to London, and the quaint churchyard of Stoke Pogis, where the writer of the immortal "Elegy" was laid away, and Miss Eliza Rubamah Scidmore's capital account of a visit to the palace of a Chinese noble. To this she gives the Chinese title, "Chin, Chin, Huana Ta-ta!" and the "Chin Chin" will be enjoyed by old and young alike, so delightful a glimpse is it into a high-class Chinese home. Mrs. Harriet Maxwell-Converse concludes her entertaining chapters on Iroquois life with a spirited account of the Indian children's "Fire-Fly song"; Lieut.-Col. Thorndike contributes to his series of "One Man's Adventures," an account of his startling experience "As War Correspondent," when his sagacious dog saved his life, and Mrs. E. F. Bonsell tells of the elephant's bath at the Philadelphia Zoo. A bright and spirited story is one by Mrs. Edith Perry Estes, well known among Boston newspaper women, entitled "My Spanish Princess." Rebecca Mays Nadal tells a capital historic tale of King James V. of Scotland, under the title, "The Goodman of Ballengiech;" Margaret Johnson has a girl's story, "The Red Necklace," to which Jessie McDermott has given some quaint, old-fashioned pictures; Mary Catherine Crowley also tells a frontier story of two generations back, "The Lost Darning-Needle of Fitzroy," which Miss Kirk has furnished with a pleasing picture; and there is a humorous story of "How Joey Rang the Bell," by J. T. Harbour; a funny account of an encounter between "A Boy and a Bear," by Caryl D. Haskins, and also one of the over-confident young Oriental, whom people called "I know." The serial stories, "Jack Brereton's Three Month's Service," by Maria McIntosh Cox, and "The Lance of Kanana," by the entertaining story teller who conceals his identity under the Arabic "Abd el Ardavan," are both of them absorbing, and one scarcely knows which is the more exciting—the suspense that filled the Brereton home (as it did so many others) after the defeat at Bull Run, or the remarkable ride across the Arabian desert to deliver the caliph's message to Kahied the Invincible. The poetry in the number is from such verse-makers as Herbert D. Ward, who sings of the loyalty of a beautiful Collie; Elsie Kendall, who has a capital doll poem, "The Woes of Noll;" Jane Ellis Joy, Mary Catherine Crowley, Clara Doty Bates and others. The Men and Things department is full of entertaining things worth remembering, while the Odd Business Paper by Mr. Bridgman introduces the reader to the wonderful "Museum of Marvels." There is reading matter enough, and pictorial matter enough in the Marck Wide Awake to last the boys and girls for a long time, for everything in the magazine is worth the reading and the re-reading which its army of admirers will give it. Wide Awake is published at 20 cents a number, $2.40 per year. At the newsdealers. D. Lothrop Co., Publishers, Boston.

One of the remarkable features of the Exposition will be a series of religious congresses from August 25th through the month of September, 1893. The chairman of the general committee, Rev. John Henry Barrows, of Chicago, has associated with him members of sixteen different religious organizations. They have invited the representatives of all the great historic religions to confer together and to show what light religion has to throw on the great problems of the age. Their plan has met the approval of Mr. Gladstone, Cardinal Gibbons, the poets Holmes and Whittier, Archbishops Ireland and Ryan, Professor Drummond, Professor Godet, of Switzerland; Rabbi Maybaum, of Berlin; President Washburn, of Robert College, Constantinople; Justice Ameer Ali, of Calcutta; Bunyin Nanjie, a learned Buddhist, of Japan, and scores of the leading scholars of America and Great Britain.

Popular Talks On Law.

BY WM. C. SPRAGUE, ESQ.

THE MERCANTILE AGENCIES.

In a former article I pointed out the law in New York, and that which is generally followed, to be that the reports of mercantile agencies are privileged communications, exempting them for liability for statements otherwise libelous when, and only when, such reports are made to subscribers having an interest which the law will recognize in the information given; and this interest must be more specific than that which subscribers have in all persons reported, and must be an interest in the particular concern or business concerning which the report is made.

The rule is the same where the reporus are made in cipher.

The mere statement in a printed report that persons interested in a certain person named are invited to call at the office of the agency for information, and nothing more, is not libelous.

A New York case in 1888 decides that a false agency report, to the effect that a judgement has been rendered against a person, naming him, is not libelous per se, and that, without proof of special damage arising therefrom, the agency is entitled to a verdict, the argument of the judges being that this of itself is not sufficient from which to infer unsoundness of financial condition.

On the same theory a Maryland case holds that to publish falsely of a man that he has given a chattel mortgage is not libelous per se, without proof of special damage.

A United States Court case arose in 1867, where the question at issue was whether the defendant, Tappan, could employ in his office some twenty clerks who had access to records in which were written items affecting the credit of merchants, the business of these clerks being to copy these records and communicate their contents to customers in answer to inquiries, and still enjoy immunity from liability on the ground of privileged communications. Justice Nelson, delivering the opinion, observed, that if the defendant himself had communicated the report in good faith and to a proper person, it might have been privileged, but the publicity given the report in the defendant's office by recording it in a book to which others, though clerks, had access deprived it of its privileged character. Courts generally, have refused to accept this doctrine, and it may be considered as settled that the agency may use any number of clerks necessary to the transaction of its business, and the recording of information in books to which such persons have access, does not deprive the communication of its privileged character.

For cases upon this subject we refer to Beardsley v. Tappan, 5 Blatchf. (U.S.), 497; King v. Patterson, 49 N. J. L., 417; Erber v. Dun, 4 McCrary (U.S.), 160. It would seem that in Canada the law as to the liability of mercantile agencies is the reverse of that in this country.

It seems to be held that no report by an agency is a privileged communication whether made to an interested subscriber or not.

Viewed in the light of the general trend of decisions made in our courts, it would seem that Judge Cooley, in his work on Torts, has stated the law incorrectly in saying that "if one makes it his business to furnish to others information concerning the character, habits, standing and responsibility of tradesmen, his business is not privileged, and he must justify his reports by the truth."

Dr. Francis Wharton has perhaps erred in the other direction when he states that communications when made to subscribers, are interested in the communication or not. The subject will be pursued further in our next article.

Through misinformation a "World's Fair note" recently stated that the Island building would combine the architectural features of the present capitol building and of the one formerly used at Newport. Such is not the case. The structure will combine the features of the "old stone mill" at Newport, which is of unknown origin and which is alluded to in Longfellow's "Skeleton in Armor," and those of the "Arcade," a business building in Providence erected about 65 years ago.

Connecticut held an enthusiastic World's Fair meeting at Hartford on Washington's birthday, ex-Governor Waller presiding. A committee of sixteen, two from each county, were appointed to look after the State's representation at the Exposition. Sixteen lady managers were also chosen. Subscriptions being called for, $50,000 was pledged on the spot. It is expected that the legislature, when its deadlock is broken, will reimburse the subscribers.

County Commissioner Stortroen's wife died last week.

The old familiar rattle of wagons is again heard in the land.

The case of Wentzel vs. Charron was decided in favor of the plaintiff.

N. B. Soper, of Andover, secured a team of those fine mares of Brown last week.

If you want people to know what you are doing advertise your business in THE JOURNAL.

Teachers examinations this week in the school house, on the corner of Main and Fifth streets.

The case of McManus vs. Halvorson, on trial last Thursday, was decided in favor of Halvorson.

Will Waggoner come up from Fisher last week to see that carload of mares and bought a pair of them.

Misses Nellie and Abbie Brewster, of Fisher, were in the city this week attending the teachers' institute.

With this kind of weather threshing can soon be resumed in earnest and lots of it done before spring's work.

Comrade Snyder says he saw more mud during his two weeks sojourn in Indiana than he sees here in a whole year.

Mr. Welter, the new proprietor of the Herriott farm at Beltrami, purchased two span of those fine mares at Brown's last week.

The democrats have called their convention for March 25th, at the court house. Had an idea they would forego that luxury this trip.

H. Buchholz, of Heiberg, Norman Co., writes us that he intends to go to Idaho this spring. Mr. B. was formerly a prominent citizen of Fertile.

Harmon Osterloh, of Euclid, bought a fine team of mares of M. R. Brown last week. He went everywhere to look and went to Brown to purchase.

E. E. Abbott was in from Grove Park last week and gave THE JOURNAL a pleasant call. Mr. Abbott reports much sickness in that town this spring.

If this fine weather don't catch cold we may reasonably expect an early spring. Snow going off rapidly and the river shows signs of breaking up.

Adolph Wentzel, of Fisher, was waiting for the arrival of that carload of mares at Brown's and bought a pair almost as soon as they were unloaded.

Ed. M. Peterson was down from Fosston last week and dropped in to square up on subscription account. Ed will go back to the town of Roome to live this spring.

W. C. Lee was adjudged insane and taken to Fergus Falls last week for treatment. While the case is extremely serious his many friends here are hoping for the best.

In the past week subscriptions have been coming in nicely. This gives us encouragment in our work. We wish all could appreciate fully how much help it really is.

Mayor McKinnon returned on Friday morning from a three months visit to Canada. With him came Dr. Watson, who will hang out his shingle and try life in Polk County for awhile.

T. McLennan, one of the leading farmers of Angus, bought a span of those mares of Brown last week. The best farmers all go and see what Brown has got to offer before they buy.

E. M. Walsh:—"No very large deals in real estate to report this week, young man, but I have some irons in the fire that will surprise you later. That is all I can say at present."

Our Maple Bay correspondent did nicely as long as he held out, but as the Dutchman said when his wife died "he lasted too quick already." Don't get weary in well doing. Let us have some more.

Those horses that S. L. Collins spoke about in last issue arrived all right and S. L. invites all who are looking for GOOD horses to call and look his over. If it is a cheap plug you want don't call at Collins' barn.

Dan. McDonald sports a regular Scotch cap. In it Dan. looks every inch the braw' Scot he is. It is said that Mayor McKinnon brought that cap back with him from the old country, though we can't say how true that is.

See Brown for choice work horses at reasonable figures.

The 15th of March is rapidly approaching and one or two to whom we wrote requesting an answer by that time will comply with our request OR THAT OF SOME OTHER MAN. A word to the wise should be sufficient.

We should like to hear from a few more farmers on that seed wheat business. Is it possible that this matter will be permitted to go by default? We ought to have four or five times as much on our list as appears there.

S. B. Palmer was up from Lockhart and sold one gasoline engine to be delivered as soon as it can be shipped from the factory in Chicago. The Lewis gasoline engine is said to be the best engine of the kind in the market.

If this proves to be the opening of spring it is just what the country needs. If farmers can get to plowing in a short time and keep at it the unfavorable fall weather will be counterbalanced in a measure. Let us hope that such will be the result.

Comrade C. Snyder and wife returned last Friday morning from their sad visit to the old home. Her father had died before their arrival and they only arrived in time to attend his funeral. Comrade S. says grip seems more fatal down there than here.

Having been practically laid up with La Grippe for the past two weeks our correspondence has been necessarily delayed. If our friend at Euclid will send us in a few items, as suggested, his request will be cheerfully complied with just as soon as we can get around to it.

Mayor McKinnon:—"I have good reason to believe that improvements for our city are under contemplation that will be worth thousands to the city. That is all I am at liberty to disclose just now but I can say bide in patience a wee bit time and you will see movements that will rejoice your heart."

Miss Emma Verronneau left for Chicago on Tuesday evening for goods for the new firm and expects to be gone about a week. While in Chicago she will thoroughly post herself up in all of the latest styles and be ready to supply the ladies of Crookston and vicinity with everything needed in millinery.

The Great Northern road ships wheat free for the Russian sufferers but don't seem willing to assist in aiding cases of destitution on its own line. With their assistance enough grain could be raised to help out those who lost their all in the great storm of last summer but without it it will be impossible.

Chas. Vine has taken possession of the old Jacobus building, fitted it up in elegant shape and moved his meat market therein. He is now ready to greet his many patrons and friends at the new stand and to supply all their wants in his line. When you want a choice steak or roast call on Charley.

Dr. Just went out to the residence of Aaron Cooke, in Fairfax, on Sunday, to attend to Mr. C. who was threatened with pneumonia. As Mr. Cooke is a man over 80 years old, much apprehension was felt until the doctor pronounced it a mild cold and gave him some medicine that helped him to get around all right.

Last week an individual was about the streets offering to sell a flute at a very low figure and finally did sell it to J. S. Stadsvold. One person to whom it had been offered saw the name of D. H. Beecher on the flute and wired Beecher, who answered requesting that the chap be detained. On Monday Chief Hennessy came over and got the enterprising flutist.

It is rumored that the Alliance has asked Judge Mills to be an independent candidate for re-election as judge. If that is so that is where their head is level and if he should not decide to do so why not endorse him anyhow? We opine that the Judge, if he runs for the office will be a mighty hard man to beat anyhow, as there seems to be no opposition to him in the district.

On Tuesday evening it set in to rain and rained quite hard until 9 or 10 o'clock when the rain turned to snow, accompanied by a high wind. On Wednesday morning the wind was still quite high, various and sundry signs were found out of place and a few fronts and chimnies suffered somewhat. Up to the hour of going to press we have heard of no further casualties.

S. L. Collins will sell you a good team right. Everybody who knows Collins, knows that he buys only good horses and that he sells at reasonable figures. In fact Mr. Collins' reputation is at stake in his business, a fact that he well knows and will do as much to protect as any other man. Our home dealers are the men to trust. Collins is a home dealer.

S. Waring, of Excel, Marshal Co., was in the city last Wednesday. He is one of a company that purchased a Clydesdale last year and they want to engage a good groom for the coming season. Mr. Waring has an idea that a cheese factory would pay in his neighborhood and is talking of putting in one. We can see no reason why such an institution, properly managed, should not pay well.

Speaking with Mayor McKinnon on the mayorality question, he said: "You may say to your readers that I am not a candidate for re-election, and while I feel grateful to the citizens of Crookston for the manner in which they have stood by me, I feel that my private business demands more of my personal attention than I can give it if in a public office. What I would like to see would be to have our people sink every other consideration in the effort to bring to the front and elect some live, stirring man, one who is fully alive to the interests of our city and I will take off my coat and work to elect such a man. I shall still retain my interests in Crookston and shall in the future, as I have tried to do in the past, work for the advancement of her best interests."

M. R. Brown arrived from Iowa on Thursday evening with that carload of mares, mentioned in our last issue, and they proved to be fully as good as recommended, at least we should judge so from the fact that on Saturday afternoon, less than two days after their arrival, every one of them was sold, and those who went to Brown's stables on Monday to purchase were disappointed and will have to await the arrival of the next lot which will be some day next week.

Duluth News: There has never been any such thing as a "billion dollar congress." Democratic falsehood is the only ground on which that charge can rest. But it can be demonstrated with mathematical accuracy that there is a five-cent Democratic house now in session—one that while running at an expense of over $7,000 a day puts in such costly time debating propositions to reduce the appropriation for soap and saddle blankets for the cadets at West Point.

Mr. M. R. Brown started on Tuesday night for Iowa after two carloads of horses. It seems as though he could not keep up with the demand but he says he will give it an awful good try if there are enough good horses left in Iowa to do it. He is very particular when buying to get only the best and only such as he can take a just pride in recommending. When you buy of Brown you never get left.

Ole Meldohl was down from Drayton, N. D., last week. Ole has had a severe time with his knee for six or eight months but is now able to travel on it. For awhile last fall it was feared that he would have to suffer the amputation of that leg but happily that calamity was avoided and Ole is a happy man. He says he can secure wheat contributions for the hail-sufferers here, among his neighbors and that he intends to do so.

The Criterion Company played their engagement in the city last week and then played out. One serious mistake they made was playing a week. They should have selected one good play, thoroughly learned that, dispensed with their prompter and tried one night stands. It is said that the manager lit out Saturday evening leaving the company to get out as best they could—and the walking ain't very good either just now.

Mr. Hammond and Frank Ward, of Bismarck, were in the city this week and gave THE JOURNAL a pleasant call. They expressed great pleasure at what they saw of our city and say that they see no reason why Crookston should not become the leading city of the Red River Valley, when the pine upon the Reservation is thrown upon the market. They were very favorably impressed with the showing we have made and predicted a great future.

Invitation to everybody to attend service at the Congregational church next Sunday. Rev. R. H. Battey will preach at 11 a. m. on "The Gulf Stream of Christ's Religion." Union services in the evening, in which four churches unite. 6:30 p. m. sharp young people's fraternity meeting, led by Mr. Battey; 7:30 platform temperance meeting—speakers Mr. A. A. Miller, Mr. Robert Stanton, Mr. McCaslin and Rev. J. J. Edwards. The members of the four church choirs are requested to meet for rehearsal on Saturday evening at 8 o'clock in the parlor of the Congregational church. The parlor will be thrown open to the main audience room for use on Sunday evening and a large company can be cared for. A warm welcome for all. Let us have a grand meeting. Young men, especially, invited.

We are determined to get better acquainted with the owners of one or two names we have on our list. If they cannot appreciate the gentlemanly treatment they have had at our hands we have an idea that there is a kind of treatment that even they can appreciate. We are very loth to adopt that method but we can do it if forced to as we are determined to be better acquainted with these people. There is still time to save unpleasantness of any kind. We only ask for honest treatment and we consider that we are fully entitled to that.

In an interview with a JOURNAL reporter Mayor McKinnon said that he had enjoyed a very pleasant visit at the old home although he was kept very busy answering inquiries in relation to this country and, said he, "I expect to see more people enquiring for lands in Polk County this spring than ever before. I was surprised to find out how well Crookston has been advertised. When I was there on a visit several years before, very few knew where Crookston was, anyhow; now everybody seems to know a good deal about it. To the Great Northern railroad company belongs much of the credit for this state of things. Mr. Whitney has managed this business during the past winter and it has been well done. I saw evidences of his work everywhere I went. If every one of the agents received the encouragement that I did we may expect an overwhelming tide of immigration within the next three months."

A New Millinery Firm.

Miss Emma Verronneau and Mrs. Thomas Adams have entered into a co-partnership and will shortly open a millinery store probably on Second street. Mrs. Adams is a lady possessing excellent taste and judgment which eminently fit her for the business, and as for Miss Verronneau, it is needless to introduce her to JOURNAL readers who have known her since she was a resident of Crookston. For six years she has been trimmer for Mrs. E. E. Bangs and we venture the remark that there are none better in the business. She is thoroughly competent and an expert in her line. THE JOURNAL wishes the new firm abundant success and feels confident that they will achieve it.

England Under Protection.

New York Press.

When the commanding position of England in manufacturing is adduced as evidence of what free trade has done, it should not be forgotten that her supremacy in this respect was attained through stringent protection to all her industries. Take the linen manufacture for example. From an old book printed in Edinburgh in 1783, entitled "A Collection of the Acts of Parliament Now in Force Relating to the Linen Manufactures" we learn that a royal bounty of a penny a yard was paid on English and Irish linens valued from 6d. to 12d. a yard by act of Parliament in 1748.

In 1748 British subjects were prohibited from importing or wearing foreign cambrics and French lawns under a penalty of a fine of £5 for each offense. The same penalty applied to those selling or offering for sale the foreign fabrics. In 1769 additional duties from a farthing to 2d. per ell were levied on foreign linens and a penny a yard was added on Holland white lawn. It was further provided that £15,000 per annum should be devoted from the revenue derived from these duties to be paid in bounties for the encouragement of raising and dressing hemp and flax in the kingdom.

This is only one instance out of hundreds recorded on England's statute books. In short, the United States never had anything like the prohibitive duties under whose shelter Great Britain's great industries took root, flourished and attained maturity. It was under protection that England became supreme in manufacturing. Since she adopted free trade she has relinquished the palm to her protected American rival.

NATURAL BORN.

Rather inclined to be pretty,
Rather inclined to be good;
Rather inclined to a vague, undefined
Feeling of sweet sisterhood
Toward the young fellows who love her;
When they have asked for her hand.
Rather inclined to a vague, undefined
Feeling they don't understand.
Fact is, this maiden can't help it;
Natural born coquette.
Rather inclined not to make up her mind
To marry, that is, not just yet.
Sister she'll be to them all, and Loving, and faithful, and true:
Rather inclined round her finger to wind
About—say a dozen or two.

THE MAN SHE LOVED.

"AND you married me," her husband said, quietly—so quietly that Elizabeth was startled.

She treated his words as a question.

"I don't know why! I was wretched—I wanted to leave home—to see new sights, new faces. I wanted some one to help me forget that I had given my heart to a man who did not care for it."

"And so you married me," Mark Evelyn said again.

Six hours before that they had stood side by side, vowing to cleave unto each other while their lives lasted. Their wedding had been a noted one. Mark Evelyn was the "catch" of the season. Elizabeth Gilman was much envied when her engagement was announced. She had no great gift of beauty or talent—she was not in her first youth—had been "out" for five years. But Mark loved her from the beginning of their acquaintance and rejoiced when she promised to be his wife.

Mark Evelyn's nature was a noble one; selfishness had not the slightest place in it. Heretofore he had deserved little credit for this; the best things in life had always come to him; he had never been disappointed, was an adored son and brother, a general favorite in society. Without being in the least conceited he knew his power and worth. And now this woman he adored—his wife—had told him that she did not love him.

Elizabeth sat miserably before her husband. He noted everything about her—the way her soft wrapper clung to her form—just how she held her hands—clutched, not clasped. The little pain lines about her mouth hurt him so. Her eyes were cast down—her face looked dead. Mark felt sure that her heart was saying: "Life is all over for me."

"Elizabeth," he said, slowly and kindly, "you have done yourself a great wrong. You should have told me all this yesterday."

"You did not ask me if I loved you," began his wife, half defiantly.

"I did not think it necessary, dear," he answered. "I believed you incapable of marrying one you did not care for."

Elizabeth shivered. She felt that she deserved this and more. But Mark never reproached her again.

"A few hours ago you promised to honor and obey me," he continued after awhile. "Will you let me shape your future? You married me to enable you to forget. May I help you? Do not tell me that man's name; it will not mend matters. You want to leave home—to make a new life for yourself—you shall do so. We will stay in California—I have interests there. If I thought you would be happier away from me I would leave you. But I know you would not. Our separation might give rise to a scandal. You would have to bear the burden of blame. I will be your husband only in the eyes of the world; but I can protect you and be your friend. I have the right to ask what I please of you, Elizabeth, and I ask this."

Thus was formed a strange friendship.

A year later Mr. and Mrs. Evelyn occupied a suit of rooms in a San Francisco hotel. They were a model pair—quite the talk of the house. After a whole year of married life this husband continued to spend his evenings with his wife. He gave no little dinner parties, frequented no clubs, participated in no innocent flirtations—seemed scarcely to be aware of the many beautiful women who were ready to smile upon him and his wealth.

The dead look in Elizabeth's face had gone, and so had the pain lines about her mouth. Day after day she acknowledged to herself that she had never been as happy as she was now.

There was nothing Mark could do that he did not do for her. He lavished his wealth upon her. She had no petty annoyances and enjoyed complete liberty. She had no moods to contend with in her husband. If Mark had faults he never displayed them before her. Her life was like a beautiful dream. Every little attention was hers—her very wishes were anticipated.

Mark studied her tastes, her ideas on every subject. They were entirely congenial. Both were devoted to music and art. They practiced and sang together. They loved books and read the newest and best of literature.

Elizabeth was fond of flowers. Mark brought her fresh ones every day. He never bored her with his society, and yet he never left her too much alone. Every day Elizabeth had some new thing to be grateful for.

Mark never approached her with lover-like attention. He was her friend and appeared satisfied with things as they were.

One day in her husband's absence Elizabeth went into his chamber—their bedrooms were on either side of their parlor. She found there a photograph of herself; the following poem was pasted on the back of it:

Oh, love is weak
Which counts the answer and the gains,
Weighs all the losses and the pains,
And eagerly each fond word drains
A joy to seek.
When love is strong
It never tarries to take heed,
Or knows if its return exceed
Its gift; in its sweet haste no greed
No strife belong.
It hardly asks
If it be loved at all! To take
So barren sums, when it can make
Such bliss for the beloved sake
O. bitter tasks!

Elizabeth cried bitterly as she read. Yes, Mark's was the strong love and she was not worth it. Why could she not love him? She did, dearly, after a fashion; she revered him and was grateful for his goodness to her. But the old passion for the man who had not cared for her was still alive. She could not pretend what she did not feel.

She felt very humble. If she could only do something for him! In the beginning, when she first realized how he intended to treat her, she had begged him to be less kind—to put her away from him. She never forgot his reply:

"If you could be happier away from me you should be free. You say he does not want your love. I want at least your friendship, your comradship."

The opera house was packed. Bernhardt was giving a performance of "Cleopatra." In one of the boxes sat Mr. and Mrs. Evelyn, and many were the opera glasses directed towards them.

Elizabeth was lost in the play. She listened breathlessly to the passionate words of the queen. It was thus she could love. At that moment her eyes wandered from the stage and fell upon the upturned face of the man for whose sake she had made kind Mark's life so barren.

"Are you ill, dear?" whispered her husband—he was quick to note every change in her,

The next day Elizabeth was able to control herself, when Mark said:

"There is a Mr. Hugh Whittill here from your home. He asked my permisson to call."

How could she tell her husband that this man was his rival? So Mark brought temptation into his wife's life.

Hugh Whittill was not a villain in the usual sense of the word. He had admired Elizabeth Gilman, but could not afford to love, much less marry, a poor girl. She had not hidden her likings for him. He was not above flirting; there would be no danger to himself now—she was a married woman.

Mark treated Whittill cordially, invited him often to drive and dine with them Elizabeth observed towards him cool politeness.

This course of conduct caused Hugh Whittill to think he had loved her very desperately in the past, after all, and loved her still.

One evening the three were at the Cliff House. Mark went to order some refreshments; Elizabeth stood on the end of one of the long galleries, watching the waves.

The crowd had dispersed, the last car had departed.

How grand the ocean looked! So endless! It reminded her of one thing—Mark's love for herself. She remembered the poem on her photograph:

When love is strong
It never tarries to take heed.

"A beautiful thought," said Hugh Whittill, who had approached unobserved: "You were thinking that this great endless-looking ocean is like a strong love?"

Elizabeth's heart beat violently. Her cheek flushed deeply. Hugh noticed this and went on eagerly:

"And it is, Elizabeth, like mine for you! Why did you not wait for me? Why did you not know that I loved you?"

The next moment was like a year to Elizabeth. This man had occupied her heart for the last six years; she had believed he would occupy it forever; for his sake she had put aside her husband's noble affection that spent itself so generously upon her—taking nothing, giving all.

After all this weary time of craving what she had wanted might be hers under altered conditions, and could it be that she did nor care because morally it was out of her reach.

She was shocked for a moment, then a prayer of thanksgiving burst from her soul. She knew what it meant—she loved her husband!

Her heart grew lighter at each breath. She felt like laughing in her delight. She turned to Hugh Whittill

"I was thinking of my husband," she said. "His love for me is like that ocean—only wider and deeper. And mine for him is like it, too—thank God!"

When Mark returned she went to his side and took his arm, and he wondered what had made her so glad.

That night, when they reached their sitting-room, Elizabeth went to him.

"Mark," she said, "I have something to tell you. Will you help me?"

She put her hand into his. As he clasped it he felt how it trembled.

"Do I not always help you, my dear?" he said gently.

"Mark, Hugh Whittill was the man I told you about, and he did not care for me after all."

"Mark's heart felt dead. This, then, was what had brought the gladness to her eyes.

"I understand," he returned. "You shall be free."

He turned to leave the room. But Elizabeth called to him:

"Mark! Mark! Don't you see how it is? I don't want to be free! I want—"

But she was sobbing so that she could no longer speak.

"What is it, dear?" said Mark eagerly.

"I want you, Mark. I love you!" And without waiting for him to come to her she ran to him and threw her arms around his neck.—Waverly Magazine.

THE OLD WOMAN REMEDY.

It Was Effective, but It Didn't Have Much to Do.

"In reading the newspapers," said a man, speaking to an acquaintance, "we sometimes come across a simple remedy that we find to be of great benefit. The old woman remedy admits of no explanation, and doctors hoot at it, but it is sometimes found to be of great efficacy.

"I'll give you an instance: About three weeks ago I saw a paragraph stating that a handful of cold water applied to the back of the head every morning will prevent toothache. Of course I couldn't see any reason why it should, but I began to try it, and haven't had the toothache since that time."

"That is really quite remarkable," the acquaintance replied. "But tell me, did you have the toothache before you tried the remedy?"

"Well, come to think of it, I didn't. Hump, I thought there was something incomplete about it."—Arkansaw Traveler.

THE FARMER'S COLUMN.

VALUABLE SUGGESTIONS ABOUT FARM WORK.

How to Make an Asparagus Bed.

What a time used to be made over the preparation of an asparagus bed, to be sure! Deep and laborious trenching and cartloads of manure, involving a great amount of heavy toil and large expense, were deemed essential to success in raising the succulent vegetable. But most of this was entirely unnecessary, results as satisfactory being obtained at a little of the expense and very much less labor.

It is true, however, that the land for an asparagus bed cannot be too rich. It must also be free from stagnant water, dry and warm. If at all inclined to be wet, it should be tile-drained—in fact, it would be well to underdrain in any case.

If it is desired to have an asparagus bed quickly, plants should be purchased, not more than a year old, if they can be obtained, as vigorous, well-grown plants of that age are as good as those of two years' growth, and less apt to be stunted.

But those who have an asparagus bed already growing, and want to plant another, can afford to wait a year and raise plants of their own. Asparagus seed should be sown in rich, mellow earth early in the spring, in rows about fifteen inches apart. They should be an inch apart in the rows, and covered about an inch deep.

The first season's care consists simply in keeping the soil mellow and free from weeds. The following spring the plants should be set out in the permanent bed prepared for them.

It is some trouble, of course, to raise one's own plants, and causes the delay of a year if one has not, a bed already. But it is the best way, provided proper care is taken of them, to get plants, because they will usually be better than those obtained in the market; and besides they can remain undisturbed in their original bed until the time arrives for transplanting.

One of the most important points to be observed in setting out the plants is to give them plenty of elbow room. They will give better crops and provide them earlier in the season than if closely crowded. As these suggestions are for farmers, with whom saving of space is of less consequence than saving of time and labor, we would advise making the rows not less than four feet apart and setting the plants two and a half to three feet apart in the rows, so as to admit of cultivation with a horse hoe both ways. With so much space in which to grow, the roots, if strong at the beginning, will make a vigorous growth.

It is not now considered essential, nor, indeed, advisable, to set the plants as deep as was formerly recommended. Three or four inches is deep enough. Mark off the rows at the distance indicated above with a common corn marker, and set the plants where the lines cross, carefully spreading out the roots and "firming" the soil above them. As the plants are to remain a long time, it is worth while to do the job thoroughly and well.

Asparagus is a wholesome and agreeable vegetable, and every farm should have a bed of it for home consumption. But, grown in the practical way above described, it may be made a source of considerable profit, for large, tender asparagus shoots command a good price in the market. The best quality is always sure of a quick sale at a handsome figure.

Plowing Experiments.

This is one of the practical questions which must be determined by each farmer for himself, or by one enterprising farmer for his neighborhood, when the same conditions exist over the same locality.

One farmer, whose experience we noted some years ago, seemed to throw absolute discredit on the theory that deep plowing is best, especially in a dry season. He prepared half an acre with great care, manuring heavily and subsoiling to the depth of sixteen inches. After harrowing thoroughly, he thought the tract was in the best possible shape for giving a fine crop. Another contiguous half-acre, which he had not time to prepare in the same way, was equally well manured, but plowed only two inches deep and given an extra harrowing.

Both tracts were planted to corn, which came up well, and for the first month there was no apparent difference between them. Then a severe drought began, and by the close of July the shallow-plowed part was far ahead of the other. August was dry, and at the end of the month the deeply-plowed tract was suffering badly, the leaves becoming yellow nearly up to the ears, while the other half acre suffered but little. It grew rapidly, and made the best crop of corn on the place or in the neighborhood.

The surface soil in this case was a light loam, quite rolling with a yellow clay sub-soil thirty feet deep, jointed and well adapted for draining.

On the other hand, an Illinois farmer gives it as his experience that deep plowing is the condition of success with him. A neighbor who plows not deeper than three and a half or four inches for corn, gets from ten to thirty bushels per acre, on land of the same quality as his own. He, on the contrary, plows from six to seven and a half inches, and realizes from fifty-three or four to over sixty bushels to the acre.

These illustrations show the necessity of careful experimenting on the part of every farmer to determine for himself such questions of method. He cannot depend upon the conclusions of some experiment station a hundred or a thousand miles away, as we have frequently pointed out, although we must not be understood as disparaging in any degree the work of those generally useful institutions.

The farmer who goes on, year after year, working his land in the same rut, and resting satisfied with an average of eighteen or twenty bushels of corn per acre, when, by a change of method, he can, with little, if any, additional labor or expense, secure fifty or sixty bushels, is doing a very foolish thing, because, if he only wants so much corn, he can get it from a smaller area, and with actually less labor than by old-fashioned methods.

As a rule, we believe that deep plowing will yield the best results, year in and year out, especially when combined with a thorough system of under-draining. Such exceptions as the one above noted serve mainly to "prove the rule." But let every farmer test the matter for himself, and thus determine whether his soil is one of the exceptions.

Feeding Straw to Cattle.

The philosophers tell us that a good sized cow must eat 140 pounds of straw a day to support life and as a cow cannot chew up and ruminate this amount of straw it is easily seen why cows are always in such thin flesh when compelled to live on a straw stack. Indeed it is about as much as cows can do to retain their flesh in cold weather on a feed of all the first-class hay they can eat. This, however, is not saying that straw has not its uses in feeding. The feeding value of straw will depend upon the kind of straw and the condition in which it was cut. We never thought much of oat or rye straw for feeding purposes but wheat and barley straw make an excellent ration when cut short say in inch lengths made wet and mixed with corn meal and bran. This of course is the ration for cows in milk, and straw in such a ration is just about as good as ordinary hay, especially the straw of barley that has to be cut green to prevent the grain from shattering out. If it was not for the barbs on this straw that make it disagreeable to handle and sometimes dangerous to the eyes of the cows, we would just as lief have it as the ordinary quality of hay.

Success Depends Upon Little Things.

Success in honey producing always depends on an infinite number of little successes. If we can imagine that our apiary of 100 colonies represents a great factory of 100 hands, every one of them being perfectly drilled and equipped, and capable of performing a certain amount of work, we can see how it is when one to three or more colonies become demoralized, right at the beginning of a honey-flow. The aggregate business suffers in proportion to the small failures. If we prepare an apiary of 100 colonies of the best strain for the honey harvest, we will have to manage them with more than ordinary skill, if more than 15 per cent of them do not waste their time and opportunities, sulking in great clusters on the front of the hive, or by indulging in excessive swarming, or refusing to stay anywhere long enough to settle down to business. Perhaps no apiary can be managed at times so effectually as to wholly prevent loss from the causes I have named, but by the proper knowledge of the nature and habits of bees, this loss can be reduced.—G. H. Kirkpatrick, in the Indiana Farmer.

Dairying in Denmark.

Is it true that the Danes have trebled the yield of milk in that country in three years with the same number of cows. To be modest in our assertions, we simply do not believe it. They have, however, done wonders in this direction, but that is not saying that they have performed miracles, which they would be doing to treble the yield in three years with the same cows. How low down they were in the scale when they began to improve we have no means of knowing, but to make an increase of one hundred per cent. annually for three years is simply impossible. The fact probably is that while there has been a considerable increase in the amount of butter made, it probably has not been more than a third or a half more than originally, but the quality has been improved so as to make it sell for perhaps three times what it originally did. What the "three times" figures really mean, in all probabilities, is that Denmark now exports three times as much butter in value as it did three years ago, or just before the improvement began. The whole world is indebted to that little country for the light she helped to throw upon the science of butter making.—American Dairyman.

About Salting Butter.

Salting butter in the churn is one of the unsolved problems. Lots of people say they do it and tell how they do it but others say they can not do it that way and get enough salt into the butter to suit customers. It is generally conceded that salting in the churn is always very light salting, from one-fourth to a half ounce of salt to the pound of butter even though an ounce and a half is put in at the start. Then again how about the second working? Do you do it or not and if not how do you keep the butter from becoming mottled? These are the points that trouble those who succeed to their own satisfaction. Some people do succeed to their own satisfaction but not to the satisfaction of others. So far, for instance, as the amount of salt that can be got into granular butter the limit seems to be one half ounce, as that is all the brine will hold that is depended upon for carrying the salt. That amount is not always enough.

A Practical Suggestion.

A correspondent to Practical Farmer says: Few farmers know that a fine crop of rutabagas can be grown on the potatoe patch. The old way is to sow strap leaf turnips; but I think one bushel of rutabagas worth four of turnips. On a half acre of potatoe ground, after last hoeing, I sowed two ounces seed of Purple Top Swede, and when digging the potatoes, I was careful to hoe the dirt out around the roots. It did not take four hours longer in digging the half acre. I have taken from the patch 100 bushels of fine potatoes, and 75 bushels rutabagas. This is better than raising a lot of watery turnips.

A woman who can see. She's the woman who gets well. It's the woman who won't see and won't believe who has to suffer.

And it's needless. There's a medicine—a legitimate medicine—that's made to stop woman's suffering and cure woman's ailments. It's Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It's purely vegetable and perfectly harmless—a powerful general, as well as uterine, tonic and nervine, imparting vigor and strength to the whole system. For periodical pains, weak back, bearing-down sensations, nervous prostration, and all "female complaints," it's a positive remedy. It improves digestion, enriches the blood, dispels aches and pains, melancholy and nervousness, brings refreshing sleep, and restores health and strength.

No other medicine for women is guaranteed, as this is. If it fails to give satisfaction, in any case, the money paid for it is refunded. You pay only for the good you get. On these terms it's the cheapest.

But more than that, it's the best.

A Smelling Contest.

One of the new games is the smelling contest. From eight to a dozen different bottles, filled with odoriferous liquids, are prepared by a druggist and then numbered. Then each person who enters the contest is given a card with corresponding numbers printed thereon. The contestant takes a whiff at each bottle and writes down the name of the contents. The one naming the most of them correctly sets the prize. There is said to be an immense amount of fun connected with the game, as it is more difficult than one imagines to correctly name even well-known liquids of strong odor by the sense of smell, as after trying three or four bottles confusion generally follows.—Philadelphia Record.

The Light of Other Days.

The day when man first discovered how to supply himself with artificial light must be very far back, but many generations went by before he had anything better than torches for out-door use, and for in-door conveniences a wick floating loosely in a vessel of oil. Gas as an illuminant is not old, the electric light is the invention of yesterday, while there are thousands of people not yet three score and ten, whose youthful lessons were learned by the feeble gleam of a tallow candle. In the country households, the manufacturer of a weekly or monthly supply of candles came as regularly as wash day. The soldiers of the late war remember "star" candles very well, but doubtless few can tell whence the name. The discoverer of a process to separate glycerine and fatty matters from stearic acid in the making of candles was the Frenchman DeMille, whose factory at Paris was located at the "Barriere de l'Etoile"—"barrier (or gate) of the star," and from this circumstance his manufactures were known as "star candles. The days of such illuminators are gone, and the luxurious cars of our modern railroads are lighted by gas or electricity. To many eyes, however, the electric glare is unpleasant, but all are satisfied with the soft yet brilliant illumination of "The Burlington's" vestibuled train by the Frost Dry Carburetor System. Is highly gratified with Hood's Sarsaparilla. He was badly run down, had no appetite, what he did eat caused distress and he felt tired all the time. A few bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla effected a marvellous change. The distress in the stomach is entirely gone, he feels like a new man, and can eat anything with old-time relish. For all of which he thanks and cordially recommends Hood's Sarsaparilla.

March It is very important that during the months of March April May the blood should be thoroughly purified and the system be given strength to withstand the debilitating effect of the changing season. For this purpose Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses peculiar merit and it is the Best Spring Medicine.

"August Flower"
"I am ready to testify under oath that if it had not been for August Flower I should have died before this. Eight years ago I was taken sick, and suffered as no one but a dyspeptic can. I employed three of our best doctors and received no benefit. They told me that I had heart, kidney, and liver trouble. Everything I ate distressed me so that I had to throw it up. August Flower cured me. There is no medicine equal to it." LORENZO F. SLEEPER, Appleton, Maine.

HOME AND FRIENDS.

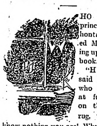
There's a power to make each hour
As sweet as heaven designed it;
Nor need we roam, to bring it home,
Though few there be that find it.
We seek too high for things close by,
And lose what nature gave us;
For life hath here no charms so dear
As home and friends around us.

We oft destroy the present joy
And future hopes nor praise them.
While flowers as sweet bloom at our feet
If we'd but stoop to raise them.
For things so fair still greater are
When youth's bright spell hath bound us;
But soon we're taught that earth has naught
Like home and friends around us.

The friends that speed in time of need,
When hope's last reed is shaken,
Do show us still that, come what will,
We are not quite forsaken.
Though all were night, if but the light
Of friendship's altar crowned us,
'Twould prove the bliss of earth was this—
Our home and friends around us.

—New York Ledger.

PRINCESS POCAHONTAS.



"WHO was the princess Pocahontas?" asked Mabel looking up from her book.

"Humph!" said lazy Ned, who was lying at full length on the hearth rug, "what a know-nothing you are! Why, she was old Powhatan's daughter, and she saved Capt. Smith's life when he was captured by the Indians."

"Not so fast, Master Ned," said a voice behind them, and Aunt Marion came into the circle around] the firelight.

"Very well. I will tell you about this same Pocahontas, about whom Mabel knows nothing, and Ned nothing definitely.

"Pocahontas was an Indian girl. Now, we speak of all red men as Indians,' but the Indian race is divided into many tribes by reason of blood-relations and difference in dialects. Pocahontas belonged to one of the largest divisions, the Algonquin tribe.

"At the time of Capt. John Smith's episode with Pocahontas certain of these Algonquin tribes of Virginia were joined together in a sort of Indian republic, composed of thirty tribes, scattered through central and eastern Virginia, and known to their neighbors as the Confederacy of the Powhatans,

"This name was taken from the tribe that was strongest and most energetic in this tribal union and that had its villages along the broad river known to the Indians as the Powhatan, and to us as the James.

"The principal chief of the Powhatans was Wabunsonacook, called by the white man Powhatan.

"He lived in the Powhattan village of Wero-Wocomoco, and into this village came an Indian runner one day with important news.

"As he came in his headlong race down between the two rows of bark houses in which the Indians lived, he saw around the many camp fires built between the rows of houses groups of Indians lolling, and between the fires Indian children turning somersaults.

"On he went, dodging past them until at last by one of the fires he saw sitting the chief, Wabunsonacook. It was to him that the message was to be delivered, but before Rabunta, the runner, could stop in his wild flight, one of the youthful gymnasts came whirling down the path toward him in a succession of dizzy handsprings.

"There was a sudden collision. The stout little feet of the tumbler came plump against Rabunta's breast, and so unexpected was the shock that runner and gymnast tumbled over together in a writhing heap on the edge of the fire.

"There was a great burst of laughter as the Indians shouted: 'Twa, wa, Rabunta! Knocked over by a girl.'

"Rabunta, picking himself up, discovered it was Mataoka, the daughter of the old chief, who had collided with him.

And the old chief said, half-sternly, half-tenderly, 'My daughter, you have well-nigh killed our brother, Rabunta, with your foolery. That is scarce a girl's play. Why will you be such a Pocahontas?'

"This is the Algonquin term for a little 'tom-boy.'

"But Mataoka, then a ten-year-old maid, laughed and nimbly dodged out of reach of both her father and Rabunta.

"Then Rabunta delivered his message. Capt. John Smith had been captured and was even then being brought to the council house.

"This was indeed important news, and preparations were at once made to receive him when he arrived. He was greeted with the customary Indian yell, and then a bountiful feast was spread before him.

"The Indians seldom killed prisoners and this pale-faced warrior was too important a personage to be other than well treated.

"Wabunsonacook, the old chief, received him as an honored guest, kept him in his own house and adopted him as his own son. After two days he returned him, well escorted by Indian guides, back to the English colony at Jamestown.

"Smith's own words are: 'Hee kindly welcomed me with good wordes, assuring me his friendship and my libertie.'

"This rather destroys the old familiar romance which Ned quoted about the captain being saved by 'the king's own daughter,' but it is the only true version of the story, based on Smith's own report.

"But although she did not rescue him, nevertheless his attention was drawn to this agile, clever little Mataoka, whom her father called his 'tomboy' or Pocahontas.

"Now, it was one of the singular customs of the American Indians never to tell their own names or allow them to be spoken to strangers. The reason for this lay in the superstition which held that the speaking of one's real name gave to the stranger to whom it was spoken a magical and harmful influence over the person.

"So when Smith asked the old chief—known to the colonists by the name of his tribe, Pawhatan, rather than his own name, Nabuns[illegible]ook—for this very reason he hesitated and then gave in reply the nickname by which he so often called her. Pocahontas—the little 'tomboy.'

"Thus it is that you have always heard of Pocahontas, instead of Mataska, and of Pawhatan instead of Wabunsonacook.

"Well, Pocahontas and Capt. Smith became good friends, and this friendship stood in good stead in the days to come.

"Mataoka used to go often to Jamestown, and I'm afraid she fully deserved her pet name of 'Little Tomboy,' for we are told by one Master William Stracley, secretary of the colony, that the 'before remembered Pocahontas, Powhatan's daughter, did sometimes resort to our fort, of the age then of 11 or 12 years, did get the boys forth with her into the market-place, and make them wheele, falling on their hands, turning their heeles upward, whom she would followe and wheele so herself all the fort over.' From which it would appear that she could easily 'stunt' the English boys at making "cartwheels.'

"But there came a time very soon when she came into Jamestown for other purposes than turning somersaults.

"The Indians had learned to distrust the white men, and I daresay they had good cause.

"Discontent grew into hatred, and at last a plot was arranged to kill the 'great captain' and destroy the colony.

"Three times they attempted to entrap him and his people, but each time the little Mataoka, full of friendship and pity for him, found means of warning her white friends of their danger.

"Of one of these warnings there is an old record that tells how, as Smith sat in the York River woods one night, where he had come for conference with the old chief, and where he was then awaiting provisions promised by the Indians, there came a light step on the dry twigs, and a slender figure glided out from the shadow into the light of the camp fire into the midst of the men, who recognized in her the Indian maid, Pocahontas.

" 'Be guarded, my father,' she said to Smith. "The corn and provisions will come as promised, but even now, my father, the chief of the Powhatans, is gathering all his power to fall upon and kill you. If you would live, get you hence at once.'

"The grateful captain thanked her and pressed a pocket compass into her hand.

" 'My daughter,' he said, 'you have again saved my life, coming alone and at the risk of your own life through the irksome woods and in this gloomy night to admonish me. Take this from me and let it always tell you of the love of Capt. Smith.'

"But, much as she desired this wonderful 'path-teller,' she handed it back.

" 'Not so,' she said, 'if it should be seen by my tribesmen they would kill me for they would know I had warned you. Stay not to parley, my father, but be gone at once.'

" 'And with that,' says the record, 'she ran away by herself as she had come.'

"Soon after Smith left the colony, worn out by the continual disputes, and Mataoka went no more to Jamestown, deeming it unsafe in the absence of her best friend.

"She seems to have been wise in her fear, for in 1613, she being then about 16, she was captured by the bold and unscrupulous Capt. Angall and held as a hostage for the friendship of Powhatan.

"She had been married three years before to a chief, Kokowni, who had been afterward killed in battle.

"During her captivity she met John Rolfe, a young Englishman, and married him.

"He protests he married her for the purpose of converting her to Christianity, and ungallantly calls her 'an unbelieving creature.'

"Well, they lived happily together and finally went to England. Here, all too soon, when she was but 21, the daughter of the great chieftain of the Powhatans died.

"Her story is both sad and pleasant, and is romantic enough without any of the additional romance that has been thrown around it, that Ned has learned.

"The white race has nothing to be proud of in its conquest of the Indians. But out of the gloom which surrounds it there come some figures to relieve the darkness, wretchedness and crime that make it so black.

"And not the least impressive of these is the bright, gentle, fearless little daughter of Wabunsonacook, chief of the Powhatans, Mataoka, whom we of this later day know by the nickname her loving old father gave her—Pocahontas, the Algonquin."—N. Y Recorder.

Oratory In America.

Senator Spooner deplores the decadence of oratory in the United States. "Good orators are scarce in this age," he complains, "and it is to some new man that we must look for great ability on the rostrom." Well, we have Ingersoll, Depew and Dan Dougherty left, a matchless trio, while Breckinridge of Kentucky and Ingalls should not be forgotten. There are certainly twenty Americans prominent in public life who, if their diction lacks the classic polish and stateliness that characterized the orations of Summer and Clay and Calhoun, nevertheless possess the wit and words, the action and utterance, that Antony longed for to sway men's minds. And among the young men who are figuring largely in politics there are eloquent speakers such as Baily of Texas, Sherman Hoar, Governor Russel and Josiah Quincy of Massachusetts, Doliver of Iowa, and half a dozen others whose present performances promise future fame in the forum.—New York World.

His Last Sensible Speech.

Almost every man learns, sooner or later, to think of his doctor as one of his best friends, but this fact does not hinder the world from laughing at "the profession."

"How is our patient this morning?" inquired a physician.

"Oh, he is much worse," answered the sick man's brother. "He has been delirious for several hours. At two o'clock, or thereabouts, he said. "What an old woman that doctor of mine is!" and he hasn't made a rational remark since."

WHITHER!

What, without asking, hither hurried whence?
And, without asking, whither hurried hence?

—Khayyam.

Fire!

A dream, strange, complex, terrible. A murmur which grows to be a roar. Fiery eyes, sardonic, revolving in a drift of fog; a shriek shaping itself from out a chorus of mad laughter into the word:

Fire!

And a man awakes, and sitting in his bed grasps a quick succession of ideas. A hotel room, dingy, commonplace. The first hour of a last day. And from the street beneath breathes fort a volume of sound never before heard but in a dream. Yet it is no dream.

Life. It lies behind him honestly lived in the sight of men. It has been an indomitable struggle for right and rest and home.

Home. That place which he had won and where love lived. When a few hours before he had laid his head on his pillow he had whispered:

"I shall be at home to-morrow!"

The future. A shallow chance. Suddenly he springs erect. In grim haste, yet in a certain business-like fashion he throws open his door. Smoke blinds him, and one glance suffices to show him the elevator shaft a chimney of flames. He closes the door, secures it, and throws a traveling rug before it to still further obstruct any draught beneath. Then he springs to the window and opens it. It is no dream. There they are, the sea of faces, reddened and made demoniacal by a something of which as yet he can see nothing, though his ears hear its muffled voice, crackling, whispering, hissing. It is behind below and above him.

He turns and hastily dons a few garments, securing a roll of bills and some papers. Again he appears at the window.

"Don't jump! Don't jump!" bellow the crowd beneath him. He smiles, and wonders how they could think he would be so reckless, for he is five stories above their heads.

Of course it will be all right. He will escape. He sees the firemen, the ladders, the water spouting from the serpent-like coils of hose. He hears the cheers, mighty, sonorous, which greet each rescue.

When shall his turn come? They had best make haste. For what is that? Through his keyhole a fairy spiral is stealing. At first, sharp, delicately outlined, yet after a few curves dissolving mistily.

Smoke!

And as he watched he saw his traveling rug become obscured, then sheets of mist stole slyly through each crack about the door. The window! It was open, and increased the haste by which Death would—might—come to him. He sprang nimbly out upon its sill. It was broad and strong, he noted with relief. He sat upon it and deliberately pushed the sash down, leaving only a small space through which he could still reach within the room or return if necessary.

A great shout was thrown upward by the crowd. Help was coming. But as yet he could not see how. How sincerely he invited the poorest and meanest on in the sea of humanity down there in the street! As he sat he saw a thing go hurling past him so closely that he felt the current of air it made in falling. It came from the window above him. "An abrupt groan from the multitude told him where it struck. No! He would not jump he would burn first.

And then he turned his strained eyes into the room he had just left. The bed, the chair on which his clothes were spread were hidden now by a dull pall of smoke. Suddenly a little laughter of flickering light rushed merrily up one side of the framework of the door. Another minute and the flame grew into a square of fire. Hideous, relentless, it danced about, seizing the tawdry furnishings of the hotel room in its amorous embrace.

"I have tried to be square! God knows if there is a God—I have tried to be square!" broke from the man's white lips.

Then there came a puff—a sensation of warmth, a scarcity of air for his lungs—and the smoke began to caress him where he sat outside upon the window ledge. Inch by inch it was forcing him from his position. Yet, he would not jump. Never! he told himself, recalling the groan which ahd come from the crowd when that other somebody who was not happily out of it all had given up the fight.

Turning slowly, with the tempered muscles of an athlete, he let himself down, hanging by both hands to the inner part of the window casing. In this position his face was brought below the drift of smoke, and it was easier to breathe. He wondered what the people in the street gave such a shuddering cry for.

Cautiously digging with his bare toes into the narrow support of some ledge beneath, he shifted his weight to feet and one hand, while he sought to lower the window still further with the other—anything to shut of that awful draught on whose wings destruction traveled.

"I've tried to be square!" again he muttered, and closed his eyes.

Suddenly something swayed against him limply, and a mighty shout rose from beneath. He opened his eyes. There it was—a rope. They had failed to reach him by a ladder. It had been a long time coming. It was hanging from the roof, held away from him by the cornice, and they were swinging it toward him that he might grasp it. Could he?

A mad clutch and it was his. A twist about one wrist, a grip as of steel with the other stiffened hand, and he whirled out into space like a child's rubber ball on a bit of a string. As he did so there was a sharp sound of breaking glass, and forked tongues shot out as if in rage at his escape.

"I've tried to be square!" he said once more, and after that he felt no fear.

Not even as he heard the dozen sharp contradictory voices calling out hasty orders. Not even when he saw little fiery sparks dance about the spiral of coarse hempen rope.

Not even then, though he knew at once that it was all over, and watched until the last twist gave way.

"No feeling below the waist," said one of the hospital physicians.

"And no suffering at all. Tell Mary that—be sure and tell Mary that," he added, who lay on the cot.

"Poor fellow! God help you!"

"God? I don't believe in God. I wish I could. I've tried—but I couldn't. Is a man to blame for that, doctor?"

"I don't know! I don't know!" whispered the doctor hastily.

"How long, sir."

"Not—long. Is there anything you request? Any—message?"

"No. I always took time to think. I always did tht best I knew how. I never hurt any one meaningly. I've always tried to be square. It's queer, isn't it? No pain. Yet—I'm done for."

"Is there nothing I can do for you?"

"Yes, one thing—lie for me. You see —she—Mary—believes in—hell—and heaven—and harps—and all that. I wish I could—but I can't. What can a fellow do when he simply can't—though he's tried to? I was brought up to believe in nothing. Would you be willing to tell her that I died—converted—and easy in my mind?"

"I will, my boy."

"You see it couldn't do any hurt—and it will do her heaps of good. I know her. She'd think I was in hell—sure. And would a cigarette hurry it any?"

"No."

"Then give me one."

But before it was finished he said softly:

"God—if you are God—forgive me. I've always tried to be square. But —I couldn't believe."

And so went away—somewhere. Who doubts it?—Johanna Staats in Truth.

NOT SO FUNNY.

People Laughed at and Then Sympathized With the Married Man.

The other day a well-dressed man sat in a Boulevard car going up town. The day was cold, the car was full, and the usual discomforts of surface transit were turned on. The man mentioned was the observed of all observers. He carried a common black muff on his knees, his hands thrust in either end, and had a far away look in his eyes. The ladies exchanged amused glances. The gentlemen regarded the muff with various degrees of wonder and contempt.

"Newest style," suggested one gentleman to another.

"Yes; it's going to be a cold day tomorrow. When you see the pigs carrying straws"——

"That beats me!" came in a stage whisper from across the way.

"Wonder if he wears corsets," said another.

"What is it anyhow?"

"Sorry I forgot my muff."

"I'll steal my wife's sealskin sacque tonight."

"Poor fellow! Somebody ought to see him home safely."

Amid these remarks, says the New York Herald, the man with the muff sat quietly looking out of the window. He must have overheard some of them, he must have known that he was the object of universal curiosity and ridicule, but he gave no sign. It appeared, however, that he was only collecting himself for some final effort, for when he arose to leave the car at Seventy-second street he suddenly confronted his fellow-passengers.

"This is my wife's muff," he said, bluntly. "She left it on the bargain counter. I had to go back and get it. I'm taking it home. If you see anything funny in that, I'm d—d if I do."

A Plant Growing From a Caterpillar.

The curious fungus which is sometimes taken from an insect is a fungus that roots itself in a caterpillar and grows from it, feeding on the body of the insect. Of course in time the insect dies, and the fungus then perishes as soon as it has exhausted the nutriment in the body of the caterpillar. The plant is of the same nature of a mushroom, and when it matures it produces pores by which new plants are propagated in the same way, attaching themselves to any insect that comes in contact with them in the soil. Those curious plants are used as medicine by the natives of some parts of Asia, where they were found quite abundantly. The plant, when dug out of the ground, has the exhausted and dried body of the insect attached to it in the manner of a root, but it is easily distinguished by its shape. The insect is filled with the substance of the fungus, and appears as a part of the plant. A variety of beetle that is found in North America is attacked by the same kind of fungus; others are found in Central America, and others in New Zealand. In the last-mentioned country the fungus is very large and has all the appearance of a mushroom which is eaten as food by the natives.

Prevention of Nervous Headache.

A scientific writer says sleep, if taken at the right moment, will prevent an attack of nervous headache. If the subjects of such headache will watch the symptoms of its coming, they can notice that it begins with a feeling of weariness and heaviness. This is the time that a sleep of an hour or two as nature guides will effectually prevent the headache. If not taken just then it will be too late, for after the attack is fairly under way it is impossible to get sleep until far into the night perhaps. It is so common in these days for doctors to forbid having their patients roused to take medicine, it they are asleep when the hour comes round, that the people have learned the lesson pretty well, and they generally know that sleep is a wonderful p[illegible]tive of disease—better than to[illegible]lators and stimulants.

A Promise From Mr. Isaac Pitman.

Mr. Isaac Pitman, the inventor of phonography—the system of shorthand by means of which the bulk of the speeches of the English race the whole world over are to-day reported—has just passed, hale and hearty, his eightieth birthday, and in acknowledging the many congratulations he has received, he promises his devotees—and they are many—that he "hopes to repay them by not lessening the number of his days on earth by overwork, as many men who have undertaken an important mission have done." Such a promise is most amusing coming from a man who for forty years never took a holiday, and worked winter and summer from 6 a. m. till late at night, and who even now is one of the first to reach his office in the morning.

THE TAX MAN.

He Drops Into the Mail Composing Rooms and Interviews a Printer.

The tax man was around seeking whom he might devour, and in the course of his perambulations he wandered into the Mail office and ran plump up against a printer man named Kenio Gitt. The tax fellow seized the printer man before he could escape, and demanded:

"What's your name?"

"Gitt," responded the compositor.

"I won't do it!" shouted the Assessor,; "I demand your name, sir."

"Gitt, I said!"

"I won't! I want your name, sir, before I budge an inch."

"Well, Gitt, then!"

"Confound your impudence!" and the Assessor's face grew as red as a boiled lobster; "if you don't give me your name I'll have you arrested!"

"I tell you my name's Gitt—G-i-t-t!"

"Oh! Excuse me. Now, Mr. Gitt, have you got any jewelry or plate—"

"Never use any plate matter."

"Any furniture—"

"Some down in the job office, sir, used for locking up small forms."

"Any firearms, coin or other money, or any—"

"Fireams? Coin? See here, old fellow, I guess you've struck the wrong man; the foreman's the chap you want to see. Tell you what—on the quiet, now mind you—he's got a whole boxful of quoins over there under the table; and as for the firearms, he's got the dandiest kind of a shooting-stick lying up there on the the gravel-stone slab where the type's put. But don't let him know I told you."

The Assessor slipped over to the foreman, and explanations followed. He left then saying he'd hire and expert printer man to come around and help him out.

DIED IN AGONY.

Parisian society has been much shocked at the fearful death of the Marquise de la Valette. Three months ago the Marquise was standing in front of her dressing-room cheval glass, putting the finishing touches to her toilet, preparatory to going to a dinner party, when the ornamental tissue paper shade which covered one of the candles caught fire, and the burning fragments fell upon the light and airy costume in which she was attired. In an instant the Marquise was in flames; her maid rushed to her assistance and also caught fire. The shrieks of the terrified women brought the Marquis and some of the footmen upstairs, and all united in their efforts to put out the flames. The maid's dress was soon extinguished, but that of the Marquise, together with all her underclothing, was reduced to a cinder.

For three long months she suffered tortures. Even had she recovered, the doctors say, she would have presented an appearance almost painful to behold. All her good looks had departed, and nothing but a seared and scarred remembrance remained of the once lovely figure which moved with such queenly grace through the drawing-rooms of Parisian society. The Marquise died in the most horrible agony, all the efforts of the most accomplished physicians having failed to induce the burned flesh to reassume a healthy growth. General sympathy is expressed for the Marquie de la Valette who is equally as popular as was his last consort.—N. Y. Press.

STORY OF ITALIAN DIPLOMACY.

During a visit to the south of Italy, a young Englishman was introduced to a fashionable gathering by a Neapolitan cavalier. While there he had his gold snuff box taken from him. Next day he was at another evening party, when, to his surprise, he saw a gentleman present take out his stolen snuff box and help himself to a pinch. He quickly strode up to his friend and said:

"The gentleman over yonder is taking snuff out of the very box that was stolen from me yesterday; do you happen to know him?"

"Hush!" answered the cavalier in a tone of warning; "he is a person of high rank."

"What do I care?" exclaimed the Englishman. "I want my snuff box back and mean to call him to account!"

"Come, don't let us have a row!" gently entreated his friend; "leave the matter to me, I will get the snuff box for you."

At these words the Englishman "simmered down" and went home. On the following day, sure enough, his friend brought him the stolen article.

"How did you recover it?" inquired the Englishman.

"Nothing of the sort," said his friend with a laugh. "I wished to avoid a disturbance, and, therefore, I simply stole it back again from him."

TAUGHT HIS DOG TO STEAL.

A Philadelphia Youth and His Intelligent "Pal."

There are many unauthenticated instances of animal intelligence and depravity. The following story is from the Philadelphia Record, and is as near authentic as such a story well can be:

"Magistrate Hackett recently held Charles Blaney, Port Richmond, in $500 bail for a further hearing on the charge of being the owner of a dog which he has taught to steal. The other day while some boys were skating on a pond near the Aramingo Canal, Blaney came along in a wagon, stopped in the middle of the bridge and liberated a large black dog. The dog dashed down among the children and seized a bag containing a pair of rubber shoes belonging to Jerry Kelly and started toward his master. Officer Holland saw the trouble and arrested Blaney."

INSINCERITY OF POLITICS.

Ex-Collector "Tom" Murphy, once a familiar figure in Washington, is here for his first visit to the capital in eight years. Talking to a reporter he grew reminiscent and said:

My first visit to Washington was when Seward was Senator from New York, and that was about the time he made his 'higher law' speech that attracted the attention of the whole country. 'While a young man I was very intimate with Seward and his family. I lived in Albany when he was Governor, away back in the '30's. My first visit to the Senate was for the purpose of hearing him speak. He made a great speech. He was replied to, as I felt, in the most bitter and insulting language by Senator Foote, of Mississippi, and the language that he used was so offensive, in my judgment, that I could hardly restrain myself from jumping from the gallery and choking him. I dined at Senator Seward's house that evening, and to my utter amazement the gentleman sitting next to me was Senator Foote. When the ladies retired from the table I left my seat and went around to Seward and said:

" 'Senator, I heard that man sitting next to me at your table, abuse you in such a gross manner that I was indignant. I can't understand it.'

"Senator Seward laughed heartily and called out:

" 'Foote, I want this young man to go around and tell you what he has just told me.'

"Senator Foote also laughed heartily and said to me:

" 'Young man, I want to give you a lesson in politics. Seward lives in New York, and when he makes a speech in opposition to slavery and I reply to him and denounce him, that helps me at home, and Seward tells me it doesn't hurt him a bit.' "—New York Sun.

ATTACKED BY RATS.

Miss Lavina Hull of Myrtle Hill had a narrow escape in the Belfry of the Baptist Church. Miss Hull is 18 years old and has performed the duties of janitrix of the building for three years.

While she was ringing the bell for prayer meeting the bell-rope suddenly parted. After service, with a lantern, she climbed to the belfry to repair it.

When she reached the gloomy place she found that the rope had been gnawed in two by rats, near the ceiling. She began to mend the strands, but had proceeded only a little with her work when she heard a squeaking sound behind her. Looking around she saw a host of shining balls in the darkness.

She knew they were rats and swung her arms at them, but the animals did not disperse. Their numbers rapidly increased until she was completely surrounded by a ring of gleaming eyes. The girl became alarmed and prepared to descend to the vestibule of the church, but before she was erect the vicious rodents rushed at her in a body and sprang upon her, lacerating her flesh wherever they could find a place to set their teeth.

Miss Hull possessed a luxuriant growth of hair, which hung in a braid down her back. The braid was almost severed from her head by the rats and her arms and shoulders bled profusely from the wounds made by the bites. She rang the bell loud as she could and Arthur Rawson and two other young men who were passing rushed into the church and climbed to the belfry. In the struggle Rawson was badly bitten. The physicians say it will be many weeks before the brave girl recovers from her injuries.

MARRIAGE IN PARIS.

Saturday Is the Popular Day for Workingmen—What Is Necessary.

Before Pierre can with safety select his particular Saturday he has a multitude of civil and religious requirements to attend to, says an exchange. Neither he nor Lizette can think of such a thing as marrying without the consent of their families. If father, mother and grandparents are dead a family council must be called of the nearest living relatives to consider the case and give or withhold permission. If it is refused to Pierre and he is under 25, or to Lizette and she is under 21, the marriage cannot go on.

For eleven days before the civil marriage can take place there must be pasted at the door of the mayor's office in the arondissement in which each lives a bulletin giving the names, occupation and residence of the persons to be married and full data about both parties.

If there is a religious service the bans will be published three Sundays running in the church of the parish attended by each party.

While these preliminaries are in progress Pierre is collecting the documents necessary for the civil ceremony. It is no small outlay, for each must be made out on official paper—an expensive luxury in Paris. There must be certificates of the births of himself and Lizette.

When all this has been done it will be safe to sign the marriage contract—that is, if they have one, which is doubtful. A marriage contract means that there is property to be regulated and a Parisian workman and his fiancee are not often incumbered in that way. But even if there is little property, and Lizette has no dot at all, there are certain social requirements for them both. Etiquette taxes them less in trouble than the law but more in purse. If Pierre were rich he would present Lizette with a corbeille made up of jewels, lace and perhaps a cashmere shawl, but as it is he will give her some article for the wedding toilet—a white shawl, perhaps, or a veil or gloves. He will send her a bouquet, too, in the morning of the wedding and he will provide a ring and a "marriage piece." As for Lizette, she must buy for her future husband his wedding shirt, hose and cravat.

Consumption Not Hereditary.

The accumulation of such evidence is becoming so great that every physician of experience feels forced to share the belief of the communicability of consumption. There are also few physicians who have not had one or more cases that for years they had not had thought had been contracted in this way. How else than by communications are we to account for the rapid spread of consumption among savage nations, where this disease was unknown before civilized people began to visit them? This is true of our own American Indians, the inhabitants of Central Africa, and many other countries. Intermarrying, or any other condition which might make hereditary transmission a possible cause, certainly would not account for its rapid progress. Besides, some of the best observers and investigators believe that consumption is not heriditary, and there is much positive evidence in favor of this view. With such evidence of the possibility of inhaling the bacilli, the question would natually be asked. How do the bacilli get into the atmosphere, when they are not found in the breath of sufferers of this disease? We know positively that in these cases bacilli are present in the mucus which is raised after coughing. In its moist condition it is impossible for it to be inhaled, but when it dries and becomes dust it is blown about, and it is in this form that it becomes dangerous.—North American Review.

Not Arrived Yet.

It sometimes seems that although the "divinity that doth hedge a king" is now an unknown quantity, some royal personages might be recognized by their common sense.

The Princess Marie, wife of the Danish Prince Valdemar, was journeying through Helsingor one day, on an excursion to Sweden. The stationmaster heard of her coming, and not only decorated the waiting-room with lilies, but set a watch at the door, to prevent the public from intruding on the royal privacy.

At the expected time the princess and her sister appeared, unattended, each carrying a small hand basket. These surely could not be princesses! The brusque watchman blocked the doorway.

"You can't go in," said he.

"Why not?" asked the astonished travellers.

"Because we expect the Princess Marie."

"Then keep a good lookout for her." laughed the amused lady, and went through the common gate to the platform. The station-master waited all day, and then concluded that the princess had taken another route.

Order In The House.

The French Parliament was not always famous for the excitements and turmoils of its debates. In the old monarchical days, before the Revolution, the sessions of the old Parliament were exceedingly dull and prosy affairs.

One day, it is related, a noble count was trying to make a speech it was, while all the other members were either chatting or resting.

"If those gentlemen who are talking to each other," said he, "would kindly make more noise than those gentlemen who are snoring, it would be much appreciated by those gentlemen who are trying to listen!"

THE miners of North Staffordshire and North Wales have notified the masters that they will strike on March 1, in order to maintain their prices and wages. The action is in accordance with the recent miners' conference held at Manchester, a decision which effects over $300,000. The Cleveland ironmasters have notified their men that the works will be closed if the miners strike.

CHARLES AYERS, a prominent business man of Detroit, was shot and fatally injured by his wife, Annie D. Ayers, at their residence on Bagely avenue. The tragedy was brought about through the supreme court rendering a decision dismissing Mrs. Ayers' suit for divorce.

AN AWFUL SIGHT.

The Unfortunate Wretch's Head Hacked and Torn From His Body.

BERLIN, March 5.—The details of a most horrible story were received in this city today. A man named Hageman, in Slade, a small village in the province of Hanover, was convicted on a charge of murder and was sentenced to death by the guillotine.

To-day was the date set for the execution, and, all the preparations being completed, the condemned man was led forth to the place where the guillotine was erected. He was securely bound, and the executioner placed him in the usual position on the board beneath the sharp steel blade.

When all was in readiness the knife was released and fell on the neck of the prostrate criminal. To the horror of the spectators, however, the knife failed to sever the head from the trunk, and the result of this was to leave the neck of the murderer in a terribly mutilated condition.

The awfulness of the scene was increased when the executioner raised the knife of the guillotine and made a horrible attempt to wrench off the head of the unfortunate man with his hands, while the blood gushed in torrents from the gaping wounds. But in spite of all his tugging and twisting at the victim's half severed head he failed to tear it off, and he again placed the body in position under the guillotine, and tried a second time to behead the man by means of the knife.

Again did the blade descend on the neck of the poor wretch and again did it fail successfully to perform its work, and only left the remains in a more mutilated condition than before. The executioner then decided to abandon this means of decapitating the man and tried another method of finishing his ghastly work. He procured a sharp knife and hacked and slashed at the back of the victim's neck, at the same time fastening his fingers in the man's blood-soaked hair and pulling his head with much force. At length, after chopping off most of the flesh which held the head to the body, the executioner succeeded in tearing the head away.

FOUGHT FOR FOOD.

Bake Shops Looted by a Famished Mob in Germany.

BERLIN, March 5.—In Dantzic to-day a large number of unemployed workmen proceeded to the landing stage in the expectation that they would be conveyed to the municipal sewage farm and put to work. When they arrived there the officials picked out 220 men to be taken to the farms and said that they were unable to furnish work for the others.

Those who were refused employment were bitter in their denunciation of the trick, as they termed it, that had been played upon them. Some of the men constituted themselves leaders and made violent speeches, calling upon the crowd to help themselves to food if the authorities would not furnish them with the means of getting it. The impassioned words of the speakers and the presence of the crowd itself attracted a large number of the lower classes of the city and the impromptu meeting soon degenerated into a mob. The excitement grew by what it fed upon, and the suggestion that food was plenty in the shops was seized upon with avidity.

The mob left the vicinity of the landing stage, and in a compact mass rushed through the streets, hurling imprecations at the authorities and declaring that they would steal before they would starve. Every baker's shop they came across they looted, and some of the gaunt, pale-faced men could be seen in a manner which showed that they had not tasted food for a long time. Others placed the bread they had seized under their coats with the intention of carrying it to their wives and children. Loaded butchers' carts passing along the streets were seized upon, their drivers hustled away, and their contents hastily divided among the crowd.

Detachments of police were hastily sent to that part of the city in which the rioting and pillaging was going on. After a struggle with the rioters, who were inflamed with their successes and resisted the police, the latter made a determined charge and succeeded in dispersing the mob. There is much excitement among the workingmen, and it would not be in the least surprising should further and more serious trouble occur.

The news from Dantzic has had a very disquieting effect here, and the affair is eagerly discussed by the official circle and by the workingmen. It is taken to give further proof, if any were needed, of the bad state of affairs that exists throughout the country.

A later dispatch from Dantzic, however, places a somewhat different aspect upon the disturbance, at least so far as the looting of shops and wagons is concerned. This dispatch says that after the speakers had addressed the disappointed workingmen a majority of the latter, without heeding the appeals to right their own wrongs, returned to their homes. Those who did the rioting and pillaging were, as in the case of the Berlin riots, not genuine workingmen, but dock rats and other loafers, who were never known to do an honest day's work.

Damaged by Smoke.

ST. CLOUD, Minn., Special, March 5.—A fire broke out last night in the cigar factory of Mark & Wire, in this city. The flames were soon subdued, but not until the smoke had well nigh totally ruined the heavy stock of tobacco and manufactured cigars. The loss is about $5,000, fully insured.

Kansas for Cleveland.

LEAVENWORTH, Kan., March 5.—The Democratic state central committee met here to-day. The sentiment of the majority of the members was so strongly in favor of a fusion with the Farmers' Alliance that the committee declined to call a state convention to nominate presidential electors. Salina was selected as the place for holding the convention to elect delegates to the Chicago convention. It will meet April 20. A large majority of the committeemen favor the nomination of Cleveland.

Everybody Becoming Weary.

ASHLAND, Wis., Special—The Baker trial still proceeds slowly, and jurors, judge, witnesses and attorneys are beginning to look worried and as though they wished for the end. Baker was the only witness introduced to-day, and the questioning so far has been on how and when he received the money found upon him when arrested. He said Ferrin gave him $1,500 on Sept. 9, and that the roll of bills which he spoke of and showed to Lou Thayer, and which he flashed several times, was also a part of the $1,500, and that the money found on him when arrested was also part of the same. He also stated that he had made a number of purchases between Sept. 9 and the time of the robbery, which went to show he had money before the time the bank was robbed.

CONGRESS.

Proceedings of the House and Senate.

FRIDAY FEB. 26.

SENATE.

The finance committee of the senate presented a resolution in that body providing for a joint committee to confer with the authorities of West Virginia with regard to that state's proportion of the Virginia debt, and in the event that no settlement is accomplished, to bring suit in the United States courts in the name of Virginia against West Virginia.

Senator Morrill, from the committee on District of Columbia, reported several local bills favorably.

A conference was ordered on the disagreeing vote of the two houses on the census deficiency bill.

The Idaho contested election case was taken up again, Senator Vance having the floor. At the conclusion of Mr. Vance's remarks Mr. Stewart introduced Mr. Claggett, the contestant, who was recognized for a two hour's speech. At 4 p. m., the senate went into executive session and shortly afterward adjourned until Monday, with the Idaho case still pending.

HOUSE.

A bill appropriating $8,000,000, with a proviso that a similar amount be expended each year, was introduced in the house by Representative Byrnes, of Missouri, to improve the Mississippi river from the Falls of St. Anthony to the jetties, the improvement to be under the direction of the war department.

Mr. Sayers, of Texas, submitted the conference report on the urgent deficiency bill, and it was agreed to. As agreed to the bill appropriates $428,664, being $149,483 more than it carried when it orignally passed the house, and $39,333 less than it carried when it passed the senate.

SATURDAY, FEB. 27.

SENATE.

Not in session.

HOUSE.

The Indian question was under consideration in the house today, an amendment was adopted, providing that any officers may be detailed as agents under the supervision of the secretary of the interior.

MONDAY FEB. 29.

SENATE.

Among bills presented in the senate was one offered by Mr. Langford, of California, to determine the value of legal tender dollars and providing that all dollars shall be received and paid out in discharge of debts both public and private, at par, measured by that standard, whether the stamp of the government making the dollar be on gold, silver, paper or any other material; also, that the legal tender value of each dollar issued by the United States shall depend alone on the stamp of the government, and that there shall be an obligation on the part of the government to exchange one dollar for another.

HOUSE.

On motion of Mr. Loud, of California, a bill was passed by the house setting apart a tract of land for the use of the Lick observatory, University of California.

Resolutions were passed by the house authorizing the committee on the judiciary to investigate and report whether the secretary of the treasury has a legal right to use any portion of $100,000,000 gold reserve for current expenses.

The house passed a resolution authorizing the joint committee on immigration to investigate the operation of the immigration laws, the importation of contract labor and to inquire particularly into the immigration of persons affected with typhus fever into the port of New York.

TUESDAY, MARCH 1.

SENATE.

A bill to correct the difficulty that prevented the general government from assuming jurisdiction in the prosecution of the persons concerned in the lynching of the Italians in New Orleans was introduced in the senate today by Mr. Dolph.

The senate finance committee today amended and favorably reported the house bill for the better control of and to promote the safety of national banks.

A bill was introduced today by Senator Perkins to provide for the creation of a board of regents of education for Indians in Oklahoma and Indian territory.

HOUSE.

The house passed the Indian appropriation bill with an amendment striking out $1,000 salary to Capt. Pratt as superintendent of the Carlisle Indian school for charging that the Catholics kept a lobby in Washington to secure appropriations for their schools.

Mr. McMillin, of Tennessee, from the committee on ways and means, reported the free wool bill, which was referred to the committee of the whole, together with the views of the minority, presented by Mr. Burrows, of Michigan.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 2

SENATE.

Senator Kyle today reported favorably from the committee on education and labor the senate joint resolution for an investigation relative to the "slums" of cities.

In the senate an appropriation of $3,000 was adopted for the expense of the typhus fever and immigration investigation.

The senate resumed the investigation of the Idaho case, Senator George taking the floor in favor of the contestant, Claggett. Mr. George spoke three hours and a half. He was followed by Mr. Vilas, of Wisconsin, who sustained the majority report in favor of the sitting member, Dubois. An agreement was reached to close the debate and take a vote not later than 3 o'clock tomorrow.

HOUSE.

The house spent most of the day considering the District of Columbia bill. The bill appropriates $4,087,555, a reduction from last year of $389,170, $1,230,160 less than the estimates of the district commissioners and $614,569 less than the estimates of the secretary of the treasury.

During the house session bills were reported and placed on the calendar defining murder in the first and second degree and providing punishment therefor; to make Council Bluffs, Iowa, a port of delivery; fixing the compensation of keepers of life-saving stations.

THURSDAY, MARCH 3.

SENATE.

The debate on the Idaho contested election case was closed at 3 p. m., and the voting began. By a vote of nays 55, yeas 7, the senate decided that Claggett is not entitled to the seat, and by a vote of 55 to 5 confirmed Dubois' election.

In the senate the house bill to credit Aquilla Jones, Sr., late postmaster at Indianapolis, with $2,348 stolen in 1888, was passed.

Senator Sawyer from the committee on post offices and post roads reported to the senate a bill, in the nature of a substitute, providing that on and after the 1st of July, 1892, all articles of mail matter of the third and fourth classes shall be comprehended in one class, to be known as a third class matter, and postage on the same shall be charged at the rate of one cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof.

HOUSE.

The house resumed the consideration of the bill allowing railroad companies to give special rates to commercial travelers. Mr. Otis, of Kansas, antagonized the measure.

Mr. O'Neill, of Pennsylvania, offered an amendment providing that nothing in the bill shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from granting reduced rates of transportation to passengers or making reduced rates for freight. The bill will now go on the calendar of unfinished business.

Must Show the Papers.

WASHINGTON, Special.—Mr. Pickler of South Dakota introduced a bill to expedite the prosecution of pension and other claims arising out of military and naval service for the United States by "allowing every claimant for back pay, bounty, pensions or other claims arising by virtue of service in the army or navy the right, in person or attorney, to examine and inspect every paper, memorandum, writing or thing in any department, court or office of the United States which may contain any reference, allusion or bearing upon the claim of any claimant." Every officer or person in the United States service having charge of any such matter is to give the information requested. Violation of this act is made punishable by a fine of $100.

SUSPENSE.

The sky and the sea, like two nuns,
  Wear mantles of gray,
And like a black cloth seems the masts
  And the yards of a ship far away.

Is it coming, coming to me,
  This heavy black cross?
Shall the hopes and joys of my life
  Suffer pitiful shipwreck and loss?

The ship, like a bird on the wing,
  Seems only to stay.
Alas! It is coming—it tacks.
  Oh, thank God! It is sailing away.

HIS WIFE'S EDUCATION.

BY EDUARDINE BAILEY.

CHAPTER I.

Leander Southwick had been married scarcely a year when by the death of an uncle in Nevada he fell heir to an estate worth $450,000.

The inheritance was so unexpected that for some time it was difficult to believe that he, an humble grocer, was the possessor of a fortune greater even than that of his boyhood dreams.

"Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars! What'll we do with all that money?" he said to his wife.

Sophronia Southwick, equal to any emergency, from weighing a codfish to making up the monthly accounts, was never at a loss for an idea.

"We must go into society," she promptly replied.

"Society!" shouted Leander. "What do we know about society?"

"Now, Leander, its ridiculous for you to speak in that strain. You know that none of these rich New Yorkers, and I believe there are four hundred of them, knew any more about society than we do."

"But they had some education, hadn't they?"

"Yes; but can't we get education as well as they?"

"How do you propose to get it?"

I propose to go to one of those seminaries."

"Too old, Leander! Why, I'm not 23; and you told me this morning I didn't look more that 18."

Southwick, of course, saw the absurdity of his wife's position; but, realizing it was useless to try to dissuade her, relaxed his efforts and finally acquiesced in her decision.

CHAPTER II.

"By Jove! She's a dandy!" Do you suppose Bert'll have the first dance with her at the next reception?"

"I don't know about that. I think if you wanted to you could cut Bert Fairbanks out."

The speakers were two seniors of Stanford Seminary at Ephesus, N. H. Stanford is a boarding-school for both sexes, and takes high rank among coeducational institutions.

But strange as it may appear, its more than local renown is derived from its sheet-and-pillowcase parties.

At these parties the young ladies are masked, their forms are draped with sheets arranged in Greek fashion and their heads are enveloped in pillowcases.

What makes the parties especially enjoyable is that they are not previously announced. For not until the sheeted forms, like a troop of ghosts, file into the concert hall are the young men aware that the monthly reception has been varied.

The presence of a "new girl" adds a bit of sensation to a Stanford reception. It was a "new girl" of whom the two seniors were speaking.

She was tall and slender, of graceful figure and of fair complexion. Her blue eyes sparkled under long lashes and a perfect Roman nose gave her an air of superior intelligence.

Her mouth was shapely, if not small, and was capable of the sweetest smile, although its general expression was one of mischief.

Such was the Sophronia Southwick of Stanford—a decided improvement on the Sophronia Southwick of rural Northrop.

By an inadvertance on the part of the secretary, coupled with Sophronia's love of mystery, she had been registered as Miss instead of Mrs. Southwick.

* * * * * *

Leander Southwick was not an adept at killing time; therefore after Sophronia's departure, he had sufficient time on his hands to furnish him with a problem more perplexing than the distribution of his suddenly acquired wealth. Letters from Ephesus somewhat broke the monotony of his life.

One especially delighted him. He tore it open and read with avidity.

It was a breezy epistle, and in it Sophronia disclosed in gushing language the secret of the sheet and pillowcase diversion.

"It's going to be awfully jolly," she wrote. "Not a soul will know us. You'll see, the mole on my right hand, by which you could always tell me when we went to the masquerades, hasn't been noticed here, I think. How I wish you could be there."

CHAPTER III.

"Have you asked her yet?"

"No I thought I'd better wait till she came up."

"But suppose Fairbanks has asked her?"

"Oh, I don't believe he's got the nerve. Besides, Miss Southwick doesn't care for him, anyway."

This dialogue between Carence Whitney and Ches Tufts took place near the platform of the concert hall in Stanford Seminary.

About twenty other boy students were present, and by and by, as the orchestra began to "tune up," the townspeople flocked in.

When the 8 o'clock bell rang the settees were filled and a great crowd was about the door, which led to the girls' corridor.

An "Oh!" of delicious surprise came from the assembled crowd as the sheeted forms filed in.

Whitney prepared to do likewise.

But, simultaneous with Whitney, a man, not a student and apparently a stranger, seized a shapely hand which hung from a gracefully shaped sleeve.

"I beg your pardon," replied the stranger, with considerable feeling.

To this Whitney impatiently retorted:

"Excuse me, sir, but I have this lady, and mean to keep her."

"You mean to keep her, do you? Do you know who she is? This woman is my wife, you puppy."

"Wife!" exclaimed the bystanders.

"Oh!" groaned several, while the sheeted form shrank toward Whitney.

One tall form pushed its way through the crowd to hear the stranger declare:

"This woman is my wife!"

Horror-stricken, she cast a swift, sharp glance at the stranger, uttered a wild shriek, and would have fallen to the floor had she not been supported by one of the professors.

She had fainted and was conducted from the room.

"Miss Southwick has fainted," cried several.

Then the figure which the stranger claimed as that of his wife, removed the mask, revealing the dark, snappy eyes of Miss Walcott.

The stranger looked dumfounded, then gasped:

"It isn't her!"

The principal, addressing the stranger, demanded sharply: "Who are you, sir, and what do you mean by causing such a disturbance?"

Leander, for the stranger was Sophronia's husband, swiftly reasoning that an expose might cause Sophronias's expulsion from the seminary, faltered:

"I am very sorry, sir. I didn't mean what I said. I am—"

He did not finish the sentence. Instead he fled from the room precipitously.

CHAPTER IV.

She was suffering from mental rather than from physical distress. Until now she had never experienced the pangs of jealousy. At the same time the horrible suspicion possessed her that Leander was a bigamist.

"Oh, what a fool I was," she sobbed.

"Now I know why he didn't want me to come here. I shall tell that Miss Walcott just what I think of her.

Sophronia finally concluded, however, to take her departure from the seminary without creating a scene.

She went directly to the railway station.

While she was purchasing a ticket she felt a hand upon her shoulder, and, turning, beheld Leander.

"You here!"

His consternation was no less than hers, and he also said:

"You here!"

"Oh, how could you, Leander?"

Evidently she was prepared for a confession from her spouse.

Imagine her astonishment, therefore, when instead of making a confession he began to load her with reproaches.

"I now see, he said, "why you were so crazy to go to boarding school. I never dreamed that my wife was a natural-born flirt. Think how I must have felt hearing those seminary cubs talking about and disputing over my wife, Miss Southwick."

"Oh, Leander, I am not to blame. I didn't mean—"

"Oh, that's a pretty way to get out of it! You pretended you wasn't married."

"For pity's sake talk grammar, if you can't sense," said Sophronia, resentfully, at the same time drying her eyes and glaring at him contemptuously.

"Never mind the grammar. How about them fellows?"

"Never mind those fellows. How about your other wife?"

"My other wife!"

"Yes, your other wife. Miss Walcott, as she calls herself."

"Miss Walcott! Who in the deuce is Miss Walcott?"

"I know and you know who she is," replied Sophronia, "but for pity's sake don't make so much noise. The whole town will hear us, and I want to get out of this place and never set my foot in it again."

"You don't want to get out of it any more than I do. Here's the train now," he added, as the shrill whistle of the locomotive was heard in the distance.

Thus they proceeded on their way toward Northrop.

They had not made many miles when Sophronia gladly would have joined her husband, but to go in to the smoker was, of course, out of the question.

It was with a feeling akin to joy, therefore, that she beheld him return to her side.

Yet she did not greet him with any protestations of affection, for the spirit of Miss Walcott was still hovering near.

"I don't see how any one could be as mean as you have been," was her greeting.

"What ails you?" he asked. "Have you got another fit of Miss—what's her name?"

"Miss Walcott—you know her name. You needn't pretend you don't."

"I never said my name was Miss Southwick. That was a mistake of the secretary."

"But what about them fellows?"

"I don't know anything about them. They had a right to be at the reception. Now, will you be so kind as to explain who Miss Walcott is, and how you came to acknowledge her as your wife before the whole school?"

Dawn now peered into Leander's brain, and he laughed heartily as he realized what complications had been wrought by the mole on Sophronia's hand, and Sophronia joined in his laughter when he had explained to her his mistake.

"I wanted to give you a surprise," he said.

"My letter, I suppose, put that into your head."

"Yes dear."

Two weeks after the memorable sheet and pillowcase party the principal of Stanford Seminary announced to the students the following endowments:

First $25,000 for the erection of a gymnasium, to be known as the Southwick gymnasium.

Second—$10,000 to establish a scholarship for married couples of limited means, said scholarship to be known as the Sophronia scholarship.—Boston Globe.

A New Game——Telegrams.

BY HELENA DEWEY LEEMING.

Any number can play this game.

But sharp wits as well as pencils are required, and it takes more thought than paper to make it interesting.

The object is that each person shall write a telegram of ten words, on a given subject, in a given time, the words beginning with certain letters, in the order in which they have been given out.

The easiest way to illustrate the game is to begin to play it. Ten different letters are selected at random, each person contributing one, and avoiding the quite impossible x's and z's. Then, when these are written in order at the head of the sheet of paper, the timekeeper announces the subject and gives the word to start on the three or five minute contest. Each letter must be an initial of one of the words in the telegram, in the order in which it is given.

A variety of subjects may be taken, such as, "An Accident," "An Elopement," "A Message of Congratulation," "An Apppointment," An Order for something."

For instance, once in playing the game the letters stood as follows: G. S. U. L. C. E. B. N. T. P., and the subject was "An Accident."

The second was very laconic: "George slipped upon lemon cortex. Elbow broke, nose too. Pity."

The writer of a third explained that the hero, Gerald, was supposed to be a small boy who was the scource of much anxiety to his parents, as within a week he had eaten a quart of green apples with attending results, broken two of a neighbor's window-panes, and been tossed by a cow, and now tried to make a bonfire in the cellar. The telegram was supposed to be from his mother to his father, who was out of town, and ran thus:

At another time, when the subject was that of an appointment, one writer energetically gave not only the appointment, but the answer to it, and explained that the first telegram was from a brother, a society youth, to his sister, who had married a country parson just out of town, and who sometimes missed her maiden gayeties; while the answer was from the sister.

The letters were: F. E. P. I. G. C. A. S. N. O., and the telegram read:

"Fannie's euchre party incomplete. Go. Carriage at seven. Nobby occasion." But the sister's dispatch was. "Five evangelists popped in. Grief. Cook absconded suddenly. No opportunity."

Votes may be taken for the cleverest telegrams, if desired; but the best stake to play for is the mirth of the other players.

The Point of View.

A writer in Babyhood says:—Don't be frightened by this portentous title, thinking that an essay upon logic is to follow. I merely wish to direct attention to the simple physical fact that a child's point of view is some 2 or 3 feet lower than an adult's, and that this will account for a great amount of what is often taken for stupidity and backwardness. Try the experiment of holding your head down to a level of 2½ to 3 feet from the floor of any room or hall or stairway in your house, and see the changed aspect of things—bearing in in mind that the memory of your customary range of vision is to be, for the time being, obliterated. A number of objects in the room will disappear entirely; the relative positions of others will be changed; and there will be a difference in the ideas of porportion from the usual ones. Imagine the same conditions in the street, or park, and especially in a crowd of people; in the latter case it amounts to almost the difference between daylight and darkness.

A child is often blamed for not being more observant—for instance, after a walk, or a visit to a store—when, in fact, the adult had forgotten that the little inquisitive eyes were away down so low their natural propensity to discover every curious and interesting thing had had no opportunity to assert itself, and many things which would otherwise have been noticed and remembered were missed entirely.

It is nothing at all uncommon to see a child's playroom decorated with pictures on the wall, all pinned or pasted at the level of the adult eyes. It is pathetic to see the strained eyes and craned necks of the little victims to the mistaken though well-meant attentions as they examine with delight their favorites. To get a fair idea of the difference, we have only to imagine all our pictures hung at a distance of 8 or 10 feet from the floor, chairs with backs 6 or 7 feet high, etc., and we would then not be [illegible] to [illegible] immediately to "mother" the book or spool of thread "right there! Can't you see."

The subject leads me to add my voice to the recommendation to provide more child's furniture, i. e., not toy furniture, but chairs, sofas, low tables, etc., for children. If I could afford it I should have also a first-class piano made to order, in proportionate size for my children's playroom. I believe my girl and boy would "take to it" as ducks do to water, since they already do, in a limited way, to the large one, being deterred, I often notice, by the bugbear of climbing upon the stool—which in the same proportion would stand, to me, at an elevation of 4½ feet.

Grateful From Infancy.

On an Atlantic steamer bound for New York a few years ago, the usual entertainment for the benefit of the Liverpool Seamen's Orphanage was projected. There happened to be on board a good many "professionals," actors and singers, who all promised to take part but one. He kept aloof, and stubbornly declined to assist.

As he was the person most desired, every effort was made to change his mind, and the committee of arrangements at last applied to Mr. Barnum, who was a passenger, and begged him to labor with the reluctant singer.

Mr. Barnum undertook the mission, and after stating the case and making his appeal, somewhat to his own surprise the young man at once assented.

I refused all these people," said he, "and I dislike exceedingly to take part in that sort of entertainment; but if you ask me, Mr. Barnum, I cannot decline. I am glad to do anything that will please you."

Mr. Barnum felt much complimented, but protested a little, when the man continued.

"You did me a great favor once, Mr. Barnum, and I have never forgotten it. You may not recall it but I am under great obligations to you."

"Why?" hesitated the great showman, "I must confess that I don't recall—I don't remember any circumstances, and yet your face is familiar. Where was it we met?"

"Oh, it was thirty years ago, Mr. Barnum: I took the first prize at your first baby show! I've always felt grateful to you."—Tit Bits.

Fashion in Doll Babies.

"Don't you like doll babies, Bessie?" asked a pretty young Philadelphia woman of the small four-year-old daughter of one of her New York friends.

"Dwacious, no! I'se gwowed up," was the prompt reply. "I like doll ladies with real clothes."

The Philadelphia woman was considerably mystified.

"What does she mean?" she asked, looking up at the pretty, frivolous mother.

"Oh, Bessie is a real little woman of the world," was the answer. "She insists on having all her dolls dressed in the very latest fashion. Most of them come from Paris, and really, with a laugh, I believe keeping them in the fashion gives me more trouble than keeping myself there," and she smiled in a pleased, indulgent way.

The fashion in dollies has changed, Once they were useful in teaching the young "mammas" how to sew, but nowadays a little girl who receives a doll as a gift would be greatly astonished and chagrined if her bisque or waxen ladyship were not attired in a stylish visiting dress, and also accompanied by a trunkful of clothes ready for all demands of fashionable occasions. The children's doll parties of today are counterparts of grown-up people's receptions, and the toilets of the dolls rival the most elaborate costumes of "sure enough ladies" at a swell entertainment.

At many of the fashionable shops in town orders are taken for dolls dressed in all the peasant costumes of Europe, every article of the dress to the smallest detail being accurately copied. The costumes are shown by colored prints, from which selections are made and the order is sent abroad to be filled.

What Bennie Did.

Bennie Baker liked raspberry shrub very much, and one day when he came into the kitchen mamma was just opening a bottle of it.

"O-h-h-h!" cried Bennie, smacking his lips.

"It isn't for you," said mamma. Neddy Ames is sick with the measles, and I thought that a little shrub might taste good to him, poor little fellow!"

"Oh!" It was a different "oh" from the first one. "Could I have some if I had the measles, mamma?"

"Yes, if you wanted it."

"Did I ever have 'em?"

"No; and I don't want you to go over to Neddy's home for a long time, or you'll catch them."

"How do folks catch 'em' mamma?"

"By going where they are sick with them. Run out and play, and don't bother."—Harper's Young People.

A Good Answer.

There is no reason why every person who has the knack of clever and easy expression should "rush into print," and the remarkably bright wife of Friedrich von Schlegel, the German writer and philosopher, evidently realized this fact.

She was constantly being urged by her friends and admirers to write, but a smile was her usual reply. She thoroughly appreciated her husband's genius and success, but one day, when asked why she "wasted" so much time knitting, instead of finding some occupation more suited for her brilliant talent, she replied, placidly:

"I have never heard that there are too many stockings in the world, but I have often heard it said that there are too many books. So it seems to me it is more praiseworthy for me to knit a stocking than to write a book."

On One Condition.

The Harrisburg Telegraph tells a new story of the shrewdness of President Lincoln in dealing with troublesome questions of military discipline.

A private soldier had knocked down his captain, and a court martial had sentenced him to the Dry Tortugas. His friends stirred themselves in his behalf, and prevailed upon Judge Schofield, a personal friend of the President, to intercede in his behalf.

Lincoln paid close attention to all that Schofield had to offer and then said:

"I tell you judge, you go right down to the Capitol, and get Congress to pass an act authorizing a private soldier to knock down his captain. Then come back here, and I will pardon your man."

The judge saw the point, and withdrew with a broad smile on his face.

AUSTRALIA'S PEST.

A Pair of Rabbits Will Increase to 20,000,000 in 5 Years.

The plague of rabbits in Australia cannot be described without seeming exaggeration to those who have not had experience of it. Originally introduced in a colony of about a score of individuals by a squatter near Melbourne, who thought their familiar presence on his station would "remind him of home," they have kept the recollection of England so fresh in the minds of pastoralists as to tempt them to very treasonable language concerning her whenever rabbits are mentioned.

The fecundity of the rabbit is amazing, and his invasion of remote districts swift and mysterious. Careful estimates show that under favorable conditions, a pair of Australian rabbits will produce six litters a year, averaging five individuals each. As the offspring themselves begin breeding at the age of six months, it is shone that, at this rate the original pair might be responsible in five years for a progeny of over 20,000,000! That the orginal score which were brought to the country have propagated after some such ratio, no one can doubt who has seen the enormous hordes that now devastate the land in certain districts. In all but the remoter sections, however, the rabbits are now fairly under control, one rabbiter with a pack of dogs supervises stations where 100 were employed 10 years ago, and with ordinary vigilance the squatters have little to fear. Millions of the animals have been killed by fencing in the water-holes and dams during a dry season, whereby they died of thirst, and lie in enormous piles against the obstructions they had frantically and vainly striven to climb, and poisoned grain and fruits have killed myriads more. A fortune of £25,000, offered by the New South Wales government, still awaits the man who can invent some means of general destruction, and the knowledge of this fact has brought to the notice of the various colonial governments some very original devices.—Scribner's Magazine.

WHAT WAS IN IT.

The bookkeeper put the bottle in his desk and kept his eye on it, for they were a dry lot in that office. He took it home with him that night and brought it back in the morning and put it in the drawer and carefully left the drawer open a couple of inches.

When he went out to lunch the bill-clerk slipped down from his stool and winked at the cashier. He took the bottle to the rear of the store and the cashier followed him. They were gone so long that the assistant bookkeeper got apprehensive and went after them. They had a window up and were looking out intently. The bottle stood on a box and the assistant bookkeeper lifted it to his lips. Then, as soon as he recovered sufficiently, he went to the window.

By and by the clerk looked around. "W'addo you s'pose it is?" he asked, in a dull sort of way.

The cashier shook his head weakly and wiped the water from his eyes. The assistant bookkeeper was still speechless.

When the head bookkeeper came in he looked at the bottle. Then he looked all around the office and grinned; but everybody was too busy to notice him.

After that the cashier put the negro porter up to steal a drink of it. Then the porter and the cashier and the bill clerk made it a point to catch a stockman whenever one of them could and whisper in his ear that the head bookkeeper had a bottle of something elegant in his desk. The head bookkeeper left the office on all sorts of errands. Every time he left somebody stole the bottle and brought it back after a long time and replaced it silently.

Every once in a while somebody would come up to the cashier or the bill clerk and ask, in a dazed, troubled sort of way: "W'addo you 'spose it is?"

FLUCTUATIONS OF SOCIETY.

"The Sole-Leather of To-Day, the Plumed Hat of To-Morrow."

There is a class of persons here which is called distinctly society, but it is not a class of noble families of hereditary ascendency. It is constantly changing, and the sole-leather of to-day is the plumed hat of to-morrow. It is imitative and puts on pretty airs of grandeur and an amusing smirk of superiority, but it is neither grand nor superior.

Yet, again, it is all harmless. An old Directory tells the secret, and, as the fine society itself would say, gives this pretty grandeur away. The Directory is a ruthless herald's office. You start from my Lady Disdain in the opera-box, flashing with diamonds and shining with cloth of gold, a little too loud in voice, a little too splendid in her dress, the amiable dupe of novels and ignorance, and you soon arrive, in the inexorable Directory of other years, at the source of this magnificence—the prosperous butcher and baker and candlestick-maker, the tailor of the day, the fashionable shoemaker.

These are the idle rich for whom Mr. Gladstone asks whether Nature has provided a place. Plainly she has. Here it is in this opera-box, in yonder carriage, in this little palace of the bonbon architecture. But day after day the good people in the gallery will come down and sit in the boxes. The gods will descend, and they will drive home to the bonbon palace instead of walking home to the modest flat as they do now. It is grandeur of wealth, and, happily, of a wealth which is not entailed, and is therefore always flying away, always distributed, or always diffusing a fresh sense of nobility every year, tasting, as it were, of the soil.—Harper's Magazine.

Replies received in answer to an inquiry which was sent out over the southern and central portions of the state give assurances that comparatively little if any injury has been done. The crop though not a large one, is in average condition.

TERRIBLE BLOWS

Examination Shows Mrs. Frank Dunton's Skull Crushed in Six Pieces.

The Wounds, Indicating Savage Blows, Prove Dr. Scudder's Statements False.

JANESVILLE, Wis., Special Telegram, March 5.—All that was needed to show the falsity of Dr. Henry Scudder's story of Mrs. Frank Dunton's death came out at the autopsy this afternoon.

"She fell to the floor three times, inflicting painful flesh wounds," said the doctor. To-day's examination showed that the skull had been crushed in six places. There were seven contused wounds on the head, extending to the skull. On the surface of the skull was found a clot two inches wide by six inches long and a third of an inch thick. Six fractures were found, the smallest an inch and a quarter long and the longest two inches and a half. Three of these radiated from one point, and the blow that landed there must have been a savage one. The physicians will report to the Chicago authorities that the wounds were more than enough to cause death.

EXAMINATION OF PRISONER POSTPONED.

CHICAGO, March 4.—The case of Dr. H. M. Scudder, who is accused of the murder of his mother-in-law, Mrs. F. H. Dunton, and who is confined at the detention hospital pending an inquiry into his sanity, was called in the insane court to-day, but on application of his attorney the hearing was postponed one week, in order that an opportunity might be had to have him examined by experts on the subject.

Mr. Dunton, by his attorneys, to-day presented a will of his late wife in court and was granted letters testamentary under it. It leaves all of her property, valued at $48,000, to her husband, three sisters and two grandsons. The will which leaves some of the property to Mrs. Dunton's adopted daughter, who is Dr. Scudder's wife, was mentioned by the court, and the attorney for Mr. Dunton stated that he would avail himself of the privilege of not presenting it for thirty days. The attorneys claim that it is a forgery.

By the employment of a ruse a reporter managed to secure admission to Dr. Scudder's cell in the Detention hospital today. His inexpert impression as the result of the interview was that of "a man painfully sane and endeavoring to convey the impression of insanity." When asked what he had to say to the charge preferred against him, he declared that there was no charge. When asked if he pretended not to know that the charge was that of murdering Mrs. Dunton.

"Murder," he screamed, "It's a damnable lie. I knew nothing about it. Oh, yes, I believe they did say something about murder, but I was too sick to pay any attention to it. Such an idea is nonsense, utter nonsense, I say. It is preposterous. It is the result of a hellish plot. Do you think I would kill an old woman who had only a few months to live at best. Rot and nonsense."

Then the doctor took on a wild look and accused the reporter of being the fiend who had leered at him through the bars of his cell all night. As soon as the reporter had left his cell, however, the prisoner became perfectly sane to all outward appearance. The attendant who accompanied the reporter, a man of experience in such cases, gave it as his positive belief that the man was sane.

Dr. Henry M. Lyman, an eminent authority on insanity, had an hour's interview with Dr. Scudder to-day. He declines to speak for publication about the case, but Dr. Scudder's attorney says Dr. Lyman is convinced of Dr. Scudder's insanity.

The forged will, making the doctor's wife the chief legatee is in the possession of Attorney Mann, who, with ex-Senator Doolittle is representing the dead woman's husband and sister. Inspection to-day showed that it is not a bungling job, and the interest in this was heightened by the fact that the circumstances under which Dr. Scudder had the paper drawn, if he did it, will likely go far to prove or disprove his sanity and guilt. The document is in perfect legal verbiage, clear in all contest. It seemingly was prepared by a lawyer, and the question of the attorney's identity and possible complicity is being carefully put towards solution.

WHOLESALE SMUGGLING.

Sensational Revelations Concerning a Fashionable Chicago Dressmaker.

CHICAGO, March 5.—A horse whipping here has led to a government investigation into alleged wholesale smuggling of imported dress goods. Yesterday C. Wade, a young Englishman, soundly castigated J. Cummings, manager of Kate Reilly's fashionable dressmaking establishment in this city, claiming that Cummings had grossly insulted his wife, who was employed in the place.

He also alleges that his wife and many other young women were induced to leave England by Kate Reilly's representatives, who promised them large salaries and also induced them to smuggle large quantities of wraps and Persian robes, which Mr. Wade claims was the only object in bringing them over. He has laid this information before the authorities, who have visited the place and seized several robes, which it is claimed Kate Reilly herself smuggled into this country.

They propose to make an inventory of all the goods in the place, and seize all that have not paid duty. Mrs. Wade makes similar accusations against other fashionable dressmakers in this city and New York.

A Verdict Secured.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Special Telegram, March 5.—The jury in the case of Wa-be-ke-kek against Capt. Sherman rendered a verdict of $125 for the plaintiff.

Alleged Infringement.

CHICAGO, March 5.—The Appleton Manufacturing company, Appleton, Wis., has brought suit in the United States courts against J. Nichols, also of Appleton, to enjoin the alleged infringement of a patented method of refreshing corn on the stalk and separating the kernels. The machine alleged to have been infringed upon is in general use among the farmers of the Northwest and saves much labor in that the corn stalks can be cut and at once thrown into the machine, the shelled corn coming out at one point and the stalks at another. Suits have been begun against a number of agents who are alleged to have sold the machines for Nichols.

Both Now in Custody.

MARSHFIELD, Wis., Special, —Will Fullmer one of the young men who took an active part in the stabbing affray at Stratford Sunday, has given himself up to Wausau authorities. Fullmer is but seventeen years of age. Rumors are afloat that Shortheim and Fullmer who are now both in custody, used knives in self-defense.

Followers of Palmer.

CHICAGO, Special—The Cook county Democrats' convention (which includes Chicago), in session to-day, unanimously passed a resolution instructing its delegates to the state's convention to use their best efforts to have selected delegates to the national convention favorable to the candidacy of John M. Palmer for president.

THE THIRD PARTY.

The National Industrial Conference Endorses the Peoples Party.

The National Industrial Conference at its recent session in St. Louis, resolved to enter into the presidential race, that being the most important work transacted.

This, the first great labor conference of the United States and of the world; representing all divisions of urban and rural organized industry, assembled in national congress, invoking upon its action the blessing and protection of Almighty God, puts forth to and for the producers of the nation, this declaration of union and independence.

The conditions which surround us best justify our co-operation. We meet in the midst of a nation brought to the verge of moral political and material ruin. Corruption dominates the ballot box, the legislatures, the congress, and touches even the ermine of the bench. The people are demoralized. Many of the states have been compelled to isolate the voters at the polling places, in order to prevent universal intimidation or bribery. The newspapers are subsidized or muzzled; public opinion silenced; business prostrated; our homes covered with mortgages. labor impoverished and the land concentrating in the hands of capitalists. The urban workmen are denied the right of organization for self-protection; imported pauperized labor beats down their wages; a hireling standing army unrecognized by our laws is established to shoot them down, and they are rapidly degenerating to European conditions. The fruits of the toil of millions is boldly stolen to build up colossal fortunes unprecedented in the history of the world, while their possessors despise the republic and endanger liberty.

From the same prolific womb of governmental injustice we breed two great classes, paupers and millionaires. The national power to create money is appropriated to enrich bondholders; silver, which has been accepted as coin since the dawn of history, has been demonetized to add to the purchasing power of gold by decreasing the value of all forms of property as well as human labor, and the supply of currency is purposely abridged to fatten usurers, bankrupt enterprise and enslave industry. A vast conspiracy has been organized on two continents, and is taking possession of the world.

IF NOT MET AND OVERTHROWN AT ONCE

it forbodes terrible social convulsions, the destruction of civilization or the establishment of an absolute despotism. In this crisis of human affairs the intelligent working people, producers of the United States, have come together in the name of peace, order and society to defend liberty, prosperity and hapiness. We declare our union and independence. We assert our purpose to vote with that political organization which represents our principles.

We charge that the controlling influences dominating the old political parties have allowed the existing dreadful conditions to develop without serious effort to restrain or prevent them. Neither do they now intend to accomplish reform. They have agreed together to ignore in the coming campaign every issue but one. They propose to drown the outcries of a plundered people with the uproar of a sham battle over the tariff so that corporations, national banks, rings, trusts, "watered stocks," the demonetization of silver and the oppressions of ursuers, may all be lost sight of. They propose to sacrifice our homes and children upon the altar of Mammon; to destroy the hopes of the multitude in order to secure corruption funds from the great lords of plunder. We assert that a political organization representing the political principles herein stated is necessary to redress the grievances of which we complain.

Assembled on the anniversary of the birth of the illustrous man who led the first great revolt on this continent against oppression, filled with the sentiment which actuated that grand generation, we seek to restore the government of the republic to the hands of the "plain people" with whom it originated. Our doors stand open to all joints of the compass. We ask all honest men to join in and help us. In order to restrain the extortions of aggregated capital, to drive the money changers out of the temple; to form a perfect union and establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of liberty for ourselves and our posterity, we do ordain and establish the following

PLATFORM OF PRINCIPLES:

First—We declare the union of the labor forces of the United States, this day accomplished, permanent and perpetual. May its spirit enter into all hearts for the salvation of the republic and the uplifting of manhood.

Second—Wealth belongs to him who creates it. Every dollar taken from industry without an equivalent is robbery. If any one will not work neither shall he eat. The interests of rural and urban labor are the same; there enemies are identical.

Third—We demand a national currency, safe, sound and flexible, issued by the general government only, a full legal tender for all debts, public and private, and that without the use of banking corporations; a just, equitable means of circulation, at a tax not to exceed 2 per cent as set forth in the subtreasury plan of the Farmers' Alliance, or some better system. Also by payments in discharge of its obligation for public improvements.

Fourth—We demand free and unlimited coinage of silver.

Fifth—We demand that the amount of circulating medium be speedily increased to not less than $50 per capita.

Sixth—We demand a graduated income tax.

Seventh—We believe that the money of the country should be kept as much as possible in the hands of the people, and hence we demand all national and state revenues shall be limited to the necessary expenses of the government economically and honestly administered.

Eighth—We demand that postal savings banks be established by the government for the safe deposit of the earnings of the people and to facilitate exchange.

Ninth—Your subcommittee upon land plank beg to submit to your approval the following: The land including all the natural resources of wealth is the heritage of all people and should not be monopolized for speculative purposes, and alien ownerships of land should be prohibited. All lands now held by railroads and other corporations in excess of their actual needs, and all lands now owned by aliens should be reclaimed by the government and held for actual settlers only.

Tenth—Transportation being a means of exchange and public necessity, the government should own and operate the railroads in the interests of the people.

Eleventh—The telegraph and telephone, like the postoffice system, being a necessity for transportation of news, should be owned and operated by the government in the interests of the people.

Twelfth—We demand that the government issue legal tender notes and pay the Union soldiers the difference between the price of the depreciated money in which he was paid and gold.

Resolved, That we hail this conference as the consummation of the perfect union of the hearts and hands of all sections of our country, and the men who wore the gray and the men who wore the blue meet here to extinguish the last smouldering embers of civil war in the tears of joy of a united and happy people, and we agree to the stars and stripes forward forever to the highest point of national greatness.

Declines to Serve.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Special,—Gen. Lew Wallace, who was elected a delegate to the Minneapolis convention at the Eighth congressional district convention, has positively declined to serve. His reason, as given in a letter to Chairman Goddy, is that the primaries showed that the voters favored Charles N. Williams, who should have been chosen by the convention. It is denied that Gen. Wallace declines through any hostility to Gen. Harrison's renomination.

Opened the Campaign.

WORTHINGTON, Minn., Special Telegram, —C. L. Smith of Minneapolis opened the campaign here this evening, speaking from the Republican standpoint to a good audience in Masonic hall preparatory to forming a Republican club.

A FARMING PARADISE.

Appraiser Rhinehart Now at Work on Red Lake Reservation.

Grand Forks Herald.

Jake Rhinehart, of East Grand Forks, who is conducting the examination and estimates of lands in the White Earth and Red Lake Indian reservation, which are to be thrown open to settlement is home for a few days. There is now a force of six men at work which will be increased to nine when spring opens They have completed appraisements of four townships in the White Earth reservation and are now at work on townships 149, 150 and 151, ranges 39, 40 and 41, in the Red Lake reservation where they have twelve townships in all to explore. The land gone over by them in White Earth is heavily timbered with pine with a small mixture of other woods, but where they are in Red Lake the country is admirably adapted to the purposes of agriculture. It is mixed prairie and brush land and it can all be brought under cultivation with comparatively little difficulty. The townships mentioned lay between the Clearwater and Lost Rivers, this side of Red Lake, and Mr. Rhinehart states that it is as fine a country as any in the Northwest, which is saying a great deal. A great many intending settlers already have their eyes upon that section and we may expect a rush there which will be a small edition of the settlement of Oklohoma when the lands are open to settlement.

STRANDED THESPIANS.

MANAGER MORTON OF THE CRITERION CO. SKIPS WITH THE RECEIPTS AT CROOKSTON.

Grand Forks News.

The woes of dramatic troupes are sometimes even more harrowing than the mock scenes of misery they enact upon the boards to make the dewdrops of human pity fall in dainty scented kerchiefs. It seems to be the fate of all some time or other to be stranded. Yesterday morning there arrived in this city from Crookston the charming little soubrette of the Criterion Co., Miss Mabel Davidson of St. Paul, and with her came her friend, Mrs. Elsie Kaye, sister of Arthur Rockwell of the C. St. P. & K. C. R. R. These ladies now are the guests of Miss Ettie Franks, who was a schoolmate of Miss Davidson, and it is highly probable that Miss Davidson will favor Grand Forks with some delightful feats of fancy skating at the Palace rink this evening and during the week, while they are here.

Miss Davidson called at the News sanctum and her eyes snapped sharply as she related the circumstances of the collapse at Crookston. The Criterion Theatre Co. had been under the management of Mr. Seeley at Wahpeton and Barnesville—but at the latter place he left, going to his Lyceum bear garden in Duluth. "All he knows is pumpkins and horses," said Miss Davidson. "He didn't know anything about theatres. He wrote us a salty letter after he deserted us. It covered 26 pages, and charged us with being incompetent. Oh, it was a great roast! When Seeley left us we took our advance agent, H. A Morton, alias Geo. Lays (which I pronounce lies,) as our manager. We had no salaries after we left Wahpeton, and it was rather a motley crowd. But we thought we would stick together and do the best we could to redeem the company. I was the soubrette, and could have gone home to St. Paul at any time, but the excitement of the situation interested me, and if I had left them they would have been stranded. At Crookston we hoped to get out of our trouble. We had all learned our parts well, and as Miss Ray Germaine (Maud Strausser, of Argyle,) had friends there and it being court week, we anticipated much success. We did have a big house on Monday night. Unfortunately we had no competent stage manager and one of the papers boomed us away up to the skies. I trembled for our company when I read these notices, for I knew we could not come up to them. The other rival paper pitched into us, being adverse to the managers of the managers of the theatre, Messrs. Arnold & Columbus, who are nice gentlemen, however. It was an old trouble, the Times wanted 24 tickets for each show, I believe, and the managers conceded twelve. You see there was nothing immodest about them. Well, they did roast us fearfully, but we played to good houses. For the last evening we were to put on the "Sea of Ice," and wedding march. The scenery would cost $50, and it would have been a big success but the "Sea of Ice" was not to be seen. We were powerless, only to go on with the play. Morton was in the office and took the proceeds. ' I think their must have been $250 above expenses during the week. We went ahead with our part, but when the sea of ice failed to materialize, the gallery gods froze on to the fake and guyed us mercilessly. I I was so mortified I didn't know what to do. Meantime we heard the manager had gone. Two members had followed him to the 10 o'clock N. P. train and saw him freeze on to the rear end of the sleeper, saying "ta ta" to us. Oh, the villain! You give it to him. I think he must have gone to the coast for his health, poor fellow! Well, we worried through the sea without the ice, but most of us felt as if we wanted some ice put to our heads. For myself I cared little, as I can do other work. But the remainder who are left there at that place, I pity them. In fact, it is exciting. Such experience! Yes, I will remain here this week and probably give a skating exhibition at the rink.

The People's Party

Meet and Resolve to Take Control of the City Government.

AND RUN THINGS IN THE INTEREST OF THE PEOPLE.

On March 5th the People's Party Club met and passed the following resolutions:

1st. The People's Party believes that the laws and regulations enacted for the good government of the city should be strictly enforced; that any attempt on the part of officers or private citizens to evade the laws or to shirk the performance of their duties is subversive of good government, and should be unqualifiedly condemned; that a law unenforced is worse than no law, and that any enactment which the public in general do not respect should be repealed.

2d. We advocate that all institutions which are in their nature public and for the common benefit, ought to be owned and controlled by the public. Therefore, we believe that the city water works and electric light plant should be bought and be under the strict supervision of the city.

3d. Having unlimited faith in the prosperity and growth of the city of Crookston and the resources of the surrounding country, and recognizing the natural advantages which the city enjoys, we urge the advisability of securing a suitable piece of ground by the city for a public park, and of making other improvements in accordance with the demands of an enterprising people. We recommend that a suitable fire ordinance be passed, prohibiting the erection of inflamable buildings within the fire limits.

4th. As our city charter is defective and incomplete in many respects, we favor recommending a revision thereof, or a new charter granted in its stead, by the next legislature; we believe also that the city ordinances should be compiled and published by the city, so that law abiding citizens may inform themselves as to what ordinances are in force and effect.

5th. We believe that he who works for the city in a public office should have compensation therefore in proportion to the amount of work and degree of responsibility. Electing a citizen to office without compensation is putting a premium on dishonesty. Therefore we believe that the mayor of our city should receive a reasonable salary. And every independent and separate office of the city should be elective, therefore as the office of city attorney and city comptroller are with regard to duties connected therewith independent of supervision by any other department of the city government, the incumbent thereof should not be dependent upon any other city officer for his position, but that he should be elected by a direct vote of the electors of the city.

6th. When the city enters into any contract for labor to be performed for the city, a minimum rate of wages shall be determined upon, and the resident laborers of our city be given a preference to be employed first. Said terms to be part of the contract, and the city shall be liable to the laborers for their hire.

7th. That the city council shall petition the next legislature to the effect that the contract system be abolished.

8th. The Peoples Party of Crookston, unqualifiedly condemn all such trickery, quibbles and craftiness as resorted to by a majority of city council in the jail site scheme, such action of public officers to evade the law and cheat it out of its supreme authority, is deserving only of contempt of every honest and law abiding citizen, and ought to be looked upon as treachery and anarchy pure and simple.

9th. The People's Party of Crookston heartily endorse the platform adopted at the St. Louis conference Feb. 24th, 1892.

Adopted by the People's Party club of Crookston, Minn., March 5th, 1892.

AUCTION SALE.

BELTRAMI ITEMS.

BELTRAMI, March 5th, 1892.

Roads are in a bad condition. Overhead it has been delightful weather for several days, very much like early spring. Wild geese and ducks are here and many spring birds.

H. B. Budd is the happy father of a young daughter, who arrived February 29th. He is putting up the cigars very liberally to the boys. Mother and daughter are doing well.

Frank Haight and wife have removed to the J. Wells farm. He is overseeing it for J.W. Frank is one of the rustling young men whom all wish success.

Mr. and Mrs. Welter gave a New England supper March 2nd, the most enjoyable event of the season They also had music and recitations. A recitation, "The Fire Fiend," by Miss Media Welter, was well rendered, as was also "The Latch String," by miss Katie McMillan; select reading, by Mr. Norwood; impromptu, by Jas. Murphy; singing, by the Beltrami glee club, with Miss Media Welter and Mrs. Whitemer presiding at the piano. The proceeds netted $10.75, for a new organ in the Beltrami Sunday school. All felt the better for being there and all left with good wishes for the prosperity of the Welter family in this their new home.

Mentor Items.

Snow is almost gone and wagons have got a-rolling once more.

Our town caucus and farmers' alliance meeting were held on Saturday of last week in Pete's new house. The nomination of town officers went off very smoothly. There are prospects of a good election. The main topic seems to be "town hall," and some think this is just what we want, a hall and store combined, on the grounds of competition. Now what better do we want than Pete, a good square fellow, an obliging merchant and a hardy Norseman; one who has never turned his back on the needy or failed to carry over those who fell behind. Now let us say: Come, boys, and stand by the one who has helped us when we were in need, and not say every man for himself and the devil for the whole of us.

Our Mentor pugilists had another round on Saturday of last week. It proved to be more wind than pluck. It's pretty hard to tell who has the least sense, the one who bought the alcohol or the one who stole it.

The sociable which took place at D. Fulton's on Friday of last week was a grand success. A very pleasant evening was spent. Mr. and Mrs. Fulton deserve much credit; they know how to make the most of everything, but the play of "Nedle's-eye" excused Dave for kissing the other man's wife. The receipts of the evening amounted to $9.35, which spoke well for the host and hostess.

Don't forget to go to the social at Frank Steelman's on Friday, March 18th. We hope Frank will be relieved entirely of the grippe by that time.

Thor Halderson has purchased the arm formerly owned by W. Dennison, of Woodside, for the sum of $300. The farm consists of 80 acres, from which the timber is mostly taken off.

Whether W. Dennison intends to live retired or invest in real estate at Maple Bay we are not prepared to say. Our best wishes follow one of our old timers.

The Dowagiac Shoe Drill

Has Gained the Reputation of being

The Best Seeding Machine

And the many points of superiority over other Drills on the market, entitle them to the nome they hold as the "King of Seeding Machinery." For sowing in rows close together—5 inches—others are 6 and 7 incher—ease of operation, lightness of draft, we recommend them to any careful, investigating farmer. They will not clog; we warrant them to work where a seeker will work. They are well built, durable and are sold as low as their excellent quality will admit.

We have some special BARGAINS IN HARROWS. 150 tooth 4-horse Boss Harrow, $22. 101 tooth 3-horse $15. 77 tooth 2-horse, $11. We have a nice line of disc and lever Harrows which will arrive this week.

The Review of Reviews for March fully maintains the extraordinary interest of its monthly portrait gallery. Its frontispiece is a fine picture of the late Mr. Spurgeon. In the "Progress of the World" the best of Grover Cleveland's new photographs is reproduced, as is also the newest and best of Postmaster-General Wanamaker. There is an excellent portrait of Mr. Blaine, a very fine one of President Harrison, another of Justice Fuller, another of the late Justice Bradley, of the Supreme Court. There appear the faces of Chairman Bland of the Coinage Committee; the late John Jay Knox; Judge Foster of Chili; a full page of the late Duke of Clarence; a full page of his brother George, the present heir to the British throne; a large portrait of the late Benjamin Scott, for fifty years Chamberlain of the city of London—the grand old man of municipal England; a new engraving of the young Khedive of Egypt; a most striking full page portrait of Father Anderledy, a generalissimo of the Jessuits; a half-tone standing portrait of Clemenceau, who has just overthrown the French cabinet; an engraving of M. De Freycinet, the defeated French premier; an engraving of M. Chadourne, lately expelled from France; one of Lord Vivian, the new English minister to Rome; a good portrait of the distinguished philanthropist, Lady Sandhurst, who lately died; a fine portrait of Professor R. T. Ely, the head of Wisconsin's new School of Economics and Politics. In connection with the Polytechnic excursions to the World's Fair are new portraits of Mr. Douglas Hogg, Mr. Robert Mitchell, and, what is rarely seen, a portrait of Mr. D. L. Moody. The character sketch of Mr. Spurgeon has a fine sitting portrait of Mr. Spurgeon in his library, and a full page showing Mr. Spurgeon in his pulpit in the days of his prime, 30 years ago. The character sketch of Cardinal Manning has a large portrait of the late Cardinal, and the sketch of Sir Morell Mackenzie has a sitting half-tone portrait of that eminent physician. In the Leading Articles of the Month appear excellent portraits of Mr. Hamilton W. Mabie of the Christian Union; Editor Flower, of the Arena; Professor Virchow; the late Khedive; M. Durnove, the Russian Minister of the Interior; and Heinrich von Sybel, the great German historian. In the New Book department is a good portrait of the novelist Thomas Hardy. In the Record of Current Events are drawings of President Diaz of Mexico, and his troublesome fellow-citizen, Garza, the insurrectionist. Certainly this great array of fine illustrative portraits is worth more than the price of the magazine.

World's Fair Notes.

An Ohio World's Fair commissione has estimated that the exhibitors from his state will spend upwards of $5,000,000 in the preparation of their exhibits for the exposition.

The California building at the Fair will be an imposing structure of the 'old mission" type, 110 by 500 feet, with a dome, and costing about $75,000. It will be surrounded by a hedge of Monterey cypress.

Denmark will spend about $5,500 in showing to visitors, as a leading, feature of its World's Fair exhibit, a Danish dairy, complete and in operation. The dairy interest is one of the most important in Denmark, and the most approved methods and mechanical appliances are utilized in the diaries of that country.

W. L. Libby & Sons, of Toledo, intend to erect, on Midway Plaisance, a factory, in which the manufactare of cut glass can be seen, from the furnace, on through the cutting, finishing and decorating departments, until the finished product is turned out. The factory plans call for a structure 125x200 feet, of stone, iron and glass, and with imposing dome. The firm intends to spend $40,000 on the building alone.

Vermont will have a building at the Exposition without drawing on the state appropriation for the cost of its erection. One hundred substantial citizens have guaranteed $10,000 for that purpose, each one pledging himself to pay $100.

Italy will make no governmental display at the Exposition. The king, however, has recognized the Fair by ap appointing a commission, and Minister of State Rudini has informed vice-president Bryan and director Higinbotham that the government will encourage individual exhibitors in every way possible. He intimated that it would even pay for the transportation of all exhibits. Mr. Higinbotham reports that there is throughout Italy much enthusiasm over the Exposition and that the painters, sculptors and manufacturers of artistic wares are hard at work on intended exhibits.

The governments of Norway and Sweden have, respectively, asked for World's Fair appropriations of $61,288 and $53,600. In Norway a number of private citizens are raising a fund of $10,720 with which to build and send to Chicago a counterpart of the Viking ship which was exhumed near Sandefiord a few years ago.

Michigan's building will measure 100x140 feet and be three stories high. It will be constructed of Michigan material, which with the furnishings will be donated. Though but $20,000 of the appropriation will be devoted to its erection, it will in reality be a $50,000 building.

Baron de Berlepsch, German minister of commerce, has written to the chamber of commerce of Crefeld, the principal place in Prussia for the manufacture of silk goods, that the Emperor ardently desires that there should be as fine a display as possible of German silks and velvets at the Chicago World's Fair. A majority of the silk and velvet manufacturing firms in the Rhenish provinces will comply with the wishes of the Emperor, whose interest in Germany's share of the exhibition is having a stimulating effect in all directions.

Special World's Fair commissioner Alexander Campbell has returned from Australasia and reports that great enthusiasm over the exposition is felt in that part of the world. New South Wales, South Australia, Victoria, Queensland, New Zealand, Tasmania are all making extensive preparations for their representation, and splendid exhibits are reported sure to be sent. Three new steamers between Sydney and San Francisco are about to be put on.

Remenyi, the well known violin virtuoso, has made application for a space of not less than 400 square feet in which to exhibit his great collection of rare African ethnological specimens. The selection, which comprises over 1,500 carefully selected specimens, has been formed during the last forty years, and is beyond question the most perfect of its kind. It is especially rich in the ancient regal symbols in use among the Zulus, including sceptres, royal bracelets, which were used instead of crowns, and other emblems of hammered silver, of carved and polished ivory and of rhinoceros horn. The royal bracelets are especially interesting. They are hollowed rings made from transverse sections of huge elephant tusks and, until his death, were never taken off, after once placed on the arm of the king. There are also several splendid specimens of the exceedingly rare and beautiful royal silk mantles of the sovereigns of Madagascar, three hundred and more years ago. These mantles are curiously adorned with broideries of metal and of uncut precious stones and of feather work. Every specimen in the collection is perfect and unique of its kind.

Mr. Barilusow, of St. Petersburg, Russia, a dealer in fine oriental goods, intends to exhibit in the Exposition rare carpets, shawls, hangings and textile fabrics from the far orient. He will furnish a number of rooms in rich oriental styles representing the residences of the wealthy Mahometans of Asia, and by way of contrast the tents of the nomad tribes of the Kirguiz Tartars. Some of the apartments will be in the style of the Caucasus, others in the Bokkara and Chiva styles. The furniture and decorations for these apartments have been for the most part collected at great expense in the remote orient. Suirnow & Co., of the same capital will exhibit a complete suite of apartments of a "Boyar," or wealthy Russian noble of the XII century, and also the cabin of the rich Russian peasant of modern times. Each of these exhibits will be in a separate pavillion of distinctively Russian architecture. The great samovar factory of Toula, Russia, will send to the Exposition a large exhibit of its products. It will also erect a great tea-saloon that will be a great reproduction of the most luxurious of these establishments to be found in the great cities of Russia in the early part of this century.

The Light of Other Days.

The date when man first discovered how to supply himself with artificial light must be very far back, but many generations went by before he had anything better than torches for out-door use, and for in-door conveniences a wick floating loosely in a vessel of oil. Gas, as an illuminant, is not old, the electric light is the invention of yesterday, while there are thousands of people not yet three score and ten, whose youthful lessons were learned by the feeble gleam of a tallow candle. In the country households, the manufacture of a weekly or monthly supply of candles came as regularly as wash day. The soldiers of the late war remember "star" candles very well, but doubtless few can tell whence the name. The discoverer of a process to separate glycerine and fatty matters from stearic acid in the making of candles was the Frenchman DeMille, whose factory in Paris was located at the "Barriere de l'Etoile"—barrier (or gate) of the star—and from this circumstance his manufactures were known as "star" candles. The days of such illuminators are gone, and the luxurious cars of our modern railroads are lighted by gas or electricity. To many eyes, however, the electric glare is unpleasant, but all are satisfied with the soft yet brilliant illumination of "The Burlington's" vestibuled train by the Frost Dry Carburetor System. For tickets over this popular line, or any information, call on local ticket agents, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

How It Works.

Farm, Stock and Home.

The other day there were owned and for sale in a certain large grain market 5,000,000 bushels of wheat, to be delivered to purchasers a few weeks hence. There were also on the market men enough, speculators and all, to buy that much wheat on the conditions named. The trading began; wheat was offered at a price satisfactory to buyers, purchases were made until each buyer had exhausted his ability to buy, each had enough, or all he had money to pay for, and the trading stopped. The buyers were happy, thinking they had bought all the wheat for sale that day, and that to-morrow the prices would therefore be higher. But what was their astonishment to learn at the close of the day that not a bushel of the five million had been touched; that the demand for that day had been supplied by mythical wheat, by "wind," and that the original wheat, augmented by another day's receipts, would be on hand to-morrow to depress prices. The real wheat also found at the close of the day's business that the wind was in sufficient quantity to exhaust the capacity or disposition of the buyers for that day, they failed to realize an expected profit, and resolved to buy no more real wheat except at a price that would protect them against the sales of mythical wheat. In the meantime the men who sold what they did not own did it in the expectation that they could at time of delivery buy wheat enough lower than they sold for to make a handsome profit, and all their efforts during the succeeding weeks will be devoted to bringing about that result. Such is wheat gambling, and such its effect on producers and legitimate dealers.

NEWSPAPER LAW.

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office, whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for the payment.

2. If any person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.

3. In suits for subscriptions, the suit may be instituted where the paper is published.

4. The Courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the post office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, while unpaid for, is prima facie evidence of intention to defraud.

Chicago Tribune:—THE POLK COUNTY (Minn.) JOURNAL prints in full a Tribune editorial denouncing the crank demand for cheap money, and hints that it misrepresents the farmers of the country. It says that as a rule they do not desire any wildcat schemes to prevail, whatever a few self-styled leaders in the Alliance may say, and that the farmers demand an honest dollar, but want "enough honest dollars to prevent a few speculators cornering the market at the expense of the balance of mankind." It says the farmers are not going to be led into any wild schemes of designing sharpers, though it is possible they may be led into a few errors, but that "ridicule and abuse of them as a class will not avail to convince them of their mistakes." The article quoted does not contain a single reference to the farmers, as such. It denounced the wild schemes of the Alliance leaders assembled in convention at St. Louis, and said that if those plans were adopted "the poor, silly, ignorant and deluded tools would curse their own folly as bitterly as do the people in Argentina, who were misled by a similar delusion." There was no statement that these dupes are farmers, or that any particular number of them belong to the agricultural class. It is pleasant to be assured by good authority that the great mass of the farmers in the Mississippi Valley do not desire wildcat schemes to prevail. But the Tribune did not say anything to the contrary, as THE JOURNAL must be free to admit, if its editor will carefully read over again the article to which he refers.

A Land of Fruits and Flowers.

No where else in the world are there found more fertile valleys, more beautiful flowers or more fragrant breezes than in the tropical Central American State, Costa Rica—never warmer than 75 degrees, never colder than 65 degrees. The water supply is pure and abundant, the soil is extremely fertile, successive crops being grown each year without affecting it. On the coast is raised bananas, rice and coconuts; on first plateau and valleys, sugar cane and cotton; higher up tobacco, cochineal, cactus indigo. Here are the coffee lands. No country on the globe can compete with Costa Rica in the raising of coffee—40 acres of coffee trees will pay greater than a 1,000 acre grain farm and you can live in a beautiful southern country where fruits and vegetables mature every month in the year.

A splendid chance for the poor man, for the man of moderate means. You cannot afford to let this opportunity go by.

The eyes of the world are now turned toward this country. The Nicaragua canal will be built and this fair country will be quickly populated. You must not wait until others have secured the best lands and locations.

For the annual charter election for said city to be held on the Fifth day of April A. D. 1892, and the following places are hereby established as polling places of said election districts at said election, to wit: First Ward, City Hall; Second Ward, Wm. Watts' old office; Third Ward, Commercial Hotel sample room on Broadway street; Fourth Ward, St. Louis Hotel sample room, and Fifth Ward, E. D. Childs' office.

Upon the call of ayes and nays the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative—Buhn, Jennings, Jerome, Marshall, Marlette, McGlogan, Steenerson, Walker, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative—None.

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the President of the Council.

Passed this 8th day of March, 1892.

JOHN CROMB,
President of the Council.

Approved the 11th day of March 1892.

ALEX. MCKINNON,
Mayor.

Attest: E. C. CARRUTH,
Clerk.

Moved by Alderman Marshall, seconded by Alderman Walker, that the contemplated G. A. R. encampment and Fourth of July celebration matter be referred to the ways and means committee and that the chair appoint 5 citizens to act in connection with the ways and means committee. Carried.

The chairman appointed the following gentlemen to act on the committee: C. H. Mix, Wm. Anglim, L. Ellington, A. D. Stephens and C. E. Sawyer.

On motion the verbal communication of the chief of the fire department relating to the inefficiency of the fire ordinance and the duties of the fire warden, be referred to the fire committee to examine into the matter and report at the next meeting. Carried.

Alderman Jerome excused.

At a regular meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston held the 8th day of March, 1892, Alderman Marshall offered the following resolution which was seconded by alderman Walker,

The city council of the city of Crookston doth hereby assess and levy upon the several lots and parcels of land below described the respective sums of money set against each lot or parcel, this assessment is made to defray the costs of constructing sidewalks along the north side of Fourth street from the intersection thereof by Broadway street in the city of Crookston to the intersection of said Fourth street by Elm, in accordance with a resolution of the city council, passed the 8th day of September, 1891, and published in the official paper of the city on the 1st day of October, 1891; the amount levied and assessed upon each lot or parcel being the amount necessary to build such sidewalk along and fronting upon such lot or parcel:

Upon the call of ayes and nays, the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the negative—none.

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the president of the council.

Done at a meeting of said city council the 8th day of March, 1892.

JOHN CROMB,
President of the Council.
E. C. CARRUTH,
CLERK,

Moved by Alderman Walker, seconded by Alderman Marshall that the clerk be instructed to advertise for bids to construct a sidewalk along the north side of Fourth street from the intersection thereof by Broadway street to the intersection of said Fourth street by Elm street, said bids to be opened at a meeting of the council on Tuesday, March 22d.—Carried.

On motion Council adjourned.

A LIVELY BOOM.

Pioneer Press.

The excitement of those interested in Minnesota iron-producing lands is now at white heat. The great flurry over the discoveries of the Gogebic range in Wisconsin did not equal the activity that has followed the disclosure of Mesaba's wealth; for it is believed that, both in quantity and quality of product, these newly opened mines will surpass anything in the country. And so, after a year or two in which speculative activity has been dammed up and preparing to rush with redoubled energy down the first channel to be opened, people have gone wild over the new source of wealth. The whole country is full of prospectors, and every acre of available land is being sought for. Companies are organized by the score, and several millions of corporate capital appear daily on the records of the state. Each piece of property is abundantly stocked, either with or without examination and development, and investment and trading in these stocks go on at a lively pace. There are busy times in Northern Minnesota in these days, and Duluth is fairly overrun with the people who have come prepared to win a fortune by the bold stroke of a day.

Neither the presence nor the absence of booms can alter the essential facts; which are that the existence of immense quantities of iron ore, of the finest quality and the most perfect adaptability to manufacturing purposes, in the northern portion of Minnesota, from the Vermillion and Mesaba ranges westward, has now been demonstrated. Just what these properties will turn out to be when more carefully worked none can say; but there is iron ore enough in sight to make this probably the first state in the Union in iron production. It is true that day is still some distance off. The capabilities of but few of the mining properties have been tested. Time and capital are needed for development. Out of all the numerous concerns whose stock is bought and sold upon the market, there will be in the Mesaba, as there was in the Gogebic excitement, a comparatively small number that settle down, after trial, into handsome and paying concerns. The rest will be forgotten.

It would be a good thing for the public to remember this just now. There is no profit to anybody in a run of speculative fever; and the discoveries are real enough, the possibilities of wealth which they open up are great enough, to be accepted in soberness, without the excitement of the boom. Let people who are already dabbling in iron stocks, or who are tempted to deal in them, exercise a little caution. The iron is there, in quantities as great as represented; and the future of this state will be all that the most enthusiastic picture it. But, in the present state of the matter, no one can know which will be the great properties, and where the big money will be made. It will be the better for us if this splendid good fortune shall not tempt us to make it the basis of a speculative movement that can only retard instead of advance our prosperity.

Interests Growers as Well as Manufacturers.

New York Press.

It cannot be impressed too strongly upon wool growers that their prosperity depends first of all and above all upon the prosperity of wool manufacturing. If they sell their product at all they must sell for consumption in American mills. No one ever heard of a foreign manufacturer coming to this country after raw wool for his factory.

The democratic plan for dealing with wool and woolens, as outlined in the wool bill recently agreed upon by the Ways and Means Committee, would, if put in operation, not only subject our wool growers to the destructive competition of cheap Australian and Argentine wools, but would also reduce the demand for wool of any kind in American mills. Mr. Springer himself acknowledges that he expects an immense increase in imports of manufactures of wools under the low rates of duty proposed by him.

He must also agree that such an expansion of imports will restrict the output of American made goods. That it would do so we know from experience. In 1840 the demand for wool from American mills was 3.4 pounds per capita. After 1846 manufacturers of wool were treated by our tariff laws much as Mr. Springer wishes to treat them. The result was that in 1860, after twenty years, the requirements for home manufacture had not increased but still remained 3.4 pounds per capita. From 1860 to 1880, under protection, our requirement for home manufacture nearly doubled, reaching six pounds per capita.

There is a lesson and a warning here for wool growers and manufacturers alike. Their interests in tariff legislation cannot be divorced.

The Beginning of Spring.

Perhaps you think you know when spring begins; when you shed your fur coat and see the grass coming up. But unless you are familiar with the old-fashioned almanac, it would be safe to wager that you do not know that spring begins to-day. On this day the sun enters the zodiacal sign of Aries, or the Ram, and the vernal season is with us again. In the latitude where the inventors and principal users of the zodiac (they have been dead a good while) resided, this was about the date they began to plow, and they opened the spring campaign by offering a sacrifice to the gods for a prosperous year. The sacrifice usually consisted of a ram, and he was given a place of honor in the zodiac as a sign of spring. But though it is hardly spring here yet, it is time to look up a location for the summer's work, and if you are thinking of moving to the fertile wheat fields of North Dakota, the corn-raising prairies of Nebraska and Kansas, or the mines and ranches of Colorado, South Dakota or Wyoming, The Burlington is the line over which you can get there with speed and comfort. In fact, if you are going anywhere, this is really "the only." For tickets, time tables, maps, and any information, call on any agent of this or connecting lines, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Jackson Park will retain as one of its permanent attractions the buildings which Japan will erect for its headquarters at the Exposition. The building will be modeled after one of the most famous and architecturally unique of Japan's ancient temples, and with its surrounding garden will cost $70,000. About 40,000 square feet will be occupied. The South Park commissioners have accepted the offer of S. Tegima, representative of the Mikado, to give the structure to Chicago on condition that it be kept permanent and in repair, and that one room in it be devoted to a public exhibit of Japanese works which the Japanese government agrees to replenish from time to time.

Wheat—1 Hard 71.
1 Northern 70.
2 Northern 64.
3 Northern 60.

Go to Wheeler for money.

Miss Nellie McAvoy has gone to St. Hilaire to learn telegraphy.

A. Humphreys, an attorney from Minneapolis, was in the city last Thursday.

Wm. Hammond left for Bismarck on Monday evening. He is much pleased with Crookston.

Will Cleary left on Sunday evening for Oregon City, Oregon, where he has secured a lucrative situation.

Charlie Vine is not doing any bragging but he is just simply selling the choicest cuts in the market. Try him.

H. D. Pinkerton came over from Michigan City last week on a business trip and to visit relatives and friends in the city.

Martin Haugen, a livery man of Fertile, and Tom Ellis, a farmer, paid THE JOURNAL a pleasant call on Friday of last week.

E. Roberts is rejoicing in the arrival of a little farmer boy at his house, which event occurred last Friday. All doing well at last accounts.

Warren is to have another bank. H. L. Melgaard, of Argyle, A. Grindeland, of Warren, and H. Steenerson, of this city, are interested.

Alderman Schmidt's little daughter died on Thursday of last week and was buried on Saturday. The little one had been ailing about a year.

Chas. Rapp and wife, of St. Hilaire, have engaged passage for the old country on the steamer Etruria and will leave New York on March 26th.

Tom Bjoin returned last week from a trip to Iowa where he went after a carload of choice work horses—and got them. He has a few to sell.

Mrs. Chris Houston continues to improve very slowly. She has had a very severe siege but the prospects for her ultimate recovery are good.

In his suit against the school district in the 5th ward, Frank Deming was beaten on the point that he had no written contract with the district.

Every one should try and attend the Congregational church next Sunday night and hear Rev. Mr. Battey's new lecture, "The Royal Treasures of Life."

Ben Clements was up from Little Falls this week. We shouldn't wonder if Ben intends coming back to Crookston to go into business in the near future.

Dr. A. Nelson was up from Fertile last week attending the meeting of the Republican county committee. The doctor reports a successful business year.

Mr. R. P. Herrick returned on Sunday morning from a visit to New York looking very well. Mr. H. says it seems good to be back to civilization once more.

W. A. Marin sends in a list of 21 subscribers to THE JOURNAL hail fund from Melvin post office, this week. Mr. Marin has been doing excellent work in a good cause.

Mrs. J. B. Copeland, Mrs. I. U. Jennings and Mrs. C. E. Sawyer entertained their lady friends at a "tea" at the residence of the former, on Thursday and Friday of last week.

Uncle John Ross says that was the wildest wind-storm he ever saw, but, he said, "it was the last kick of winter. The farmers may now get their plows ready for they soon will have a chance to go to plowing.

Andrew Nelson was over from Grand Forks this week visiting friends and looking up business. Mr. Nelson carries a large stock of monuments, gravestones, &c., and says he is doing a large business this year.

Wilson & Thompson have been fixing up the interior to their place, put in new mirrors and fixtures and will repaper and renovate generally. When completed they will have one of the neatest places in the city.

The latest reports from Walter C. Lee are to the effect that there is a vast improvement in his condition and strong hopes are entertained of his ultimate recovery. His many friends are earnestly hoping for the best.

Brown Knudsen, Brown A. Hovik and four other farmers were up on Monday looking about with a view to purchasing a dozen drills or so. Mr. Hovik informs us that Garfield farmers' have raised a fund for the hail sufferers.

Ed. Ross was out on the street again on Monday. At the time of the accident at the Reckett block it looked as though Ed. would never be able to navigate again without the aid of an artificial leg, but he is going to be almost as good as new.

The article that we reproduce from the Pioneer Press this week is timely in view of the great iron excitement at Duluth. People don't want to lose their heads and invest in everything offered in the line of mining stocks—in fact they should be extremely careful how they invest at all.

Andrew Eiken visited the Zenith city last week.

Wm. Davidson was in from Keystone farm on Monday.

Tom Bjoin opened the week by selling one horse on Monday.

I. U. Jennings is getting in a large stock of very fine furniture.

Try Charlie Vine's meat market once. He will make it an object for you to call and leave an order.

Furniture can be bought at I. U. Jennings' store, No. 21 Broadway, at lower figures than ever before offered in this city.

Billy Davis, Bert Duntley's barkeeper cut his right hand severely last week handling a barrel. He will be liable to be laid up some time.

This week M. R. Brown receives another lot of fine horses which may be seen at his new stables on Main street. Call early for choice.

The late District Commander, C. D. Parker, was in the city on Tuesday, shaking hands with such of the comrades as he could meet.

G. W. Richardson was found guilty of burglary last week and sentenced to a term in Stillwater. He was taken to Stillwater on Tuesday night.

Tom Kelley intends to build a foundry on Main street, opposite Brown's new stables. He had commenced the work but the wind of last week levelled the frame to the ground.

Tom Hunt met with an accident on the Fosston line on Friday. Some way in jumping off the engine he sustained a simple fracture of one leg. Tom will not fire any more for some days.

"Do you know" that J. W. Wheeler as money to loan at reasonable rates and no long waits for the money to come from some place? He has it on hand ready for delivery as soon as the papers are made out.

The Fierce & Albright Comedy Co. opened a week's engagement at the Grand on Monday night in "Woman Against Woman." This is an excellent troupe and will no doubt fill the house each night. In their repertoire are some of the best plays now before the public.

Green goods circulars still continue to circulate in this county notwithstanding one gang was recently broken up in New York. THE JOURNAL receives a circular from a friend in Mentor this week. No JOURNAL reader will be caught by such chaff, as the game has been too thoroughly exposed in these columns.

Ole E. Rude lost a cow and three calves last week, frozen in the storm. The cow was the only milch cow he had and the loss to Ole is a severe one. He is one of the men who lost his crop by hail last fall. Ole has little left but his teams, his farm and his ambition. Such men should be helped by generous neighbors.

Oscar Strand came down from the woods on the Clearwater last week where he has been during the winter acting as stable boss in a lumber camp. Says the cut was unusually large this winter but owing to the recent warm weather which took the snow off they will be unable to bank all of the logs. Oscar added his name to THE JOURNAL list.

Comrade A. Burnam brought in four potatoes, called Ben Harrison, for THE JOURNAL man to sample. Their combined weight was eight pounds and they were the finest potatoes we have seen this year. Comrade Burnam is one of the successful farmers of Polk County and is now talking of building a large and comfortable farm house.

"Passion's Slave" was the play at the Grand on Tuesday evening. It was a new play here and well played. Each purchaser of a ticket gets a number and on Saturday evening, a riding horse, saddle and bridle will go to the holder of the lucky number. Matinee at two o'clock on Saturday, at which 12 dolls will be given to the little girls holding the lucky numbers.

Chip o' The Old Block was the play put on at the Grand Opera House on Saturday evening. It is a light comedy farcical skit without any plot to speak of and when well presented is quite amusing. We notice that there are some in our city who seem quite carried away with this sort o' thing, but more who do not seem to enjoy that style so well.

Mr. T. Christianson was held up on Thursday evening by a foot pad and relieved of a silver watch. Later on policeman Robinson ran the fellow in who denied any knowledge of the affair, but the police followed the affair up and found a man who had seen the prisoner digging in the snow near the water tank, and upon search the watch was found buried in the snow.

A man named O'Brien, from St. Hilaire, went into Alderman & Sylvester's hardware store last Thursday and asked to look at some revolvers. When he thought he was unobserved he quickly secreted one of them, but not quick enough, however, and he was raked in by the police who found another revolver upon his person loaded for bear. He seems to have a decided penchant for hardware.

P. S. C. E. at 6:30 as usual, and at 7:30 Rev. R. H. Battey will deliver a new lecture entitled "The Royal Treasures of Life."

A Large Foundry.

Nine years ago the coming summer a little plant was put in on Clements' Addition and a small foundry business commenced by Morrisey Bros. Very soon finding that these quarters were limited and that their growing business required a more central location they moved their plant to Sampson's Addition, putting up larger buildings where they remained for several years when J. E. bought out his brother's interest, his brother haying caught the western fever and had to go. Two years since J. E. purchased a site near the Great Northern depot and removed the plant to it, and last fall's business convinced him that he would have to still further enlarge and put in more machinery if he would keep up with the procession. Being just that kind of a man he made his arrangements accordingly and a few weeks ago started out on a visit to the great foundrys of the country in Cincinnati, Milwaukee and Chicago, at which place he tarried for some weeks and purchased a lot of machinery for his Crookston foundry which will enable him to do all kinds of saw mill work, agricultural implements and, in fact, anything and everything in his line, as he says his shop will be completely equipped with everything necessary. The new material will be along in a few days and as soon as the weather permits, alterations in the shops will be made. Mr. M. says while in Chicago he visited the Exposition grounds where the work of putting up buildings is already in progress and some of the buildings well along. He says the Expo bids fair to be a big thing.

Don't forget that M. R. Brown will be on deck again this week with another lot of those choice, heavy mares. It will cost you nothing to go and look them over, but if you buy you are sure of making a good bargain. The fact of his having sold so many car-loads this spring proves that Brown's horses are good ones and his prices satisfactory.

Mr. R. Casmev, of Euclid, called in on Monday to set that subscription ahead a peg and report observations on his Winnipeg trip, from which city he has just returned. He says the storm was evidently very much harder in Manitoba than here and he saw evidences in the bodies of horses and cattle strewn along quite numerously. He saw some wheat in shocks and lots of wheat in stacks along the road. Mr. C. gives it as his opinion that wheat in stack will all be unfit for seed even if it can be threshed in time, which is doubtful.

By invitation of the young people of Thief River Falls, Rev. R. H. Battey will deliver two lectures, one at the Falls and the other at St. Hilaire, on Monday and Tuesday evenings of next week. The lecture Monday night at the Falls will be "Sister, Daughter and Lover." and Tuesday at St. Hilaire, "Brother, Son and Lover." These are two of Mr. Battey's best lectures of the course of twelve Sunday evening lectures delivered at the Congregational church in Crookston last year and which were attended by full houses for a period of three months.

The new Methodist church is now ready for occupancy and will be dedicated next Sunday. The audience room with its new carpet, pews, pulpit, &c., is attractive and cheerful. Rev. C. H. Stocking, of First Church, Duluth, a man of considerable ability, together with the Presiding Elder of Fergus Falls district, and others, will be present to conduct the dedicatory services. The Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist and Norwegian Methodist churches of the city have all received a special invitation to participate in the services. A general invitation is extended to everybody, and all will be gladly welcomed. Services at 10:30 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. A good time is anticipated. Come and enjoy it.

Hallock News: Dr. Thomas, the famous Crookston dentist, had a good run of business this week. Several persons were anxiously awaiting his arrival on Tuesday, and new patients took up all his time as long as he staid. All who have had occasion for his professional services speak in high terms of commendation of his skill.

At the People's Party meeting on Saturday night the following ticket was put in the field:

For Mayor—Frank Ives.
For Ald. at Large—Elias Steenerson.
For Treasurer—A. P. Hanson.
For Clerk—P. M. Ringhahl.
For Assessor—T. B. McManus.
For Aldermen—
First ward—I. Simmons.
Second ward—Wm. Munch.
Third ward—W. E Kelsey.
Fourth ward—J. O. Sargeant.
Fifth ward—A. McGregor.

Vermontville (Mich.) Echo: While at the depot the other evening we met Mr. A. N. Hixson, who went west from Portland, Mich., eleven years ago and settled at Crookston, Polk Co., Minn. He says he did not have a dollar when he settled there, but now has a farm of 1,750 acres, with 1,270 acres under cultivation, a steam thresher, twelve self binders, a power feed mill, good house, barns, granaries and other buildings necessary for such a farm. Last year he raised 15,000 bushels of wheat, 2,500 of oats, 3,000 of barley. He believes that no other country in the world can surpass the Red River Valley.

THE STORM.

The storm of last week, while it was the most severe one of the season, and in fact for several years, did not do as much damage in Crookston as has been reported by some papers. A few signs were blown down, a plate glass in Sture's store broken, one in W. D. Wilson's store, a part of the front to Charlie Vine's meat market, also a part of the front of Rasmusson's hardware store demolished. Tom Kelley's new foundry, just being built, was wrecked, and a tin roof or two took wings and fled. The average amount of damage was comparatively small for such a high wind as that was.

A Good Temperance Meeting.

Last Sunday the four churches, Baptist, Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian, of Crookston, united in holding a temperance meeting at the Congregational church. It was well attended, the main audience room and the parlor being full. Short, stirring addresses were delivered by Messrs. R. Stanton, A. A. Miller and C. McCaslin, and pastors J. J. Edwards and R. H. Battey. The main thought of each address was total abstinence for the individual and close every saloon by the enforcement of good laws. Much good is done by holding such meetings as the one last Sunday night.

Telephone Delusions.

Strange as it may seem, says Electricity, there are auditory as well as optical delusions. Every subscriber has two or three girls in his mind whom he considers active and obliging. He has absolutely no means of knowing who they are but he thinks he can tell them by their voices, and gets irritable when they are off duty. As an illustration, not long ago a telephone official had reason to call on a prominent subscriber, who devoted considerable time to dilating on the efficiency of his girl. He lauded her to heights delightful, and had thought of recommending her to a friend for a lucrative position. The case was reported to the manager, who, upon investigation, found that the very knowing but well meaning gentleman was bewitched by the general sweetness of the telephone office voice. The line, being a particularly light one, had no regular operator, and as a general rule no less than ten different girls handled the wire in a day. But he knew "his girl" every time, which speaks well for the vocal system in use for training voices.

Met Instant Death.

LEWISTON, Minn., Special Telegram, —A terrible accident happened at the farm of Charles Buswell, causing the death of Royal, the seventeen-year-old son of Mr. Buswell. They were employed sawing wood with a circular saw, when it burst, a piece striking the boy, splitting his head and scattering his brains in different directions, causing instant death.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured,

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

PAREPA'S SONG.

That night we heard the Parepa sing—
Do you remember, dear?
What, love, so long ago? To me
It seems but scarce a year.
But oh, that night our hearts were light,
And joy was in its spring;
For we had learned to love, that night
We heard Parepa sing.

Mute, mute, long mute that glorious voice!
But, walking home tonight,
I passed an open window. All
The room within was light.
Deep chords were softly touched: and then
I heard a young voice ring,
Clear, passion thrilled. It was that song
We heard Parepa sing.

Rapt on the crowded walk I stood,
I could not tear away,
You smile; A love song—what to me,
A man whose hair is grey?
Ah! gray indeed! But, Dorothy,
My thoughts had taken wing.
Again, a boy, I held your hand,
And heard Parepa sing.

—WM. T. SMYTH in the New England Magazine.

GRAY BILLY.

WELL, take care of yourselves, children; I shall come home some time to-morrow. Remember that you're the head of the family, Rod; and Nell, you're the little housekeeper, you know. Good-by!" Mr. Lumsden picked up his reins, and spoke to his horses, and the brightly painted farm wagon rumbled away down the narrow wheel-track. The Lumsdens lived "out West." On all sides a great prairie spread away to the level horizon, a sea-like expanse of monotonous grass, broken only by the buildings and cultivated ground of the farm. A lonely enough landscape, to tell the truth; and to-day it seemed even lonelier than usual, for mother had died years ago and father was now away.

But there was plenty of work to do, both indoors and out, so that the day passed without leaving much time for melancholy thoughts, and when bedtime came both were so tired that they fell asleep before they had fairly settled themselves among their pillows.

"Rodney! Rodney! Wake up! Wake up!"

It was Nellie's voice, and there was something in its tones that made the boy spring out upon the floor before he was well awake and stood staring about him with bewildered, half-opened eyes, hardly knowing where he was or what had aroused him. Great waves of red light trembled upon the walls and flashed over the bit of sky that could be seen through the small window. Rodney rushed to look out.

"The prairie's on fire!" cried Nell. The whole country appeared to be ablaze and a high wind, almost a tempest, blew from the very center of the conflagration. Between the fire and house and all around spread the tall dry grass, quick to catch as powder and as impossible to quench.

"Oh, if father were only here!" thought both children. Like any other Western boy Rodney knew in an instant what ought to be done. Mr. Lumsden had been so occupied since taking the farm that he never found time to run a "fire-break" in order to protect his property against the very danger now threatening it. A fire-break is made by plowing two lines of a few furrows each some hundred yards apart, and then burning the grass between. The flames reaching this burned belt, bordered on either side by damp, freshly turned earth, are at once arrested and die away for want of fuel. Every exposed prairie farmhouse ought to be defended in this manner. Nellie, too, perfectly understood the situation.

"We must run a break," said she, while her brother was hastily dressing. He looked up despairingly.

"How can we? Father has both horses. If they were here I know I could manage; but what am I going to do with no team?"

"Why not use Gray Billy?" asked Nellie.

In spite of his anxiety Rodney almost laughed. Gray Billy, the saddle horse, who had never pulled a pound in his life! To even dream of putting him in a plow.

"It's just the same as having no horse at all."

"Perhaps; but I somehow feel that Billy will do it. You know how bright he is—how he seems to understand every word you say to him. Oh, Rodney; please, please try!"

"Well, it's the only thing we can try. But I know he'll never do it; never in the world." While yet speaking Rodney leaped down the stairs, ran out of the house to the stable a few steps distant, and throwing open the doors hurried to Billy's stall. He could see the bright eyes of the gray horse, who turned its head and inquisitive ears toward the disturber of his night's rest, plainly wondering what this untimely visit could mean. Billy was the family pet. He came of a famous stock and had thoroughbred blood in his veins; the blood which puts the horse that possesses even a few drops of it so far above all ordinary horses that he can hardly be said to be of their kind. Trained entirely by kindness, without ever having known whip or spur, harsh words or rough treatment, Gray Billy was an intelligent, almost reasoning animal, his master's loving friend, willing to go anywhere or do anything, to the last heart beat if only he felt that master's hand and heard his voice.

Rodney began fitting a single plow harness upon the slender body of the splendid horse. Billy quivered as he felt the unaccustomed weight of the heavy collar and head stall, but did not stir a foot, only snuffing curiously at his novel trappings and watching the boy with astonished gaze. The last buckle fastened, Rodney led Billy out of the dark stable. The fire was alarmingly near. It seemed to have increased tenfold during the few minutes passed in the stable and now filled the sky with whirling clouds of smoke, while beneath the flames sported higher than ever, approaching closer even while he looked at them. Nellie was on the roof with bucket and dipper, putting out the sparks constantly falling on the dry shingles. She saw her brother and called to him, anxiously: "Make haste! There's hardly time enough, even if"—She did not finish, but she thought, "even if Billy will work." Every thing they had in the world—their own lives—depended upon whether the gray horse would pull the plow to which he was now being tackled.

Snapping the second trace fastening, Rodney led the horse over the grass land toward the point he had chosen for the outer line of defense. Billy followed quietly, taking no notice of the plow bumping and rattling at his heels. This in itself was a wonder. If he had never before felt that clumsy weight trammeling his springy steps he would have kicked it into fragments, as indignant protest being used as a draught-horse. But the critical test was now to come, for they had reached the proper limit and real work must begin. Rodney ran the point of the share into the tough sod, adjusted the reins and grasped the plow handles.

"Come, Billy! Chirrup, old boy!" Billy did not move.

"Come, now! Pull for it, pony!" Not a motion Turning his small head, Billy looked wistfully at his master like a child who tries to read the answer to a hard question in the teacher's face.

"He'd do it if he knew," thought Rodney. But he doesn't know. Oh, how can I make him understand?"

He ran to Billy's head and began leading him, at the same time managing the reins gathered up in one hand, and using every method he could think of to accustom the horse to being directed from behind.

"I'll try once more now!" he muttered to himself. Seizing the handles he tightened the reins and called again: "Come, Billy! Come, boy! Chirrup!" Suddenly Billy understood. Down went his head, he crouched and extended his supple body, tearing the turf under his shod hoofs, and pulled! Rodney began a cheer of joy, but stopped it abruptly. Billy had started, but would he keep on.

Yes, he would. Straining steadily against the collar, he went along with quick, strong steps at a pace that was almost a trot, while the sharp plowshare cut a broad ribbon of black, moist mold—the first line of intrenchment against the enemy roaring away there in the distance.

"Good fellow! Good old fellow!" cried the boy, when they reached the end of the furrow. And Billy, tossing his delicate head in the air, gave a long neigh of delight. He had learned it at last! Back again on the second furrow, faster than ever, the dark earth falling away from the bright steel like water before a steamer's prow. And once more back on the third, still at the same wonderful speed. The furrows were long and the resistance of heavy earth great. The most unfeeling teamster would have rested his slow-going team three times, at least, in the distance which Gray Billy had covered without a stop, at the rate of five miles an hour. But there was no rest possible in the teeth of the roaring fire.

"It's done!" gasped Rodney, exhausted and panting. "But there's the inside line to run still. I don't know if I can do it—or if Billy can." A hundred yards further in he began again. The furrows no longer streamed behind as rapidly as they had, for Billy's gray coat was snowy with foam and he sobbed heavily at every breath. Rodney's arms were numb and aching; he could scarcely lift his feet, but he never ceased cheering and encouraging the horse in a voice now hardly more than a husky whisper, so dry were his mouth and throat, and so painful his lungs.

Not done yet and the fire was but a few yards away from the outer barrier! Was all the struggle to be useless? "Nell! Nell!" he shouted, "run out and fire the break! Drop everything and run. I may just have time to finish while the grass between is burning. Run!" Rodney could no longer see. He still held the handles and still framed his lips to cheering words, though he made no sound. He dully felt it had grown very hot, but there seemed to be no air any more, only stifling smoke, and thought stupidly that it was queer he didn't mind. Then he ceased to think or feel at all.

But Nelly did fire the break, and just in time. The ground between the plowed lines had hardly burned clear when the great outside fire arrived at the boundary and died away, having nothing to feed upon. Gray Billy had fallen in his harness, with Rodney lying insensible upon him. But boy and horse had done their task and saved their home.

* * * * * *

Rodney soon became as well as ever, but Gray Bill will never again be quite what he used to be. No more long gallops for him, but, on the other hand, an easy, happy life through all the years he may live—for hadn't he nobly earned it?—Philadelphia Item.

The Humorist in Congress.

"Once a man establishes a reputation as a wit or a humorist it clings to him for life," said Representative Charles E. Hooker. "Whenever he gets up to speak, people expect to hear something funny. Proctor Knott, you remember, had such a reputation, mainly on account of his famous Duluth speech. I remember, on one occasion, he began a speech in the House in his usual humorous vein. In a moment every member on the floor crowded around him. After he had spoken about five minutes, he said: 'But now, Mr. Speaker, to discuss this bill seriously'—members did not allow him to finish the sentence, but broke for the cloak rooms. They did not want to hear him talk seriously. My friend John Allen is a humorist also, but he uses his humor to good advantage. He makes it tell in its effect on the opposition. It has often been said, you know, that Sunset Cox handicapped his political aspirations with his humor"—Washington Post.

As Gobblers Do.

The pulpit manners of clergyman are so exempt from frank public criticism that many a minister continues all his life in faults of delivery that he might have corrected had he been plainly told of them. In one such case a little girl was instrumental in curing a famous American preacher of an afflictingly pompous air.

His habit was to pause at the end of each division of his discourse, look impressively upon the pews, take a breath so very long that it seemed to increase his size, and then go on with an air of the utmost importance.

One Sunday this good man paused after his "tenthly" for an unusually long time. Little Jane, who had been trying to keep awake, moved as though greatly relieved.

But the clergyman had not finished! He was about getting ready for another "head" when little Jane audibly whispered, "O mamma, he's going to blow himself again!"

THE FARM AND GARDEN.

CHOICE TIT-BITS OF INFORMATION FOR THE FARMER.

Some Early Garden Crops--Early Potatoes--A Quart of Cream--How to Catch a Runaway Horse--Practical Hints.

Some Early Garden Crops.

Lettuce is one of the first and most generally planted of the garden crops. Early curled Silesia is one of the best of the very early varieties. Have the soil thoroughly fined and rich, as a quick growth is necessary to make crisp, tender lettuce. If manure is used, have it well-fined and thoroughly incorporated with the soil. Sow the seed in drills, one foot apart, and cover very lightly. Too deep covering will often cause the seed to rot. If planted very early a light mulch of clean wheat straw will help protect it and aid in making an early growth; it can be removed as soon as the weather becomes warmer. Use seed enough for a good stand, and then if necessary thin out after the plants come up well.

Radishes are hardy and will stand considerable cold without injury. Instead of using much animal manure get a supply of well-rotted chip manure, and after preparing the soil apply it as a top dressing and work into the soil with a good steel rake. Mark out the drills about a foot apart and about an inch deep; sow the seed evenly in the drills and cover carefully. Unless the soil is unusually dry, with the early planting, it is not generally best to firm the soil after sowing the seed. With both radish and lettuce it is a good plan to drop two or three seed of some early variety of cabbage, either early Jersey, Wakefield or early Winningstadt every two feet in every other row. By the time the cabbage plants will need the room the other crops can be harvested, and, as no transplanting is needed, the cabbage will mature a little earlier. The turnip varieties, either white or red, will be ready to use first, and can nearly always be planted for the earliest crop. The half long, like French breakfast, or olive-shaped, come next. Spinach, dandelion or chicory for greens can also be planted very early. Asparagus chicory is highly recommended for greens, and as any of these are easily grown it will pay to sow a few rows as soon as the soil can be worked into a good tilth. With onions that are to be grown from seed and beets that it is desired to have come in early, a good plan is to sow the seed in a hot-bed early, and then when the plants make a fair start to grow, transplant in the open ground. With both of these in many cases a good application of wood ashes given as a top dressing just before the plants are set out will be found beneficial.

Any of these can be sown at any-time now when the soil can be properly prepared. While earliness is quite an item there is no advantage in sowing or planting when the soil is so wet that it will not work readily, and while all of these vegetables will withstand considerable cold, still a quick, vigorous growth is necessary to the best results.

Early Potatoes.

With nearly everyone that grows potatoes, more especially for home use, it is quite an item to have at least a few that will come in very early. New potatoes and peas make an appetizing dish, and if the potatoes are ready to use by the time the peas can be grown a little extra care will need to be given. One of the most important things is good seed of some of the best of the early varieties. Almost every year there are more or less new varieties brought out that are claimed to be very much earlier than anything ever introduced before; but in a majority of cases after a trial a large proportion of these prove of no especial value. One of the best of the early varieties is the early sunrise, it being a few days earlier under the same conditions of growth than the early rose or the beauty of Hebron. A warm, sandy loam that is stirred deep and is well drained and reasonably rich is the best soil in which to grow early potatoes. If manure is used it should be thoroughly rotted and fined, and then be well incorporated with the soil Run out the furrows reasonably deep, using a good single shovel plough. It will save labor to take pains to run out good-sized furrows. With a wheel-barrow or hand-cart bring a quantity of fresh manure from the horse stable and put a good forkful into the bottom of the furrow where the hill of potatoes is to be planted; put it into a compact little pile, as the object in using it is to secure a small amount of heat and also a thorough drainage. Over this put at least an inch of fine rich soil and then plant the potato on this, and cover at least 4 inches deep. If the seed is handled carefully it will help a little if the seed is sprouted before planting; but if this is done, very careful handling must be given in order not to bruise or injure the sprouts or more injury will be done than benefit derived. Good drainage on each side of the hill must be given in order to induce a good germination and a vigorous start to grow.

Thorough cultivation from the start must be given, keeping the soil clear of weeds and in a loose, mellow condition. A few hills planted in this way, if given good care, will be ready for the table in not over ten weeks from the time the seed is planted, but every advantage must be taken to give a favorable condition for growth as possible.

Profit in Small Flocks of Sheep.

A practical sheep raiser thinks there is more money in sheep than formerly. Writing for the Southern Farm he says:

Where farmers have gone intelligently into the handling of small flocks of sheep they have usually procured such results that it has been an object lesson to their neighbors and induced them to do likewise. This is why so many small flocks now are to be seen all over the country than was the case a few years ago. To carry a small flock in connection with the diversified industries of the farm, and in order to still further diversify them, is a wise policy, and we hope to see it more generally adopted. No branch of the live stock business can be made more profitable in a small way, nor will return more for the capital and labor invested. One reason for this is that there are so many channels through which the revenue comes. There is the rapid natural increase of the flock; the annual proceeds from the sale of wool; the food value; the enrichment of the land; and their services in clearing land, which is always worth considering, because they are the best weed exterminators in the world. Another reason why sheep are more profitable than they were in the past is because the average weight of the fleece produced in the United States now is double what it was 34 years ago, and along with this gain in the fleece has been almost a proportionate increase in the size of the carcass and the quality of the meat. It is these high-class features that have made the business more profitable and more attractive than it was in the past, and developement along the same lines will do as much for any branch of agriculture.

A Quart of Cream.

"How much butter will a quart of cream make?" is asked.

Just as many different amounts of butter as there are quarts of cream. It all depends, first upon the cow that gave the milk, the kind of machine, or plan of setting, the temperature in which the milk is set, whether in a water or air-bath, and how long it sets.

In a test report, it was found that in twenty samples submitted from as many sources, that the water contents of the cream varied all the way from fifty up to seventy-one per cent., no two being exactly alike. This would give the first sample forty-three per cent. butter-fat, and the last nineteen per cent. The dairyman who sold the seventy-one per cent. kind of cream based on butter value, needed over twice as much as his cream was worth as compared with the other. Of course the cream, if mixed, would show so much butter, and the two milks divided would make each cream equally valuable by the balance of errors.

This "guessing," with test-tubes and methods of testing, will not do justice. The churn is what we must fall back upon for butter. The acid test will point out our shortcomings and the faults of the churn, but until it is churned, the quart of cream is an unknown quantity of butter.

How to Catch a Runaway Horse.

Most persons, when trying to stop a runaway horse merely add to the panic which has caused the beast to take to his heels. Don't stand in the middle of the road, and throw up your hands and shout. No one ever saw a real runaway stopped by such tactics. Don't stand on the side of the road and yell to the horse to stop. That will merely cause him to be more frightened than before.

As you see the horse coming, start to run as fast as you can in the same direction the horse is taking; when he catches up with you, and before he passes—horses don't go with the rapidity of a bullet from a gun, even when running away—jump for his bridle-rein, and hold to it running along all the while as fast possible. The check thus given by the pull on the bit will almost always stop a runaway. If you are on horseback you can do this with ease and very little danger; for, in this instance, your horse is running, and you have all your strength to give to the runaway.

Practical Hints.

A long-handled shovel, which can be used without stooping, saves the back of the man who uses it.

Any hour when no other work is pressing can be put into advantage in forking over the manure heap.

If not already done cover over your strawberry bed with straw to remain and protect the fruit from the ground.

Set out your new currant plantation as soon as the condition of the ground will permit.

Economy is the proper term for good farming. Save the littles all around. Chips will make as good fire while they last as big cord wood.

Put your sawdust around your currant and gooseberry bushes. They need good manure also and will pay for it.

In setting out trees, shrubs, berry plants, berry bushes or flowers, be sure you leave no open interstices under the roots; make sure that the soil touches the roots at every point.

Cultivating the ground for flowers and delicate early vegetables can be better accomplished by a four-tined spading fork than with a spade.

Visit a nursery and see how spades may be kept bright. The digging up of trees needs the very best kind of a tool. Few farmers have a good spade, and a less number keep it bright and sharp.

The winter winds often pile up the leaves of the woods so that they may be easily gathered and used for bedding down live stock when straw is scarce.

When you set a broody hen give her a green sod for the bottom of her nest; it tends to keep moisture for the eggs. Mark date of setting on each egg and see to it that no hens lay to her or break her eggs.

Vigorous, healthy fowls may almost always be detected by the rich quality of the comb—a sure indication of health. The comb always loses color as disease approaches its worst stages, in some instances turning black, says Poultry World.

Miss Letty Huntley

Is the sister of Mr. W. S. Huntley of Cortland, N. Y., a well known carpenter and builder. Her frank statement below gives only the absolute truth concerning her illness and marvelous recovery by the aid of Hood's Sarsaparilla. She says:

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"Dear Sir: Twelve years ago I began to have hemorrhages and four years ago became so low that the physicians told me

There Was No Hope

and I should soon die. I could not be moved from my bed. Under my face were napkins continually reddened with blood from my mouth. I could eat nothing and had no action of the bowels for a week. The doctors said the cause was ulcers in the stomach. At this time my mother said she wanted to make one more trial, and asked if I would take Hood's Sarsaparilla. I told her it would be

but finding it would comfort her, I began taking it. In a few days the bloating began to subside. I seemed to feel a little stronger, but thought it only fancy. I was so weak I could only take ten drops of Sarsaparilla at first. In two weeks I was able to sit up a few minutes every day. In a month I could walk across the room. One day I asked what they were to have for dinner, and said I wanted something hearty. My mother was so happy she cried. It was the

First Time I Had Felt Hungry for Two Years

I kept on with Hood's Sarsaparilla and in six months was as well as ever in my life. It is now four years since I recovered, and I have not had a day's sickness since, nor any hemorrhage. If ever a human being thanked the good Lord on bended knees it was I. I know that Hood's Sarsaparilla, and that alone, unquestionably Saved my Life."

Catarrh--Remove the Cause.

I was afflicted from infancy with Catarrh, and for ten years with eruptions on my face. I was attended by the best physicians, and used a number of Blood remedies with no permanent relief. MY LIFE BECAME A BURDEN TO ME, for my case was declared incurable. I saw S. S. S. advertised, and took eight bottles, which cured me entirely, and I feel like a new person.—MISS JOSIE OWEN, Montpelier, Ohio.

I was the victim of the worst case of Catarrh that I ever heard of. I was entirely deaf in one ear, and all the inside of my nose, including part of the bone, sloughed off. No sort of treatment benefited me, and physicians said "I would never be any better." As a last resort I took Swift's Specific, and it entirely cured me and restored my hearing. I have been well for years, with no sign of return of the disease.—MRS. JOSEPHINE POLHILL, Due West, S. C. S. S. TO MY NAMESAKE.

Dear little namesake, we may best
Prove worthy of our name,
If known but in the household nest
Or widely known to fame.

If each but strive to live a life,
The purest must approve,
And in the world's broad field of strife
Perform but deeds of love.

I'll strive with all the power I may
To do my highest part,
While purest innocence, I pray,
Holds sway o'er thy young heart

We'll strive each other's best ideal
To be in very truth,
Until the fancy grows so real
We better grow, in sooth.

A STRANGE DREAM.

A Commercial Traveller's Story.

BY JULIA STUART.

SEVERAL years ago I was traveling in the State of Wisconsin, in the interests of a Southern tobacco factory. At that time the lumbering industry of central Wisconsin was in its infancy, and the now prosperous inland cities, with their immense lumber mills, were mere villages of lumbermen and loggers.

Traveling men were correspondingly scarce. We grew lonesome and suffered many hardships of which the travelers of to-day know but little. Consequently I was glad to meet so pleasant a companion as John Sturtevant. Like myself he represented a tabacco firm, but our "brands" were of an entirely different kind; hence, we were not competitors and visited the trade from town to town together.

Sturtevant was my senior by probably ten years—a handsome man, prematurely gray, clean shaven, save for a mustache of a brownish color, which contrasted queerly with his rapidly silvering hair. His clothing was costly, "but not expressed in fancy." He disliked a fop and was strictly business-like in all his transactions; kept a close guard upon his tongue, but spoke intelligently and to the point when he spoke at all. He was well informed, and in short, a gentleman with whom almost any one would readily have made friends at the first opportunity he afforded them. He seemed to take quite an interest in me, and I was proud of it and could have assured him, had I chosen, that the interest was reciprocated.

One pleasant summer night, a few weeks after our first meeting, I invited him into my room (just across the hall from his in the little frame hotel.) He accepted my invitation. We brought forth our pipes, filled them from our respective "brands," lit them and jokingly expiated upon the qualities and merits possessed by each. Thus we chatted pleasantly of our sales and failures to sell; our plans for the coming week, etc., until at last our conversation turned (upon some remark which I can not recall, but in the same manner that thousands of conversations have turned before) into the supernatural—dreams especially.

He then related to me the following story, which I give in his own language, as accurately as my memory serves me, and I am positive that I have forgotten no incident connected with it. I might further add that I have no reason whatever to doubt, in the least, its absolute truthfulness.

Laying his pipe on the table, near by, he began thus:

"I can not say, even after the experience I am about to relate, that I place much confidence in dreams, this one being the only one I have ever been able to trace to anything like tangibility. I am sure that I am no more superstitious than the average of men, and have always chosen to attribute the fulfillment of any dream to chance or coincidence rather than to any other cause.

"Fourteen years ago, last winter, I was in identically the same position which I now fill, excepting the fact that I am now directing the movements of a few men. You will know, of course, that at that time I was a young man, to be accurate, twenty-three years of age. At the time of which I speak I was on my 'maiden' trip, and, as though to insure me to the trials and hardships of a traveler's life, the house had kept me out almost a year without so much as a twenty-four hour's visit to the city in which my parents resided, and which, for the lack of any other, my parents being dead I still claim as my home.

Here he hesitated and passed his hand through his hair. He seemed to be lost in meditation, or in trying to think where he should begin again. Presently he said;

"I will not worry you with the details of a love story, but suffice to say that this same city was the abode of my sweetheart, Mary, whom I had known in infancy, whom I had loved from childhood, and to whom I had been betrothed for two years. I held close and regular correspondence with her, and her entreaties for me to come home were at times pitiful. However, wishing on this trip, above all others, to convince the firm that they need have no fear of my becoming homesick, I had never asked for leave of absence.

"At last, about the 1st of December, a letter reached me from the house while I was in Alabama, stating that 'after the 10th inst, all traveling agents will be at liberty until Jan. 1,' and wishing us a merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. Of course, I was extremely pleased, and mentally calculated that after the day's labor was completed on the 10th I would board the 9 p. m. train for Nashville, and reach home by the morning of the 12th.

"Retiring early on the night of December 6, suffering from no undue mental or physical excitement, I fell into what appeared to me to be a peaceful sleep, in which I dreamed that I stood at the rear entrance of a strange brick house, one which I had never seen in my waking moments, but every exterior detail of which I seemed to note carefully and still remember. Why or how I was supposed to be there, or why I was at the rear door, I do not know, but I was perfectly sure that it was proper to be there, and also equally as sure that this was Mary's home. I knocked upon the door and was admitted by Mary's sister, who, though it seemed not in the least strange to me, expressed but very little concern at seeing me, merely saying, 'Mary is in the front parlor,' and, as persons do in dreams, disappeared. I was alone. Taking a hasty survey of the room, I noticed that it seemed in disorder, such a disorder as results from moving before things are placed in their proper positions. I scanned things closely. A pair of lady's shoes sat in the middle of the room close to the leg of a center table. A lounge sat in the farther end against one of the curtains, which hung over a folding door the other curtain being drawn, disclosing a small room, in which the only article of furniture visible through the curtains was a bureau, such as were so much used at that time.

"It is needless for me to mention every object which I seemed to examine in that one brief moment, though I recall everything vividly, even the carpet, the wall paper, the unhung pictures and their frames; suffice it to say that Mary stood in front of the bureau in the little room, with her long black hair hanging loosely over her shoulders, while she searched for something in the topmost drawer, in utter ignorance of my presence. I gazed upon her a moment, and called her name. She turned toward me with a look of wildest surprise, which quickly turned to one of joy as she rushed toward me with outstretched arms, crying aloud my name. I advanced toward her. As she threw the curtain farther back, in her wild haste, her foot caught under a rug which lay in the doorway, and she began to fall. I leaped forward and caught her in my arms before she had fallen completely to the floor, raised her gently and placed her upon the lounge, not a yard away.

"Her sister had heard the noise we had made and came running in. Mary did not speak. I did not seem to be excited, and can even remember in the dream of having attributed her quiet, as she lay upon the couch, to faintness. Her sister bade me enter an adjoining room to the right, which I did; seeming to know that it was the sister's desire to be alone with her while she prepared her for bed and the treatment necessary to resuscitate her.

"In this other room I began to feel alarmed, and endeavored to allay my fears, as well as to divert my thoughts, by examining things closely. A door with a broken glass opened out upon a driveway, which seemed to have been newly paved, and which led to the street a few steps away. A civic procession of some kind was passing, at which I gazed intently, at first through the broken door, then stepping out upon the drive. I seemed to have forgotten Mary. I advanced but a few steps, when I slipped upon the icy pavement and fell to the ground. The imaginary fall awoke me with a start. I was much excited, but my nerves soon became quieted and my sleep was normal during the remainder of the night.

"So much for the dream, and now for the sequel.

"I arrived home safely and at once inquired about the girls, Mary and her sister, for the dream had made a wonderful impression upon my mind, which grew, rather than diminished, as time went by. They were well, but had moved to another portion of the city but a few days before. 'Strange,' thought I, 'I will go at once and find them.'

"I found the house with ease, having been directed by my father. A domestic upon a step-ladder, with scrub-brush in hand, was engaged in washing the woodwork and pane of glass in the transom, and, at the same time, completely obstructing the front passage. I was told to go to the rear door. I did so, and knocked. This was the very house I had seen in my dream, even to the minutest detail. My knock was answered by the sister, who did not greet me with a surplus of cordiality. She informed me that Mary was in the front parlor, and withdrew from the room, without so much as addressing me a dozen words. Even her information concerning Mary was erroneous, as will be seen.

"The room was identically the same one which I have already described as having seen in my dream, even to its disorder, the pair of lady's shoes, the lounge, the curtains, the unhung pictures sitting on the floor—everything; I was awe stricken, bewildered. The dream flashed through my mind like lightning.

"There stood Mary before the old bureau mirror, her hair hanging loosely over her shoulders. I trembled violently from fright. By a mighty exertion I called her name, which was the first intimation she had of my presence, as she seemed to have entered the little room while I was silently examining my surroundings in the other. She turned, halted a moment, and rushed toward me, calling out, 'Oh, John, John! My dream! My dream! These were her only words. She was falling. Her face was white as that of a corpse. Impelled by instinct. I ran toward her and caught her in my arms and laid her tenderly upon the couch. The same couch. Her sister entered. My God! I shall never forget the absolute terror which seized me at that moment. I was wild. My awful dream was being enacted in stern reality, and I was one of the helpless, powerless actors. Mary seemed to be unconscious; at least she uttered not a word. The sister motioned me into the other room on the right. I went. I acted like a machine. I seemed to be impelled by some unknown power or influence. My senses seemed to have left me. I wondered if I were not dreaming the dream again and would awake with the fall which I seemed to know would inevitably occur. No; it was real. I even examined the room as I had done in my dream. It was the same. The glass was broken from the door. I looked out. A procession was coming down the street. It was too much; I felt myself growing faint—dizzy. I wanted air. Bareheaded, I rushed out upon the drive and—fell.

"That was all.

"Two weeks afterward, on Christmas Day, I regained consciousness. As I grew stronger they told me that my Mary was in heaven. She had expired from paralysis of the heart within an hour from the time she had fallen into my arms. They had buried her, and I never even saw her face.

"In falling upon the pavement my head had struck upon a projecting stone, causing a fracture of the skull and concussion of the brain, from the effects of which my parents and my physician had but little hopes of my recovery.

"There is not much more to say. I am not versed in the science of dreams, but I am informed that it is very, very rare that they, 'come true' in every particular as mine did. When I became well I ascertained the cause of the sister's coldness toward me, which was a rumor concerning me of a purely personal nature, and which I quickly put down. I have always been positive that Mary had experienced a dream similar in every essential particular, to mine."

With these last words Sturtevant arose abruptly, bade me "good-night," and sought his room. I never mentioned the remarkable story to him again; nor did he ever mention it, to me. I have lost track of him completely during the past few years. The last time I heard from him he was still a bachelor, and, if indications are a criterion in such matters, he will probably remain one.

I had his story recalled to me last summer. While in Wisconsin I happened to be in the same town, now grown into a city, in which, years ago, John Sturtevant related me his strange dream.—Indianapolis News.

ESCAPE OF A TRAIN.

It Fortunately Threw a Hard Headed Negro From the Track.

Bacton Higgins, a one-legged negro, of Greensboro, is entitled to the honor of having the hardest head of any man in Georgia.

Recently Higgins loaded himself with whisky and started for a walk down the Georgia railroad track. About a mile from town the whisky got the best of him, and he lay down on the track for a nap. While he was serenely slumbering the up passenger train came thundering along. Engineer Kirsey saw the sleeping negro and endeavored to check the train, but the engine rushed upon Higgins, the pilot striking him in the head and throwing him some distance from the track.

The train was finally stopped. Higgins was picked up and placed on the engine and brought back to the depot at Greensboro. His head was covered with blood, he was groaning, and apparently almost dead. Higgins was turned over to Dr. J. H. Gheesling, the railroad's surgeon, who made an examination. He found that the engine had cut the flesh wide open on the top of the head to the bone, but the skull was neither crushed nor fractured. He dressed the wounds, and in an hour after the accident Higgins was hopping around on his peg leg as lively as though he had never had a collision with an eighty-ton locomotive.

Higgins has been noted for his hard skull, but his last feat excels all previous ones. We have frequently seen men split a hard pine board, an inch thick, wide open by butting it with the top of their heads. It is perhaps lucky for the railroad that Higgins was knocked from the track. If the wheels had struck his head instead of the pilot the train would certainly have been ditched and the engine demolished.—Atlanta Constitution.

HE ENDED THE LESSON.

How a Small Boy Solved a Problem in Fractions.

A young teacher in a Bay City school imparts the rudiments of arithmetic to a very large class of very small boys. The said boys are just beginning the study of that department of science of numbers which is generally known as "fractions" and recently their instructor wished to illustrate to them in the manner in which the parts of an article are named. She called up one of the eight Johnnies of the class and told him to answer the questions that she intended to ask him loudly and plainly, so that the whole class would have the benefit of the information brought out.

"Now Johnny," she said," "if you had three little brothers and your father should divide an apple equally among you, how much of the apple would each of you have?"

"One-quarter," answered the boy promptly.

"Correct. And if you had seven little brothers and your father should divide an apple equally among you, how much of the apple would each of you have?"

"One-eighth."

"Correct. And if you had fifteen little brothers and your father should divide and apple equally among you, how much of the apple would each of you have?"

"One-sixteenth."

"Correct. And if you had thirty-one little brothers and your father should divide an apple equally among you, how much of the apple would each of you have?"

"Say, teacher, pa ain't no Mormon," said little Johnny, and the teacher dismissed the class.—Bay City Tribune.

An English Tale.

I had been traveling in a railroad carriage in the south in company with two very pleasant men who chanced to be seated opposite to me at the end of the crowded car, and bad got out to "buy a lunch," as they say, at a station, my two fellow passengers having promised to keep my seat for me. When I returned to the car I found a tall, guant man, in a broad slouch hat, apparently about to take my seat; but not yet actually taking it.

A glance at my acquaintances opposite showed me why he hesitated. Each of them was holding a cup of coffee to his mouth with his left hand, while his right grasped a revolver covering the intruder. Time being short they were drinking their coffee while they "kept the Britisher's seat." The tall stranger politely retired on my appearing, the others put their revolvers in their hip-pockets without any remark and we resumed our journey.

What amused me most of all, though, was a glimpse I got of a solemn-looking old man about half way down the car, who had drawn out from somewhere an enormous, antiquated, ivory-handled, six-shooter, and was holding it with his finger on the trigger, ready to take a hand in any little festivity that might arise. He looked so disappointed when it all ended in nothing that I felt sorry for him. Every lawyer, says Mr. Wakefield, keeps a revolver in a pigeon-hole of his desk, and any insult to a woman is held to justify her friends in the immediate execution of her insulter.—Exchange.

THE YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER.

INSTRUCTIVE AND INTERESTING READING FOR THE YOUNG.

A Fairy Tale That is Popular in the Land of the Mikado—A Moving Tail—The Boomerang—Magic Eggs.

Japanese Fairy Tale.

It is said that once upon a time a cross old woman laid some starch in a basin, intending to put it in the clothes in her wash tub, but a sparrow, that a woman, her neighbor, kept as a pet, ate it up. Seeing this the cross old woman seized the sparrow, and saying: "You hateful thing!" cut its tongue and let it go.

When the neighbor woman heard that her pet sparrow had got its tongue cut for its offense she was greatly grieved and set out with her husband over mountains and plains crying: "Where does the tongue-cut sparrow stay? Where does the tongue-cut sparrow stay?"

At last they found its home.

When the sparrow saw that its old master and mistress had come to it, it rejoiced, and brought them to its house and thanked them for their kindness in old times, and spread a table for them, and loaded it with cake and fish till there was no more room, and made its wife and children and grandchildren all serve the table.

At last, throwing away its drinking cup, it danced a jig called the sparrows' dance. Thus they spent the day.

When it began to grow dark and they began to talk of going home, the sparrow brought out two wicker baskets and said: "Will you take the heavy one, or shall I give you the light one?"

The old people replied: "We are old, so give us the light one; it will be easier to carry it.

The sparrow then gave them the light basket, and they returned with it to their home.

"Let us open it and see what is in it," they said. And when they opened it and looked they found gold and silver and jewels and rolls of silk. They never expected anything like this. The more they took out the more they found inside. The supply was inexhaustible. So that house at once became rich and prosperous.

When the cross old woman who had cut the sparrow's tongue saw this she was filled with envy and went and asked her neighbor where the sparrow lived, and all about the way. "I will go, too," she said, and at once set out on her search.

Again the sparrow brought out two wicker baskets and asked as before: "Will you take the heavy one or shall I give you the light one?"

Thinking the treasure would be great in proportion to the weight of the basket, the old woman replied: "Let me have the heavy one."

Receiving this, she started home with it on her back the sparrows laughing at her as she went. It was as heavy as stone and hard to carry, but at last she got back with it to her house.

Then, when she took off the lid and looked in, a whole troop of frightful devils came bouncing out from the inside and at once tore the old woman to pieces.

A Moving Tail.

Some one is acquainted with a very fascinating and wonderfully intelligent dog named Lion, who shows plainly that he knows just what is said to him, and also what is said about him to others. He manages to do considerable talking himself with his tail; and a conversation took place one day, when a lady called on his mistress, that amused the visitor very much. During her call, Lion walked into the parlor with an air of being the right dog in the right place, laid himself comfortably down on the soft carpet, and closed his eyes in great content.

"What a handsome dog you have!" said the lady, as her eyes rested on the noble-looking animal.

Lion opened one eye at this.

"Yes," replied his mistress; "and what is still better, he is a very good dog, and takes excellent care of the children."

The other eye was opened now, and Lion waved his tail to and fro along the carpet.

"When the baby goes out," continued his mistress, "he always goes with her, and I feel sure then that no harm can come to her."

Lion's tail thumped violently up and down on the floor.

"And he is so gentle to them all, and such a nice playmate and companion, that we would not take a thousand dollars for him."

The tail seemed in danger of being thumped and shaken off; it went up and down, to and fro, round and round, in such uproarious glee.

There was something different, however, to come. "But Lion has one fault," added the speaker.

The tail was now perfectly quiet, as though it had been turned into stone; and if ever a dog's face expressed disappointment and uneasiness, Lion's did at that moment.

"Again and again have I told him that he must not come into the parlor with dirty feet and lie down on the carpet, and again and again does he disobey me."

Poor Lion! The visitor really pitied him, his expression was so utterly wretched and crestfallen. He packed up, as it were, his eloquent tail, and slunk mournfully out of the room in the deepest humiliation.

The Boomerang.

Three years ago I lived close to an aboriginal camp in New South Wales. This camp was only about two hundred yards from our settlement, and it was my daily custom to walk over to the mooring, as they called it, and study the habits of the blackfellows, as the original natives of Australia are called.

I was naturally more interested in the boomerang than in any other of their weapons, and with a little practice soon learned to throw it. In the language of this tribe, the Wong-eibong, which is situated in the Bogan River region, the boomerang is called a womera.

I shall therefore call it a womera. The womera is made from what is technically known as an "elbow" from the kurrawung tree, and sometimes from the yarran and myall trees. All of these trees belong to the acacia tribe, and have sweet-scented woods.

The blackfellow, having found a suitable elbow, chops it out of the tree, and, as it is generally too heavy to carry home, trims it on the spot into the rough outline of the forthcoming weapon.

After two hours' labor the womera will be reduced to three or four pounds weight, but it is still a long way from being a finished weapon. As it now appears it is a flat, heavy club, longer and thinner at one arm than at the other. The black is a decidedly lazy specimen of the human species, and he will as often as not lay aside his uncompleted weapon for a week or perhaps a longer period. When he resumes work the wood will have become hard and dry, and consequently difficult to work upon, but it never occurs to him that he is now paying for his former indolence. Time, however, is of little or no consequence to the black.

After some paring down the weapon is charred all over, and this part of the work is quite skillfully done, no one part being more burned than another. The charcoal is chipped off, and the blackfellow then licks the weapon all over with his tongue, and places it in a smoky fire of green boughs, which warms it and makes it quite pliable.—Arthur Howlett Coates, in March St. Nicholas.

Magic Eggs.

Blow the substance out of an egg through as small a hole as possible. When the interior shall be perfectly dry fill it about one-quarter full of fine sand, then close the opening dexterously with white wax, so that it appears like an ordinary egg.

The next time boiled eggs are served for breakfast place amongst them, on the sly, your prepared one. And that is the one you must take to put in your egg-cup. Tell the family that your egg is a very obedient little fellow, and that he will hold himself in any position desired. In fact, you can show them that your egg can balance itself on the handle of a knife, stand on the edge of a bottle, etc., etc., etc., whether you put it on its point or give it an oblique position, which last case will seem very contrary to the laws of equilibrium. All that is required to make this trick successful is to shake the egg slightly in the position which you desire it to keep. The sand will become compact and take a horizontal level, permitting the egg, in this manner ballasted, to remain fixed in a position of stable equilibrium.

You may prepare another shell by putting into it some shot mixed with tiny pieces of sealing wax. Heat the whole on a stove, holding the egg in an upright position. The wax melts and with the shot forms a small mass at the bottom of the egg. Let it cool, keeping it in a perfectly vertical position. Then close the hole with white wax and you will have an egg which will refuse to take any but one position. This one you will call the disobedient egg.

Difficult Feat.

In the old days in western Pennsylvania, when the people had little money to pay for teachers, and could spare their children but little time from the field, school "kept" almost incessantly during the few weeks when it was in session, with no Saturday holidays and very brief recesses.

At one little school house among the mountains, an old-fashioned Irish school-master was once employed, who kept his boys grinding steadily at their tasks, but gave them permission to nibble from their lunch baskets sometimes as they worked.

One day, while the master was instructing a class in the rule of three, he noticed that one of his pupils was paying more attention to a piece of apple pie than to the lesson.

"Arrah, there!" said the master, "Jack Bates be listenin' to the lissin, will ye?"

"I'm listening, sir," said the boy.

"Listenin' it is!" exclaimed the master; "then it's listenin' wid one ear ye are an' atin' poi wid the other."

A Popular Mistake.

"Couldn't be hotter at the equator," is a common hot-weather expression; a common way of giving the idea of intense heat.

That is a mistake that is ignorantly said. It "could be hotter" in Detroit than in Equatorial Africa, in the interior, and it often is.

The nights in the torrid zone frequently are cold. Travelers sleep, right over the equator, under a quilt and a pair of blankets. The author of "The Greatest Thing in the World" says that during the hottest month in central Africa thermometer never registed above 96 degrees.

He gives the reason, and with one who knows physical geography there is no question about it.

The interior of Equatorial Africa is not low land, not a steaming jungle as is commonly supposed; the land rises as you go in from the coast, plateau on plateau, until it is from three to five thousand feet above sea level, and we all know that with every 300 feet of ascent the thermometer falls a degree.

Breath.

The following composition by a twelve year-old English schoolboy was the cause of his being recommended to take a special course in physiology the next term. The theme given him was "Breath."

Breath is made of air. We breathe always with our lungs, and sometimes with our livers, except at night, when our breath keeps life going through our noses while we are asleep. If it wasn't for our breath we should die whenever we slept.

Boys that stay, in a room all day, should not breathe; they should wait till they get out-doors. For a lot of boys staying in a room make carbonicide. And carbonicide is more poisonous than mad dogs, though not just the same way. It does not bite, but that's no matter as long as it kills you.

SAVED BY HER BROTHER.

An Emotional Scene in a French Court Room.

A French paper says that Lucille Rome, a pretty girl with blue eyes and fair hair, poorly but neatly clad, was brought before the sixth court of correction under the charge of vagrancy.

"Does any one claim you?" asked the magistrate.

"Ah! my good sir," said she. "I have no longer friends; my father and mother are both dead; I have only my brother James, but he is as young as I am. Oh! sir, what can he do for me?"

"Here I am, sister! Here I am! Do not fear!" cried a childish voice from the other end of the court; and at the same instant a little boy with a lovely countenance started forth from amid the crowd and stood before the judge.

"Who are you?" said he.

"James Rome, the brother of this little girl."

"Your age?"

"Thirteen."

"And what do you want?"

"I came to claim my sister Lucille."

"But have you the means of providing for her?"

"Yesterday I had not but now I have. Don't be afraid, Lucille."

"Oh how good you are James!"

"Well, let us see, my boy," said the magistrate, "the court is disposed to do all it can for your sister. But you must give us some explanation."

"About a fortnight ago," continued the boy, "my mother died of a bad cough, for it was very cold at home. We were in great trouble. Then I said to myself: 'I will be an artisan, and when I know a good trade I will support my sister. I went apprentice to a brush-maker. Every day I used to carry her half of my dinner, and at night I took her secretly to my room, and she slept in my bed while I slept on the floor. But it appears she had not enough to eat. One day she begged on the boulevard and was taken up.

"When I heard that, I said to myself: 'Come, my boy, things cannot last so; you must find something better.' I soon found a place, where I am lodged, fed and clothed and have 20f. a month. I have also found a good woman, who for these 20f. will take care of Lucille and teach her needle-work. I claim my sister!"

"My boy," said the judge, "your conduct is very honorable. However, your sister cannot be set at liberty till to-morrow."

"Never mind, Lucille," said the boy, "I will come and fetch you early to-morrow." Then turning to the magistrate he said: "I may kiss her, may I not, sir?"

He threw himself into the arms of his sister, and both wept tears of affection.—London Daily Telegraph.

AIR WASHED TO ORDER.

Made Clean and Pure For Delicate Lungs.

At the Victoria Infirmary, at Glasgow, Scotland, there is in use an admirable arrangement for removing dirt and fog from the air, previously to its entering the building. In this infirmary the air is renewed six times an hour, and before it enters the wards it is washed by being passed through an air washing screen of cords, formed of horse hair and hemp. This material is closely wound over a wooden frame, and forms a close screen, 16 feet long and 12 feet high, affording nearly 200 square feet of surface. There is constant trickling of water down this screen, by which it is kept wet, and the air, in filtering through it, has the dust and soot particles removed, and when once these have adhered to the wetted surface, a current of air of considerable velocity will not carry them through the screne, but the falling water floats them down into the drain. An automatic flushing tank is fixed in a position whereby twenty gallons of water are instantaneously discharged over the surface of the screen every hour, to flush and remove any accumulations of wetted dust, soot or germs which may not be removed from the screen by the trickling water over the surface. This method will keep fog from entering into the ventilating chambers and hence into the building, and on very foggy days the air within the infirmary is perfectly clear and pure.

SNAKES CHARM FISH:

A Case Where a Snake Charmed a Shoal or Shad.

The water was perfectly clear and not above two feet deep, the day calm and bright and the proceedings below the surface easily observed. In the deepest part of the pool a solid phalanx of little fish, if I may call it, was swimming around and around in a ring of about two feet in diameter, the band being about six inches wide and apparently two or three layers deep.

Around and around they went, at the least motion on our part breaking ranks, to resume their circus at once when we were quiet again. We were interested, of course, and puzzled, and we tried for a half hour or more to learn the cause of such unusual movements.

Our talk, for we did talk, did not disturb them, from which we inferred that they could not hear us; our slightest movement did, from which we inferred they could see us.

Carefully crawling a little nearer, we discovered the center of the moving circle was a large water snake, coiled, quiet and watchful. Ornithologists have told us in unreliable school books that snakes can and often do charm birds, and some have in their more elaborate works tried to substantiate that theory. I never believed it, and I certainly never heard of snakes charming fish; but what were these shad doing? Were they charmed?—American Angler.

Not "Micrococci."

Professor Brieger, of the Berlin Medical Institute, reports an exchange, was busily at work in his laboratory, surrounded by a formidable array of chemical and bacteriological utensils. A distinguished foreign physician called upon him, and watched his absorbing labor with interest.

The professor's attention seemed to be anxiously, but still hopefully, concentrated on a vessel which was enveloped in smoke and steam.

"Guess what I am boiling here," said the professor.

The visitor began to enumerate the entire scale of micro-organisms.

"Micrococci?"

"No."

"Sonococci?"

"No."

"Spirochetæ?"

"No."

"What, then?"

"Sausages," replied Brieger.

UNITED STATES COURT.

An Editor Acquitted of the Charge of Printing a Lottery Advertisement.

Joseph Mueller, who was charged with having published a lottery advertisement in the Dodge County Pioneer at Mayville, was acquitted in the United States court yesterday. The case is an important victory for the Louisiana State Lottery. It was charged that a certain notice that appeared in the paper, which is a German weekly, was an advertisement under the new law forbidding the mailing of publications containing lottery advertisements. The card read as follows:

CONRAD! CONRAD! CONRAD!

CARD TO THE PUBLIC.

While it is true that I have been elected president of the Louisiana State Lottery company, vice M. A. Dauphin, deceased, I am still president of the Gulf Coast Ice and Manufacturing company, and all orders for material, machinery, etc., as well as all other business letters, should be addressed to me as before. PAUL CONRAD, Box 1358, New Orleans.

Gen. E. S. Bragg of Fou du Lac defended Mueller, arguing that the advertisement did not come within the scope of the statue. The jury was out but a few minutes.—Milwaukee Wis., Sentinel, Feb. 4.

Buildings Blown Down.

ST. JAMES, Minn., Special.—The recent storm was the most destructive that ever visited this section. The plate glass front in the store of A. Peck was destroyed. John Schulz's machinery warehouse front fell in. Many windmills were laid low. Several buildings at Sanborn, Iowa, were unroofed and outhouses scattered in every direction.

The Homeopaths.

WASHINGTON, Special— The annual meeting of the American Institute of Homeopathy, which will be held in this city from June 13 to 17 next, promises to be the largest and most important of this the oldest national medical society in the country.

The only good thing some daily newspaper artists can draw is their salaries.

PROTECT OUR BREAD.

The machinery of the law has not been put to work too speedily against the fraudulent use of ammonia and alum in Baking Powders. Both health and the pocket of the people are demanding protection. The legislatures of New York, Illinois and Minnesota have taken this matter of adulteration up, and especially that of Baking Powders. It will be in the interest of public health when their sale is made a misdemeanor in every State in the UNION, and the penalties of the law are rigidly enforced. There is no article of human food more wickedly adulterated than that of Baking Powder.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is the only pure cream-of-tartar powder having a general sale that is free from ammonia, alum or taint of any kind of impurity. It makes the sweetest and lightest bread, biscuit and cake that are perfectly digestible whether hot or cold. It costs more to manufacture Dr. Price's than any other baking powder. It is superior to every other known and the standard for forty years.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is reported by all authorities as free from Ammonia, Alum, or any other adulterant. In fact, the purity of this ideal powder has never been questioned.

THE GREAT HESPER.

TALE OF A BIG DIAMOND.

How an Immense Gem Was Lost, Recovered, and Lost Again.

CHAPTER I.

We landed at Southampton, September 14, 1885, and a ragged crew we were.

The "Judge," Joe Brace, led the way,—a great gaunt man, with long, long legs, a stoop in his shoulders, and a swaying movement of his body and arms when he walked, as if he had a load on his back and a long way to go; a man with a black fell on the back of his hands, a dark beard growing high upon his cheek bones, and a great bush of iron-gray hair sticking out all round his head, and a forelock sticking down over his eye. One could see nothing of his features but a long red nose and deep-set beady black eyes. His fustian jacket was worn to rags at the elbows,—and so was mine, as for that—split in the seams between the shoulders with the constant strain of the laboring arms. Once upon a time his top-boots had been black, but now they were all the same yellow clay color with the trousers that were tucked into them, and just as badly in need of repair.

I followed with Van Hoeck. He held my arm, not for support, but for guidance, because he was stone blind. He was thirty or thereabouts, I believe; but he looked twenty years older than I, who am now but twenty-six. Though he was Dutch by birth he looked like an Asiatic, being a small, dark Jew, with all the characteristics of his people; while I, with my fair skin, light hair, and large frame, am pretty true in appearance to my Northern race. He was better dressed than any of us, for, though he had accompanied us, and roughed it so far as board and lodging were concerned, he had taken only a financial part in the enterprise, his blindness naturally debarring him from a laborious part. His clothes retained something of their original appearance. Albeit he had worn them day after day for eighteen months at the least; whereas mine, what with exposure to the sun, the sweat of work, rough usage, and the strange devices employed in repairing them, were scarcely recognizable as Christian clothing. His face gave more sign of strain and fatigue than either the Judge's or mine, which might well be, seeing how great a relief to the mind physical labor is. There was a furrow between his brows, deep lines descending from the inner angle of the eyes, a pinched look about the nostrils and fleshless checks, that gave a fearful, strenuous eagerness to the weird expression of his face. And that expression was wierd, nay, even repulsive, though his features were not ill-shaped, and it was due chiefly to the peculairity of his eyes. Most people of dark complexion like his, have a dark iris to the eye; but his of a steely gray, and was the more noticeable because there was the iris and nothing else; there was no pupil,—nothing but that gray patch upon the yellowish ball of the eye. He kept his eyes open when his mind was pre-occupied. Often when he was sitting near me while I worked, I have changed my position, that I might not see those ghostly eyes wide open to an African sun, yet unconscious of its glare. There was something terrible in his blindness.

Our rear was brought up by the "Kid." The name by constant use and familiarity had long ceased to be slangy to my ear.

Poor little Lola! she was the raggedest and most disreputable of the lot, though it was not for that reason she walked behind us; indeed, had she suspected that to follow implied inferiority, she would have marched ahead of her own father. That was her character.

The child wore a ragged red flannel petticoat, a camisole that had once been white, and a colored handkerchief tied loosely round her neck. She had a string of colored beads upon her wrist, but neither hat on her head nor shoe on her foot. Her purple black hair grew low down on her temple, and broke into curl over the ears, at the nape of her neck, and wherever it was uncontrolled; it was matted together in a thick, loose plait that fell down to her waist, and tied at the end with a strip of red flannel torn from her petticoat. She had the prettiest little hands and feet, a dark olive skin, a large but beautifully shaped mouth, with the finest teeth I ever seen, and a pair of glorious black eyes, full of audacity, and betraying only too faithfully her wild and ungovernable disposition. Properly dressed (and washed), she might have passed for a Spanish princess; in her present condition there was no mistaking her for anything but the self-willed little savage she was.

The Kid had given us a deal of trouble,—had we foreseen how much, I do not think Van Hoeck or I would have put in that postcript to the agreement which her father, the Judge, induced us to subscribe.

"The Kid has eyes in her head to see with,' the Judge said, in urging her claim upon our future consideration, "end she can use 'em as well as us in lookin' for stones, end likewise, bein' a female, she kin cook our meals for us; she kin wash our shuts, end she kin sew us up, end keep us nice and tidy." Whether she was capable of helping us in these matters, I can not say; all I know is, that she didn't. "What kin you expect?" asked her father in extenuation; "her mother was the darter of a durned greaser, end it ain't the Kid's fault if she's got greaser blood in her."

We came up with the Judge at the dock gates, where he stopped to address a policeman stationed there.

"Kin you tell me, my friend," he said "where the best bank in this town is located?"

I think the policeman's first impression as he regarded us was that we had felonious purpose in asking this question, for he did not reply immediately, and with reluctance directed us to the High Street, and told us to inquire there of some one else.

CHAPTER II.

We marched on to the High Street, our appearance attracting a good deal of attention, and creating some amusement and speculation doubtless. Persons on the opposite side of the road stopped to look across at us, others regarded us askant in passing, and turned around to watch our progress, a few children followed us, thinking maybe that we were about to give some kind of street entertainment.

We found a bank, and streamed in, a small crowd collecting round the door, as it swung to behind the Kid. The clerks suspended their operations, and looked at us in open-mouthed astonishment as we ranged ourselves along the counter.

"Is the manager of this concern in?" asked the Judge. "Hands off," he added, in a roar, as the Kid, slipping her lithe hand under the brasswork protecting the counter, began to finger the scales.

The Kid, unmoved, satisfied her curiosity, then, withdrawing her hand, rested her elbow on the counter, and, dropping her chin in the palm, gazed at the clerks with stolid indifference.

"The manager is in; what do you want?" asked the clerk.

"Let up, Israel," said the Judge, falling back a step, and waving his hand significantly toward Van Hoeck.

"We wish to negotiate a loan on the security of a large diamond that we have brought home from the cape," said Van Hoeck.

"Eight hundred and twenty carahts, fust water," added the Judge; the grandest stone in this almighty universe!"

There was a whispered consultation amongst the clerks, and one went into a private room at the back of the bank, from which he presently returned with the manager.

"I am the manager; what do you want?"

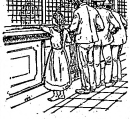
Van Hoeck repeated his statement.

"And what security can you give me that the diamond is genuine," asked the manager with a pleasant smile, "or that it is legitimately yours to dispose of?"

"You will allow, sir, if any one hed lost a stone of this kind he would have made it on safe for us to walk about with it in daylight," replied the Judge, "and as for its bein' genuine, you kin hev the security of your own eyesight."

"I do not profess to be a judge of diamonds, and I can have nothing to do with it," said the manager definitively.

We streamed out of that bank as we had streamed into it, and tried another, but with no better result, the manager telling us that transactions of such a kind were altogether beyond the range of his business; and we found a third, but the manager was absent, and by this time, being convinced that the plan we had proposed was impracticable, we put our heads together in counsel at the corner of the street to determine what course we should take.



"IS THE MANAGER IN"

We were disgusted with Southampton, and, had we possessed the means we should have gone on at once to London, where we might have found some former acquaintance to help us out of our present difficulty. But we had nothing in the world but the things we stood upwright in, and the great diamond. For our smaller finds and our implements we had sold at Natal to make up enough to pay our steerage home, and our spare clothes, our knives, every available thing, we had bartered away in our passage for food to supplement the miserably insufficient steerage fare.

"We kin not pawn the Kid," said the Judge, "end that's about the only perkisit as we could well do without."

It was now near upon three o'clock, and we felt the need of food, having eaten nothing since six, when our last rations were served out to us on the Southern Cross. Our position was a desperate one. With millions in our possession, we might starve in the street, or have to take refuge in the workhouse. It was odd, indeed, and very unpleasant also. At length, being unable to see any way out of our difficulty, we made our way to a police station, and laid our case before the inspector.

"Well, my good fellows," said he, having heard us out, "I don't see how I'm to help you. The Mayor is the proper person to go to, but he's away yachting. The only party I can think of," he added, after a moment's reflection, "who might serve you, is Sir Edmund Lascelles. He's got a kind of museum and buys up curiosities, I know; and a kind old gentleman he is, too. Now, if he's at home—"

We asked him hurriedly where Sir Edmund lived, and he replied that it was out Lymington way—Monken Abbey—eight or nine miles, and any one could tell us the way.

Well, there was nothing better to be done; so we got the director to give us a more definite direction, and then started off in search of the Abbey. The Judge swinging along ahead at a good four miles an hour, the Kid had to trot to keep up with us; but I gave her my hand, and she did not com plain,—it was not in her nature to show suffering in the ordinary way.

It must have been about six o'clock when we found the park entrance to Monken Abbey, and there we were stopped by the lodge-keer, who refused to let us pass without permission from Sir Edmund; but when he heard that we had been sent by the inspector of police at Southampton, he sent his wife up to the house to know if the Baronet would see us.

We sat on a bank near the lodge gate for close upon an hour before we learned our fate; for Sir Edmund was at dinner when the message reached the house, and the servants did not choose to deliver it until he had dined. A servant led us through the park to the Abbey, and took us into a beautiful hall, wainscoted with dark oak, and hung with antlers, old armor and other suitable decorations; and here we waited until Sir Edmund Lascelles came to us. Our spirits rose at the first glimpse of the handsome, portly old gentleman. There was benevolence in the little curls of his soft white hair, and the promise of kind treatment in the genial smile with which he greeted us.

"Well," said he cheerfully, "you have something to sell me, have you?"

"Yes," I replied, "if you can buy it; it is a diamond."

"A diamond! Ah, that's a costly kind of curiosity; but I like them, for all that. Have you got it with you?"

"Yes," said I; and turning over my hand, I opened it, showing the leather case strapped to my wrist; which contained the Great Hesper, as we called our diamond. The Baronet was thunder-struck by the prodigious size of the stone, for he could see that the leather fitted it closely.

"You tell me that this is a diamond?" he exclaimed, lifting the case as it lay on my hand.

"We had it tested at Natal," said Van Hoeck; "it is a white diamond, and, if not the first water is certainly of the second; it weighs 820 carats."

"Is it possible? Come with me. Eight hundred and twenty carats?" said Sir Edmund, in great excitement. "Bring a light into the library at once," he called to one of the servants.

We went into the library, where I cut the stitches of the case, took out the Great Hesper, and put it into Sir Edmund's hand, by which time a reading-lamp had been brought in.

"It is true! "It is true!" said he, examining it under the powerful light. "A wonderful stone,—a perfect form,—a prodigy! Come here, Edith; look at this!"

A young lady who had entered the room drew near. It was only by looking at the facet we had cut and polished that she could distinguish that this was a diamond, for it was dull and gray, and looked like a lump of glass that had passed through the fire.

"It is an extraordinary size, is it not, papa?" she asked.

"Extraordinary, indeed! The Koh-i-noor is not a fourth of the size! See what the book says about that; get down Haydn, my dear."

Miss Lascelles fetched the book, while her father still examined the stone, as an artist might a masterpiece, and presently read aloud:

"Its original weight was nearly 800 carats, but it was reduced by the unskillfullness of the artist—Borghese, a Venetian—to 279 carats; its shape and size resembled the pointed half-rose cut of a small hen's egg; the value is scarcely computable, though two millions sterling have been mentioned as a justifiable price, if calculated by the scale employed by the trade. This diamond was re-cut in 1852, and now weighs 102 1-2 carats.

"Good, good!" cried the Baronet. "With skillful cutting, a diamond of such a form as this need not loose 100 carats. Heavens! he exclaimed, turning to us, "you have the greatest treasure in the world."

"Give me your hand, Thorne; hold me," said Van Hoeck in a low voice, and speaking thickly.

I turned quickly, and caught him as he reeled forward; for he had fainted, either from the want of food, from intense excitement, or both.

AN INDIAN JAILOR.

The Faithfulness of His Reports to His Superiors.

Surrounding the jail, writes a traveler on India, was a large guard consisting of a native jailer, a number of deputies and a few paid wardens, all armed with muskets and amply provided with ammunition, most of it was so old and damp that it could not be utilized in case of an emergency. The posse was commanded and drilled by a handsome old pensioned subahdar [native officer]. This old gentleman wore a collar of large gold beads round his neck, and over his dress of spotless white an embroidered sword belt supported a native sword in a green and gold scabbard. He was a very striking looking old man, and had strict notions of discipline and duty. His father had been at Plassy with Clive.

It was part of this officer's duty to make his morning report at the magistrate's house if the magistrate had not time to go to the jail on his morning round. His usual report was brief and emphatic.

"My lord, the jail is all well."

One morning he continued it thus:

"Be it known to our lordship that the jail cat has had five kittens. Will your lordship order that the cat have an extra ration of milk?"

This he said in the gravest voice, with his hand still at his forehead in military salute. When the order was given for the cat's extra ration he marched off without the shadow of a smile on his face, while the magistrate remained almost convulsed with suppressed laughter.

The Rainy Weather Dress'

The rainy weather gown has materialized, and stands justly among the great inventions of the age. In the intellectual air of erudite Boston the germinal idea was evolved from the nebula of the indefinite, and above the classic mud af Boston's tortuous streets its wearer proudly propelled it through one of last week's heavy rains, mudless's and unspotted to the end of the trip. It is made of green and tan repellant cloth, with a kilted skirt fastened to a short waisted bodice, and is worn over trousers of green cloth, gathered about the knee on an elastic band.

Leggings of the same material as the dress are buttoned over the boots and meet the trousers at the knee. The hat is made of two shades of repellent cloth, and trimmed with dark-green feathers and tan-colored gimp.

Mrs. Ingersoll, the wearer of the gown, reported that the abbreviated skirts attracted less attention than she expected, and said that the women seemed more curious than the men, and turned to take a second look, saying, "Why that isn't so very bad," with a very strong accent on the "that."—N. At the Matrimonial Office.

"You want a partner in life? I have some excellent matches on hand, quite an assortment of wealthy young ladies."

"Thanks."

"Look, here is one with a dowry of a million pesetas."

"Many thanks; but I prefer to marry for love."

"For love? Ah! well, we can also do something for you in that line."—El Liberal de Tenerife.

A REGRET.

You stand beside the dying year,
O friend that knew me in the May!—
In vain you seek the ancient cheer,
And find the winter cold and drear,
In vain you call for yesterday.

You stretch your pleading arms to me,
And bend your manly pride to sue;
But I must turn away mine eyes—
A bitter, bitter thing to do.

Alas! why is it I must deal
With steady hand this cruel blow?
Oh, think not that I cease to feel,
Because I know it must be so.

The New Year comes, the old year goes,
And with it many a cherished wraith;
Forgive my broken faith to you,
Because I keep an older faith.

ENGLISH AS SPOKEN.

Amusing Peculiarity of Pronunciation in England.

It is difficult to know in what district the least objectionable pronunciation obtains, as defects prevail from north to south, east to west, and amongst all ranks and classes. If even in any given locality, an uniform system were adopted, the mystery would not be so inexplicable. Take the northern "U" for instance; mug becomes "moog," and sugar "shuggar."

A Scotchman writes: The first time I landed at Euston Station I went for a cab, and asked cabby whether he were disengaged. I could not catch his reply. "Are you engaged?" I repeated.

"Fo Weelah, sa?" he replied.

I said, "Look here, I want a cab. Are you engaged?"

"Fo weelah, sa?"

"Beg pardon."

"Fo weelah, sa?"

"Will you tell me whether you are engaged or not? Yes or no?"

"Fo weelah, sa?"

Calling, a porter, I remarked that cabby was apparently a foreigner who did not understand English, and requested him to learn whether he was disengaged. Then I ascertained that, according to English as she is spoken in London, "Fo weelah, sa," stood for "Four wheeler, sir?"

The most noticeable thing to Scotsman is how the language becomes emaculated immediately on crossing the border; there is no longer any backbone in it. The letter "r" has mostly disappeared, and the accepted pronunciation of some of the vowels has no place in the Englishman's mouth—e, g., the long "o" invariably issues from English lips as "ow"

But, as already stated, one cannot formulate any rule on which our friends act in their manner of speech. For instance, the upper look down on the lower classes for dropping the "h." There's the story, of course, of the servant girl who was asked if her name was "Anna" or "Hannah."

"Hannah, sir," she replied.

"Oh, Hannah?"

"Now, sir, Hannah."

"Hannah?"

"Now, Hannah."

"Spell it, please."

"Hai-hen-hen-hai, Hannah."

Well, the lower class drop the "h," and, by a double shuffle, stick it on again at the wrong place, but that is apparently a matter of small importance. The members of the "uppa succle" look down upon them, and to show how the matter should be he has a bit of a double shuffle on his own account. "Porter," "waiter," with him become "pawtah," "waitah," but apparently having some kind of hazy notion that the letter "r" should come in somewhere, he waits until he comes across such words as "India," "idea," etc., when he compromises by changing them into "Indiar," "idear," etc., in this way ridding himself of some of the surplus stock of the letter "r" which must have accumulated on his hands. It is insufferably vulgar to drop the "h." but the best of "ton" to drop the "g"—thus, the English "masha" goes out "rydin'," and his horse goes "spankin'" along at a "rippin'" rate.

But an Englishman is justly famed for his notions of fair-play, so a section of the population bestows its sympathy on the poor "r," and, in order that there may be no mistake about its being there, they speak of "somethink," "nothink," "anythink," etc. In fact there is a regular game of see-saw.

There is a common quiz in Scotland to the following effect:—

"Dugald, wass you on the pier this mornin'?"

"I did."

"An' tid you see Tonald?"

"I wass."

Strange as it may appear, something like this occurs all over England. Anglicised it would read:—

"John, were you on the peca this mawning?"

"I was."

"Have you seen Tom?"

"No, I ain't" (am not).

There is no present indicative of the verb 'to have not" in the English as she is spoked in south of the Tweed. The one word "ain't" stands for "am not," "are not," and—to save mental worry perhaps—is also made to do duty for "have not." Thus an Englishman would say "I ain't going," "I ain't been there."

Scotland was supposed to be the home of the pipers, but there are, perhaps, more pipers in London than in all broad Scotland, only in London they are "news" (beg pardon "noospipers." There was once a Cockney adjutant in a Scots regiment who used to get matters somewhat mixed over the letter "a." He would call for the markers "Fall in the mahkas," then in checking off these individuals, he might find "A" Company marker awanting.

"Where is the mahka for 'I' Company?" he would shout.

Immediately the barrack yard resounded with "Marker for 'I' Company wanted.

"Come along. Any one will do."

Two or three men would rush forward and declare themselves to be members of "I" Company.

"I don't want 'I' Company. I said 'I Company.'"

Finally "A" Company marker would come forward and would get a wigging, and, on being asked "didn't he hear 'I' Company marker bein' shouted for?" would tremblingly reply that he thought it was "I" Company man was wanted.

"You're too saucy, you are. You'd bettah gow and le'un your awlphibit over agyne."

Scots people sometimes wonder whether the English eat their tea or milk besides eating their soup or porridge, and if not, why not.

English mamma: "Johnnie, deah why don't you eat your milk?"

Johnnie: "Please, mamma, I aint (am not) got no knife and fork."

Now, the Scots go through their dishes by regular gradations. They drink their milk, etc., when no help of spoon is required; they sip their tea or toddy when the operation is done in teaspoonfuls; they sup their porridge, soup, etc., when a desert or tablespoon comes into play; and they eat meats which are carried to the mouth bodily, or which call for the manipulation of knife and fork and the assistance of the teeth.

When an Englishman feels a smell, say of burning, he has apparently no recognized method of conveying his impression to others. He will probably say: "There is conveyed to my olfactory nerves a sense of something which is apparently in a state of open or latent combustion;" and, while he is getting his tongue round all this, his coat-tails are things of the past. The Scotsman—more practical—will simply say, "I feel a smell o' burnin," and immediately sit on the place and thus extinguish the fire before the other had made up his mind in what particular form he would express himself. But when more closely affected, the Englishman also becomes more practical, and he feels anger, pain, feels insult, etc. He may also feel a suspicion, feel a sense of dissatisfaction, but never, oh no, never, a sense of smell. He is nothing if not self-contradictory.

Yes, inconsistency is the Englishman's strong point. He will speak to you of hard frost, but will object to you using the term soft to designate the opposite kind of climatic conditions.

English people will "dear" and "darling" on the slightest provocation. It is probably because these are soft names that they don't generally hurt when thrown about recklessly. It is probably due to this national custom that when a pair of English turtle-doves fall in love they require to manufacture a new language to suit the occasion, and so we have the "darlingest," the "lovingest," the "ownest own," and many other similar terms of endearment.

Were a Scotsman in company to "darling" his dear one he would probably be led to the door, and receive the parting injunction from his host to "gang awa' hame to his mither," and to "tell her to bathe his feet and get him awa' to bed as quickly as possible, as it's evident there's something workin' on him."—Tit Bits.

HOW WITCHES WERE CONVICTED

The Ideas of Justice Prevailing in the Good Old Days.

"One of the theories of the age was that the devil set his mark upon each of his servants—that witches were all marked," says Winfield S. Nevins in the February New England Magazine. "A jury of the sex of the accused was appointed to examine the body for such marks. It often happened that some excrescence of flesh common to old people, or one explainable by natural causes, was found. One such was found on the body of Goody Nurse and reported to the court, all but one of the jury agreeing to the report. Rebeca Preston and Mary Tarbell knew that the mark was from natural causes. The prisoner stated to the court that the dissenting woman of the jury of examination was one of the most ancient, skillful and prudent, and further declared: 'I there rendered a sufficient known reason of the moving cause thereof.' She asked for the appointment of another jury to inquire into the case and examine the marks found on her person. The jury of trials returned a verdict of not guilty. Thereupon all the accusers in Court 'cried out' with renewed vigor and were taken in the most violent fits, rolling and tumbling about, creating a scene of the wildest confusion. 'The judges told the jurymen that they had not carefully considered one expression of the prisoner, namely, that when one Hobbs, a confessing witch, was brought in as evidence against her she said: 'What, do you bring her? She is one of us.' The jury retired for further consultation. Even then they could not agree upon a verdict of guilty. They returned to the court-room and desired that the accused explain the remark. She made no response, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty."

Asafetida As a Cure for Grip.

Asafetida as a cure for the grip has been ridiculed by a great many physicians, but most of them admit that they have never prescribed it. In the West asafetida in pills of four grains has been tried with gratifying results. Quick recoveries are reported in nearly every instance, without the usual sequel of debility. In Louisville alone 20,000 of the pills were sold in one day recently. No bad effects can follow the use of asafetida, for of all things it is a sedative. In Asiatic countries it is employed as a condiment, but this is a use to which few people will care to put it. Many old people in the West who were far gone with the disease have, it is asserted, been cured by the asafetida pills. They should be taken according to their admirers, three times a day with a glass of water, and taken in this way are warranted not to taint the breath.—New York Post.

Last Words of a Great Preacher.

My time is ended, although I had much more to say. I can only pray the Lord to give you to believe in Him. If I should never again have the pleasure of speaking for my Lord upon the face of the earth, I should like to deliver as my last confession of faith this testimony: That nothing but faith can save in this nineteenth century; nothing but faith can save England; nothing but faith can save the present unbelieving church; nothing but faith in the grand old doctrine of grace and in the ever living and unchanging God can bring back to the church again a full tide of prosperity and make her to be the deliverer of the nations for Christ; nothing but faith in the Lord Jesus can save you or me. The Lord give you, my brothers, to believe to the utmost degree, for His name's sake! Amen.—Spurgeon's Last Sermon.

EXCITING CHASE

An Exciting Drive of Wolves in the Vicinity of Pelican Rapids, Minn.

Seventeen of the "Varmints" and Any Number of Cotton-tails Killed.

PELICAN RAPIDS, Minn., Special Telegram, March 12.—The great wolf drive to-day proved all that was anticipated. This morning the lines were formed covering a territory of 100 square miles. The country is largely a brush prairie, with occasional lakes and sloughs, but as they were all frozen over it made a splendid place for a drive. The men were armed with spears of various shapes on long poles, and all carried belts, pans or horns to make a noise.

There were over one thousand men in the drive, and as they came within two miles of the center the din was simply fearful, at various intervals a wolf would be started up, while rabbits and jack rabbits by the score rushed from their hiding places. A splendid place was selected for the round, up. It was on open prairie and dished to the center like a basin. When the lines merged from the woods and everyone came into the prairie, the sight was most exciting. The men were not more than ten feet apart, while within the circle at least thirty wolves, hundreds of jack rabbits and bears were seen circling around within the ring. The ground was plowed and it made it rather hard work for the hounds to run, but they dashed from one side to another as the crowd shouted. The jack rabbits flitted around like white specks, the dogs rushed into the ring and added to the excitement. Occasionally a wolf would make a dash and get through the lines; not, however, without a jab from some one's spear.

A wail went up when bruin was seen to charge the line and escape. A shot gun would have stopped him, but they had been forbidden, owing to the danger on account of the great crowd. The wolves continued to dash around until at intervals one would receive a fatal thrust. The circle grew smaller and the wolves uglier. They would make an occasional dash at the lines, but only to receive a death wound. At last the slaughter was over and seventeen wolves were killed.

The wolves were piled up as the result of the day's drive, while the rabbits were too numerous to count. The wolves were impaled and held aloft on the spears, making a sight never to be forgotten. It was a great success.

GRAND SPORT.

Hundreds Participate in the Illinois Wolf Round-up.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., March 12.—There was a grand wolf hunt of the old-fashioned "round-up" order in Hudson and adjacent townships in the northern portion of this (McLean) county to-day. The prairie wolves have not abandoned the thickets and underbrush of the hills which border the Mackinaw river, and often raid the pig pens and poultry yards of the farmers on the open lands.

Two weeks ago a grand round-up was held in Hudson township in which 800 people took part, many of whom were mounted, and the heroine of which was Miss Stella Morrow, a pretty young lady of Hudson, who ran a wolf to ground, where her hounds killed him. Fifteen hundred people participated in the sport to-day, and fifty hounds were under leash. Men, women and children were in lines, coming from McLean, Woodford and Tazewell counties. No firearms were permitted.

Two wolves were surrounded, but both broke through a weak segment of the circle, and were pursued by horsemen and hounds. One was overtaken and killed after a hot chase of six miles. It is probable the other was also killed, as Sam Drum of Gridley, a veteran wolf hunter, with his pack of dogs, was in hot pursuit toward the Mackinaw when last heard from.

THE DEEP CHANNEL.

It May Be Provided for in the River and Harbor Bill.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 12.—Friends of the deep waterway on the great lakes are quite confident that the river and harbor bill which is being prepared will provide for this great improvement to lake traffic. It is expected to get it through under a system similar to that by which the work on the Soo is being carried out—that is, the contract system. In fact, there is a disposition to put under the contract system several of the great improvements provided for in the river and harbor bill. This contract system has worked so well so far that it commends itself to members of the committee for the deep waterway.

If successful, it will prove a great victory for those who are compelled to fight it against the odds of two members of the river and harbor committee along the lakes being against it, and another member whose district was virtually affected opposing it with all his power. It will be a clear case of where common sense views were taken by congressmen, and no attempt was made to shirk the duty imposed upon them.

A Generous Chicagoan.

YANKTON, S. D., Special Telegram, March 12.—A wealthy Chicagoan whose name is withheld has proposed to build for Yankton college a science hall and chapel to cost $50,000 provided the college will lift its present indebtedness and secure an endowment of $100,000. The college management has determined to make a strong effort to meet the conditions.

His Injuries Proved Fatal.

BRAINERD, Minn., Special Telegram, March 1 .—Engineer George Carr died at the sanitarium in this city to-day from injuries received in the wreck at Lake Park Wednesday night. Engineer Rapp is also in a serious condition, and fears are entertained that he will not recover.

Woman's Invention.

WASHINGTON, March 12.—In the house Mr. Reilly of Pennsylvania introduced joint resolutions authorizing the secretary of the interior to prepare for exhibition in the woman's building at the world's fair any articles, models or drawings, now in his custody or deposited in the patent office, prepared or invented by women, and authorizing the secretary of the Smithsonian institution to prepare for exhibition in the woman's building any articles now in his custody or of the exhibition in the national museum illustrative of the life and development of the industries of women.

It Will Be a Hummer.

NEW YORK, Special—President Austin Corbin, of the Long Island Railroad company, has made public the particulars regarding the new bridge which it is desired to build across the East river from Laurel Hill to New York, thus furnishing extensive terminal facilities in this city for the Long Island road and the roads using the New York & New Jersey bridge. The bridge is designed for railroad purposes exclusively. It will be 12,450 or a little over two miles in length and cost about $12,000,000. It will have four tracks and possibly six. It is proposed to make the union depot, which will be located somewhere near Forty-second street, the finest terminal structure in the world.

DOWN AN EMBANKMENT.

A Train Wrecked Near Jackson, Miss., With Serious Results.

JACKSON, Miss., Special Telegram, March 12.—A successful attempt at train wrecking was made three miles below here last night. The Illinois Central passenger passed down going at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour. On a twenty-six foot embankment the engine and five cars jumped the track and landed in the ditch. No passengers were hurt. The injured are:

George Harris, postal clerk, seriously cut on face and hands; John Nelson, engineer, both legs broken and scalded; J. Schroeder, baggagemaster, face and head crushed.

The spikes and fish bars had been drawn and laid to one side. There is conclusive evidence of malice. Officials of the road are investigating the matter. Such accidents are getting so frequent on the Illinois Central that the state railroad commission is making an investigation.

TWO SENSATIONS.

An Oxford Tutor and a Member of Parliament Sentenced to Prison.

LONDON, March 12.—A large crowd, comprising many persons well known in fashionable society, assembled in the central criminal court, Old Bailey, to-day to listen to the trial of Maitland Francis Morland, the aged Oxford tutor, who was accused of attempting to blackmail members of the nobility. Among those present were Earl Russell, Lord Hothfield, Lord Ormathwaite and the earl of Chesterfield. When Morland was arraigned he pleaded guilty of attempting to extort money from Earl Russell and not guilty to extorting money from Lord Hothfield. The prisoner was sentenced to ten years' penal servitude. There is hardly a question that this is equivalent to a life sentence, for Morland is now sixty-five years old.

At the Old Bailey to-day another sentence was passed that will, without doubt, result in another expulsion from the house of commons, making the third member of the present parliament who has been ignominiously expelled. The first was Capt. Verney, who was expelled upon his conviction for procuring a girl for immoral purposes. The second was Edward De Cobain, who fled the country to escape arrest on a charge of gross immorality; and what will probably prove the third expulsion will be that of George Woodale Hastings, member for the east or Browsgrove division of Worcestershire, who was to-day sentenced to five years' penal servitude on his own plea of guilty on the charge of misappropriating £6,000. Mr. Hastings, who is a Liberal Unionist in politics, has represented the east division of Worcestershire since 1890. He is sixty-six years old.

DEFENDED BY THE POPE.

An Article in the Papal Organ Sustaining Archbishop Ireland.

ROME, March 12.—The following is the text of the article in the Observatore Romano, the papal organ, sustaining Archbishop Ireland:

Some German and Italian Liberal papers have tried to find in the writings and acts of Archbishop Ireland support for their ideas and doctrines. They pretend that the distinguished American prelate disagrees with the Vatican on the most important questions now agitating religious and civil society, and they publish extracts from an oration which they pretend that Archbishop Ireland delivered at Baltimore in 1889, claiming to see therein an attack on the temporal power of the pope. These newspapers deceive their readers—perhaps they would deceive themselves. The words attributed to Archbishop Ireland are the fictions of a Protestant writer in the Pall Mall Gazette in December, 1889, who reported Archbishop Ireland's speech with the addition of his own fantastic comments. Continental journals translated the article, ascribing the whole of it to Archbishop Ireland. It is a question which is the most wonderful—the bold effrontery or the surprising folly of such journals.

If they wish to know Archbishop Ireland's real sentiments toward the Holy see and its independence, they should read the remarkable speech which the archbishop delivered at St. Paul on the occasion of the jubilee of Pope Leo XIII. The speech bears evidence of having been entirely a spontaneous effusion of the heart, without the pressure of any interests upon the speaker, and it is only truth and justice, moreover, to Archbishop Ireland to say that he energetically supported the beautiful and strong resolutions adopted in Baltimore in 1889 in favor of the temporal power. The facts abundantly prove that there is no more ardent or more zealous defender of the pope in America, and none more devoted to his sacred person or more desirous of supporting and promoting the views of the pope than Archbishop Ireland. What Archbishop Ireland is attempting to do in the United States is to render more popular the lofty policy which Pope Leo seeks with such wisdom and prudence to carry out in Europe, the policy of peace and conciliation.

Addressed by Dolph.

WASHINGTON, March 12.—Mr. Dolph of Oregon spoke in the senate to-day on Mr. Stanford's bill "to provide the government with means sufficient to supply the national want of a sound circulating medium. The speech was in opposition to the subtreasury scheme and reciprocity with Canada and in favor of protection as set forth in the McKinley act.

Addressed by Mrs. Palmer.

WASHINGTON, March 12.—Mrs. Potter Palmer to-day made an address before the special house committee on the world's Columbian exposition urging favorable action on a bill before the committee to appropriate $135,000 to be disbursed directly by the board of lady managers of the exposition.

A South Dakotan Pardoned.

WASHINGTON, March 12,—The secretary of state is in receipt of a telegram from the charge d'affairs ad interim in Berlin saying that John Treber of Deadwood, S. D., has been pardoned. Mr. Treber visited Germany some months since and was imprisoned, charged with having violated the military laws of that country.

That's Different.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 12.—The senate committee on public buildings and grounds has reported the Helena (Mont.) bill favorably, and limits the cost of construction to $400,000. This is considerably more than will be granted, as the house committee only allows $150,000.

The Homeopaths.

WASHINGTON, March 12.—The annual meeting of the American Institute of Homeopathy, which will be held in this city from June 13 to 17 next, promises to be the largest and most important of this the oldest national medical society in the country.

Married at Chicago.

LAKE CITY, Minn., Special, March 12.—C. W. Tallmadge, a prominent business man of this city, and Miss Frances A. Coddington were united in marriage in Chicago on Wednesday and arrived here to-day.

Ate a Cannibal.

CHIHUAHUA, Mex., March 12.—Among the Indians to the west of this place the belief in witchcraft is general, and for a number of years an old woman has held the Indians of that locality in great fear by her alleged powers over life and death, and was accused of eating young children. When the woman was known to be away from her house a party of men went there and found horrible evidences that she had indeed indulged in meals of children's flesh. There were not only the bones to be seen, but a partly eaten child was also found. When she returned she was burned at the stake and the people ate small particles of her body in order to keep off any evils that might befall them for killing her.

Timothy O'Leary an old resident of Lake City, dropped dead while eating lunch in Johnson's shoe shop. His death was no doubt indirectly caused by alcholism. He was fifty-five years old.

Andrew Fiddler went down into a well at St. Peter for the purpose of cleaning it out. He had been at work but a few minutes when the well caved in. He was rescued after six hours and miraculously escaped almost uninjured.

One of the barns of James Stewart, who resides two miles north of Montevideo, burned recently. Loss about $250 and no insurance. As the premises were unoccupied at the time it is thought that the fire was of incendiary origin.

The first seeding of the season was done at Brown's Valley the other day. The ground in most fields is dry and in good condition and should the present phenomenal weather continue seeding will be generally commenced in a few days.

It is estimated that half the men employed in the woods near Pine City have been discharged on account of the breaking up of the roads. Hauling has been stopped; teams are now "dragging" logs where the haul is short.

Clarence Dow, of St. Cloud, a brakeman on the Great Northern, got badly squeezed between an engine and a box car at Foley station. He was immediately brought to this city, where his injuries were attended to. He had two ribs broken.

The Youmans farm near Marshall, which has been favorably known throughout the state for some years, has been sold to W. H. Senden. It formerly covered two sections, but one section was sold some time ago to Henry Freese. The 640 acres just purchased were sold for $40 an acre.

H. G. Day editor of the Standard of Albert Lea, refuses to retract what he said about John A. Lovely's connection with the case of Graham vs. the city, and has employed two lawyers to fight the matter. It will be an interesting scrimmage, as the suit will be for personal damages.

George Moss was examined before Justice Trevette at Newport for the attempt to outrage Margaret Johnson. He was bound over to the grand jury, which meets in May without bail. It is alleged that two other young ladies will bring similar charges against him should he be acquitted.

The citizens of park Rapids and surrounding country have organized the Hubbard County Improvement union, with W. S. Foster as president, William Taber as secretary and W. L. Winslow, treasurer. Special committees have been appointed to give gratis information in regard to new industries, etc.

Jacob Maraschek and John Michowski, each thirteen years of age, were playing at Winona, when Michowski became enraged at his companion, and drawing a large pocket knife made several vicious stabs at Maraschek. It is thought that Maraschek will recover. Michowski is under arrest.

A slight fire at St. Cloud in the building occupied as a cigar factory by Marx & Wise did a great deal of damage. The stock in the building, which included 140,000 cigars, was worth $7,000, which was almost destroyed by water and smoke. The stock was insured for $4,500.

Nelson Blackmer, brother of Dr. and Judge Blackmer, started during the recent storm for Dr. Wedge's farm, two miles west of Albert Lea, and has not since been heard from. He no doubt has perished in the storm. He was forty years of age and unmarried.

During the recent storm at Mankato roofs were blown off, plate glass fronts demolished, street cars thrown from the track, men and women clinging to lamp posts. Part of the Baptist church fell, crashing into a house next door. Trees were torn up by the roots, and storm doors and shutters were lying in the street.

Messrs. Grady, Bachman and Matthews, express messengers on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern road for the United States Express company, all tendered their resignations at Albert Lea, and their places have been filled by new men. It is understood that the company wanted two men to do the work of three without a corresponding increase of wages.

The North Star Stoneware company was incorporated at Red Wing by leading citizens with a capital stock of $200,000, over half of which is paid up. The company has purchased clay fields and a site, and will at once erect a stoneware plant here as large as either of the present two. With this company Red Wing will have three immense stoneware plants larger than any other in the West.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

The farmers of this vicinity have already begun seeding. The soil is in excellent condition, and if fair weather continues most of the seeding will be through with before the middle of next month.

Fire in a dry goods store of J. H. Maynenham at Sioux City caused a loss of about $30,000. In the same building is the wholesale dry goods house of H. A. Jandt & Co., having a stock valued at $200,000. Water and smoke damaged this about $15,000. All loss is fully covered by insurance.

DEATH IN A MINE.

An Explosion in a Belgian Mine Hundreds of Feet Below the Surface.

At Least One Hundred and Probably One Hundred and Fifty Lives Lost.

BRUSSELS, March 12.—An accident occurred to-day in the Anderluis colliery near Charleroi, which resulted in a great loss of life. Three hundred and seventy miners were employed in the coal pit when there was a terrific explosion of fire damp. The explosion occurred in a gallery 400 feet below the surface. Here were working 270 men. Of this number forty escaped by means of the second shaft, and sixteen others were rescued in a terribly, and it is believed, fatally injured condition.

The excitement among the crowd of men and children continues to grow in intensity, and the grief of those who have husbands or fathers in the mine is pitiable. Some of the women are quite frantic, and it was found necessary to get their friends to remove them from the scene of the accident. Rescuing parties were at once organized, and the work of removing the dead and injured was begun. Thirty or forty limp and black form were brought up on the first trip. These miners had run for their lives, but had been caught at the entrance by falling timbers. All had broken bones, and three were so firmly lodged in the wreck that the rescuing party dured not wait to extricate them. Five of the wounded were brought up on the second trip and two others and five dead were brought up on the third trip.

The rescued men say that twenty-five of the miners still imprisoned are women. There are about 200 in all still to be accounted for. It is thought that those nearest the first cave-in in the gallery may be rescued alive. Those furthest from the entrance of the gallery have probably been suffocated before this, and if not will die before they can be reached.

The work has been set back twice this evening by the caving of great blocks of soil and stone from the sides of the wrecked shafts, and since the third trip no volunteers for the work of rescue could be found. The dead will number at least 100 and probably 150.

WILLIAMS DIVORCE.

A Motion for a Continuance Denied at Rapid City, S. D.

RAPID CITY, S. D., March 12.—The sensational Williams divorce case opened here to-day. Mrs. Williams, who is sick in the East, was not present, but Judge Fuller denied a continuance on the plaintiff's admitting that, if present, she would deny desertion. The grounds of the petition are desertion and refusal to perform martial duties. Mrs. Williams charges adultery at various times and places with a girl named Boyd. The evidence of Williams shows that a Catholic servant girl named Omalley gained complete control of his wife, and turned her against him on religious grounds. He claims that for months he was compelled to make his own bed and he had no home comforts.

This afternoon proved decidedly interesting. Williams concluded his story of marital wrongs and deprivations, and the defense opened its endless depositions upon the intimacy between himself and Nettie Boyd, his alleged mistress. Miss Boyd appeared for the first time at the afternoon session. She is a decidedly pretty bloode and showed perfect self-possession. It is understood she will explain her relations with Williams.

The testimony was principally that of servants at the Earl house, where Miss Boyd boarded, and charged that he visited her almost daily for months, took her out riding, and made her numerous presents. The evidence of the principal witness, Emma Wyland, who worked in the Earl house, was considerably weakened by contradictions and the fact that she had married a second time without certain knowledge of her husband's death. The details were quite salacious at some points, and Judge Fuller frequently expressed disgust, and declared he wished to hear no repetition. The defense is making a great effort to secure the presence of Mrs. Williams, who is now sick in Iowa.

IOWA'S LAWMAKERS.

Important Bills Passing the Senate of That State.

DES MOINES, March 12.—In the senate today the Australian ballot bill passed without a dissenting vote. It is different from the ballot bill passed in the house, and will now go to that body again.

The Gatch collateral inheritance bill, framed after the New York law on the same subject passed the senate, only a few votes being recorded against it. It provides that 5 per cent of all estates over $1,000 shall be paid into the state treasury, except those of direct inheritance. The Kelly innocent purchaser bill, providing for a defense by makers of negotiable paper made for certain purposes, such as lightning rods, trees, patent rights, etc., was also passed. This bill is less sweeping than the house bill, which included all negotiable paper.

CRUELTY DENIED.

Mrs. Bott, However, Obtains Her Divorce at Milwaukee.

MILWAUKEE, March 12.—The sensational Bott divorce suit was ended yesterday. Annie Bott was granted a divorce on the grounds of cruel and inhuman treatment. The defendant denied the allegations and set up a counter claim, charging his wife with infidelity, and asked for a divorce from her on that ground.

The court decreed that the defendant is to have the care and custody of the child. Mrs. Bott is a handsome young woman with prepossessing manners. Mr. Bott is a well known jeweler.

The prince and princess of Wales and party have gone to Mentone, France, where they will remain for some time.

It Will Be a Hummer.

NEW YORK, March 12.—President Austin Corbin, of the Long Island Railroad company, has made public the particulars regarding the new bridge which it is desired to build across the East river from Laurel Hill to New York, thus furnishing extensive terminal facilities in this city for the Long Island road and the roads using the New York & New Jersey bridge. The bridge is designed for railroad purposes exclusively. It will be 12,450 or a little over two miles in length and cost about $12,000,000. It will have four tracks and possibly six. It is proposed to make the union depot, which will be located somewhere near Forty-second street, the finest terminal structure in the world.

A Woman Bound and Assaulted.

NEW HAVEN, Special—Three men entered the home of Albert Denslow in Hamden, a suburb of New Haven, last night, bound and gagged Denslow and a man named Monk, who boarded in the house. The men then caught Mrs. Emily Johnson, Denslow's sister, tied her hands behind her and carried her into a bedroom adjoining. Here they ravished the woman repeatedly. The men were in the house two hours and all this time Denslow and Monk lay helpless on the floor and were unable to render assistance. The police are working on the case. Mrs. Johnson's injuries are serious. She is thirty-nine years old. One of the men has been caught.

CONGRESS.

Proceedings of the House and Senate.

FRIDAY, MARCH 4.

SENATE.

The senate military committee has reported favorably a bill to establish lineal promotion throughout the several lines of the artillery, cavalry and infantry of the army.

At 3 p. m. the senate suspended business to listen to eulogies on the late W. H. F. Lee, of Virginia, and out of respect to his memory adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE.

The entire day had been consumed in the desultory consideration of unimportant private bills.

Mr. Waltham, of Mississippi, offered a resolution in the senate directing the committee on elections to inquire whether further legislation was not necessary to put at rest questions arising as to the construction of the law regulating the time and manner of choosing senators

SATURDAY, MARCH 5.

SENATE.

Not in session.

HOUSE.

The house passed the urgency deficiency bill providing $370,000 for government printing and several smaller amounts for District institutions.

The agricultural deficiency bill was passed.

The invalid pension appropriation bill today gave rise to a discussion in the house of the merits of both parties in their dealings with the soldier, each arraigning the other for the record made on the soldier question.

MONDAY, MARCH, 7.

SENATE.

Mr. Morgan moved a reconsideration of the vote by which Mr. Dubois, of Idaho, was seated and Mr. Claggett rejected, and submitted in the form of resolutions instruction to the committee on elections certain propositions of law, which, he believed, if fairly considered by the senate, would cause a reversal of decision arrived at in the case.

Senator Proctor, from the committee on military affairs, reported a bill to amend the articles of war, the chief provision of which is that a general court martial shall in future have the power to punish summarily for contempt of its authority such acts as would be punishable by the highest civil court of the country, and with like penalties.

HOUSE.

The resolution to consider the Bland silver bill March 22 was read in the house before the journal was read. Speaker Crisp declared this to be in order, and an appeal from his decision was tabled. The house passed the resolution, 190 to 84.

The bill to protect foreign exhibitors at the World's Fair with respect to patents was favorably reported to the house.

Acting Secretary of the Treasury Spaulding has sent to the house a letter containing estimates for appropriations aggregating $120,718 for the expenses of the board of lady managers of the World's Columbian Exposition for the fiscal year 1893.

The house took the pension appropriation bill. Mr. Grout moved to recommit with instructions to increase the aggregate from $135,000,000 to $144,000,000. This motion was defeated, the bill passed and the house adjourned.

TUESDAY, MARCH 8.

SENATE.

The senate declined, by a vote of 19 to 38, to strike out sections 7 and 8 of the pure food bill. Section 9 was stricken out.

The senate passed bills appropriating $300,000 for a public building at Spokane Fall, Wash.; and appropriating $275,000 for the construction of two United States revenue cutters for services on the great lakes.

The senate went into executive session to consider the arbitration treaty received from the president. It called forth considerable discussion which extended over an hour. On motion it was referred back to the Foreign relations committee.

Senator Stanford introduced a bill to increase the duty on opium to $5 a pound.

HOUSE.

Mr. McMillin of Tennessee gave notice in the house that he would call up for consideration the free wool-bill.

The house committee on military affairs after hearing Gen. Merritt, today, ordered a favorable report on the bill for the establishment of a military post at Helena, Mont. The measure was reported with an amendment reducing the appropriation for the proposed post from $300,000 to $100,000.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 9.

SENATE.

In the senate Mr. Hale, acting chairman of the naval committee, reported a bill to increase the navy. He said it was substantially the same measure introduced by him on Jan. 25, 1892, providing for new battle ships, gun boats and torpedo boats. Placed on the calendar.

The senate passed the pure food bill with a few unimportant amendments.

Senator Warren introduced a bill asking for the cession of the arid public lands to the states and territories wherein situated.

Mr. Morgan reported a resolution authorizing the committee on foreign relations to take testimony in cases where a claim is made by a citizen of the United States against a foreign government.

Among the bills introduced in the senate and referred was one with the following curious title, presented by Mr. Cullom (by request): "To test and try the science of spelling and to provide for establishing 100 schools for that purpose; and to establish a spelling school in the World's Columbian Exposition to be held in Chicago in 1893."

HOUSE.

The house went into committee of the whole and the entire day was consumed in a discussion of the tariff question. Representatives McMillan of Tennessee lead the tariff reform forces and Dingley of Maine defended the McKinley law.

THURSDAY, MARCH, 10.

SENATE.

Senator Hoar was in his seat after an absence through illness of several weeks.

The senate passed a bill to survey and mark the boundary between the states of Nebraska and South Dakota, on the Pine Ridge and Rosebud Indian reservation.

Senator Morgan's resolution instructing the committee on judiciary to report the legal propositions involved in the Idaho contest was passed.

The agriculture deficiency bill appropriating $150,000 for the bureau of animal industry, was passed. The bill also carries $10,000 for experiments in sugar culture.

On motion of Senator Teller the secretary of the treasury was called upon for information concerning the operations of the treasury department under the act of July 14, 1890, relating to the coinage of silver.

HOUSE.

The house resumed consideration of the tariff in committee of the whole and this was the only business transacted. Mr. Dingley, of Maine, continued his argument against the Springer free wool bill.

Acted in Self-Defense.

MANKATO, Minn., Special Telegram, —Charles Brown, who killed Elias Gustavson last September in a brick yard two miles from here, and who ran away when his victim died, has voluntarily returned. He has been arrested and released under $10,000 bail. M. E. Lockerby, Paul Iverson and Fred Widell being his bondsmen. Evidence produced at the coroner's inquest shows that Brown picked up a four-foot club and hit Gustavson as he was about to pick up a brick. Gustavson fell to the ground and died soon afterwards. The coroner's jury rendered a verdict that the deceased met his death by a blow from a club in the hands of Charles Brown, who acted in self-defense.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

A Republican County Convention for the County of Polk will be held on Tuesday, April 5th, 1892, in the Court House in the City of Crookston, at one o'clock p. m., for the purpose of electing nine delegates to the Republican State Convention, to be held in the city of St. Paul on Thursday, May 5th, 1892, and also for the purpose of electing nine delegates to the Republican Congressional Convention to be held at Morris on the 12th day of May, 1892, and for the transaction of such other business as may come before the Convention.

The several election precincts are entitled to the following number of delegates, the basis of representation being one delegate for each organized town or precinct, and one additional delegate for each forty votes, or major fraction thereof, cast for the Republican candidate for President in 1888, viz.:

Euclid Items.

Alley Carlton, of Angus, returned from the pinery Friday.

Twelve cattle perished in the storm of Wednesday night in the ditch of the N. P. track, also two near Angus. This was undoubtedly the worst storm of the season.

Bert Chapin arrived from Michigan on the morning train Friday. His brother, R. S. Chapin, of Crookston, accompanied him as far as that city. Bert will become a resident of Polk Co.

Ed. Duntly, who recently arrived from Michigan, has hired out to M. M. Davis & Son for the season, and means to grow up with the country. That's right, young men of Michigan, there's room for thousands more of you.

Henry Stuhr bade farewell to a nice new $3.50 stiff hat Wednesday which took its way toward Crookston, so if any of the Crookstonites see a bran new hat walking around on three leg, Mr. Stuhr would be very much obliged to have you inform him of its whereabouts.

Euclid has blossomed out with a reporter which I am afraid will also be like the Dutchman's wife which "lasted to soon yet already."

New goods constantly arriving at E. Taylor & Co.'s.

F. Tiedt doing a big business.

Brother Harrington has got back from a visit to the old home where the geese go in winter.

E. Taylor & Co. Company talk of putting a 40-foot addition on the back of their store to accommodate their increasing trade.

Ole Nelson is now moving into town. I suppose Ole will be quite a dude hereafter.

We hear twine is going up. If it is that confounded Cordage Company ought to be hung with a piece of their own goods.

Denis Losey will move out on the farm next week and become a granger once more.

If I write no more, you need not cry,
Good-bye! old JOURNAL, good-bye!
For I know there's none for me to sigh,
Good-bye! old JOURNAL, good-bye!
Bye, JOURNAL, bye, oh!
Not very long though,
I'll be there to-morrow;
Good-bye! old JOURNAL, good-bye!

FRED.

Mentor Items.

MENTOR, March 14, 1891.

Our roads are in bad condition since the storm of last week.

The storm of Tuesday night and Wednesday of last week was the most severe witnessed in this place in eleven years. We have not heard of any particular damage being done, except the wrecking of Messrs. Moe & Bubn's store house.

A resident of Mentor, so we are told, in seeking a safer nook, saved his life but lost his rubbers.

John Bubn is still at his post packing eggs. He is an experienced hand at the business. John don't count your chickens before they are hatched.

A grand entertainment was held at the residence of Mr. D. Overholt on Saturday evening of last week, for the benefit of the ladies' relief corps. A very pleasant evening was spent by all. The entertainment was good and the refreshments genuine. At 12 m. the company dispersed, returning to their homes in high spirits. Who will be the next hospitable man to open his door for the good cause?

Don't forget the social Friday night. If you can't get your best girl take somebody else's girl. Come one, come all, and have a good time.

Iver Halderson is about to move from our midst. We regret to see one of our good neighbors leave us. This move will be Grove Park's loss and Woodside's gain.

The wood camp belonging to T. H. Bjoin has at last broken up. Cye stuck to his knitting very good this winter, but we wonder if the profits will balance the losses. As Cye has used up three axes and nothing left but the handle of the fourth, we think he ought to peck away all summer, and see if he could make it better in warm weather.

The following are the officers elected at the recent town election:

Town Clerk—E. E. Abbott.
Treasurer—John Tice.
Justice of the Peace—Geo. Swift.
Constable—B. VanGordon.

MICK.

MELVIN ITEMS.

The election is over, no broken bones but an occasional sore scalp. This is a year, however, in which to locate the sore spot, and avoid getting hit, in the same place next year.

The recent storm was the worst known in five years, and coming so unexpectedly, it caught some stock unprotected. E. B. Durdall lost one fine ox which wandered about on the prairie and was found dead six miles from home. C. W. Davis lost two oxen and one calf. At this writing he has found one ox and the calf dead, and no trace of the other. Henry Manki lost one yoke of oxen and others are in quest of cows, calves and sheep.

The change of weather has nipped the prospect of very early seeding, but the farmers can haul the wood they expected to haul next summer, cut, split and pile it, and make the housewife happier.

During the recent fine weather some of the farmers who did not get their grain threshed last fall, tried threshing, but they are unable to sell their wheat, it being so damp. The elevator men cannot give more than No. 3 for wheat threshed now, which, had it been threshed last fall, would have graded No. 1. This early in the season there is from two to three layers of sheaves in the bottom of each stack that are badly damaged, and it now looks as if one-sixth of the grain stacked on level land would be destroyed for market if left till after seeding, and if threshed before will be too damp to sell. It looks very discouraging for those who have not threshed.

If all the towns in the county will get a move on, as it were, the hail sufferers will not be forced to the wall, and be obliged to go out of business for lack of seed grain.

Popular Talks On Law.

BY WM. C. SPRAGUE, ESQ.

THE MERCANTILE AGENCIES.

We have seen in my three previous papers on the subject of Mercantile Agencies that the law as generally laid down in this country is to the effect that reports of mercantile agencies are privileged communications—that is, such communications as exempt them from liability for statements otherwise libelous, when, and only when, such reports are made to subscribers to the agency having an interest in the information given. We have also found that this interest must be a specific interest, that is, not such an interest as subscribers have in all persons who are reported, but an interest in the particular concern or business concerning which the report is made. That the law in Canada would seem to be almost the reverse; in other words, that no report by an agency is privileged, whether made to an interested subscriber or not. Frequently agencies make contracts with their subscribers by which the latter assume the responsibility, risk and liability for negligence or incorrect statements on the part of the agency's employes in procuring, collecting and communicating the information. Such contracts have been upheld in two cases, which are the only ones we find, both in Pennsylvania, and one against Dun and the other against Bradstreet. There are statutes in many of the States which provide that in order to maintain an action against a person for a representation concerning the character in trade of any other person, it is necessary that the representation be in writing and signed by the person sought to be charged. Where it has been sought to apply this statute to mercantile agencies in cases where their reports are not in writing, there has developed a difference of opinion on the part of the courts, which leaves the question unsettled. One view is that the agency waives its right to take advantage of the statute by its original contract with the subscriber. Another view is that the agency is liable, not upon the representation, but upon the contract, and that no statute requires the latter to be in writing. Statutes of this character are found in Alabama, California, Indiana, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Oregon, South Carolina, Vermont and Wyoming, and cases upon this subject are the following: Sprague v. Dun, U. C., 399 Q. B., 551; Swan v. Phillips, 8 A. and E., 457.

Sometimes a merchant, in order to gain credit, makes to the mercantile agencies a false statement as to his business character and ability. In such cases, one who has been defrauded by reason of his relying upon these representations, may maintain an action of deceit against such merchant. A fraudulent intent upon the part of the merchant must be clearly shown, and the representation must be so nearly connected with the transaction in which the plaintiff alleges that he was deceived as to make it plain that the defendant intended the representation to be relied upon in that transaction. It would, no doubt, be interesting to attorneys throughout the country to know how far they are protected in responding to requests made by mercantile agencies as to the responsibility of merchants. Very little has come before the courts to help in determining the question. There is a case reported in the Albany Law Journal, first volume, page 323, tried in September, 1870, before a circuit court in New York, in which the attorney received a letter with printed questions from J. M. Bradstreet & Son's agency, inquiring as to the standing, character and financial ability of a party named Sherwood. This letter he answered. Sherwood sued the attorney for libel, because of matter contained in that answer. The judge charged the jury that the communication made by the attorney to the agency was not privileged, and it was laid down that the protection which is given to the proprietor of a mercantile agency in reporting the standing of a party to one of its subscribers, is not given to the country correspondent of the agency. It would seem, however, that any ruling that would hold the agency irresponsible in the matter, would also protect the country correspondent, who is nothing more nor less than a clerk or agent of the agency for a particular purpose. Indeed, it is almost the sole and universal method employed by agencies to obtain the information which they furnish to their patrons, and it is hard to see where any justice lies in holding the one responsible and the other not, and we believe if the question ever comes before the higher courts, as indeed it would seem strange that it has not, the decision will be the reverse of that before quoted.

In our next we shall treat of the liability of the mercantile agencies doing a collection business.

Maple Bay Items.

Last Wednesday's storm is said to have been the severest one ever experienced in Minnesota.

The conference held in the new Lutheran church at Aldahl last week was well represented by the Maple Bay people.

Misses Carrie and Estelle Hunter, who have been attending school in Fertile this winter, returned home in time to enable Miss Carrie to attend the teachers' examination.

Miss Bertha Moen is home from Crookston on a visit to her parents.

Our election held at the school house in Dist. No. 90, resulted in electing the old board with but little opposition.

Rev. Sorensen was the guest of Rev. Oefstedal during conference.

Miss Nettie Hunter, who has just finished teaching a successful term of school in Dist. No. 190, and returned to her home, has been suffering from la grippe.

The storm put a stop to the work already commenced on the parsonage.

Rev. S. E. Sorenson and family are now occupying the old store building until the completion of their new house.

Miss Matie Godfrey is home from Crookston, where she has been attending school for the past two months.

Miss Carrie Hunter has been very sick since her return from Crookston, but is now convalescent.

Sen. E. E. Lommen delivered a fine address to the farmers of this town, on the 4th inst. We regret the slim attendance which was probably owing to insufficient notice.

BLIZZARD.

[From Our Regular Correspondent.]

We spoke of the birds singing, but their songs were soon silenced, and with most of them, forever.

The worst storm we have seen in thirteen years swept over this part of the valley on the night of the 8th and day of the 9th. The loss of property has been considerable, though no loss of human life heard of as yet. J. Garstner, town of Godfrey, lost 8 head of cattle, 5 cows and 3 young cattle; T. G. Lee, 1 steer; Mr. Davis, town of Onstad, 1 ox and 1 cow; Mr. Al Wade of Tilden, 1 fat hog and 20 chickens. Reports say the loss in Terrebonne will exceed 50 head of cattle.

Mr. P. W. Horton met with a sad accident some weeks ago. A small twig scratched his eye and he caught cold in it, which resulted in its loss. He has been confined to the house five weeks, but is improving now.

World's Fair Notes.

New Jersey has increased its World's Fair appropriation from $20,000 to $70,000.

The Russian government has adopted a very liberal policy toward the Exposition. Information has been received at headquarters that the minister of finance, with the approval of the emperor, has decided to pay all freight charges on Russian exhibits for the Fair, to insure the exhibits and to decorate the Russian section. The imperial porcelain factory is making ware of special designs to be shown at the Fair.

Austria will make a fine exhibit of glass, porcelain, bronze, leather, artistic iron and cabinet work.

The "Independent New York Schuetzen," considered the elite corps of German-American sharpshooters, have decided to attend the Exposition in a body. The organization has in its membership many prominent business men. It has made two or more shooting tours in Europe, on one of which it was entertained by Price Bismarck.

The Bethlehem Iron Company, of South Bethlehem, Pa., will make an extensive exhibit, including steel rails, a battle ship shafting 125 feet in length, guns, projectiles, an armor-plate ingot weighing 100 tons, and various naval appliances. The company will also erect a full-size model of its famous 125-ton steam hammer, said to be the largest in the world. It will be to all appearances a perfect duplicate in every respect. It will span the main avenue of Machinery Hall, and will rise to a height of ninety feet. At the last Paris exhibition great attention was attracted by a similar model shown by the Creusot works, but representing only a 100-hammer.

E. Sayderheim, horticulturist to the Emperor of Austria, has written from Buda-Pesth that he will contribute to the Exposition's floral display a collection of the rarest roses, embracing 200 standard, 200 half-standard tree roses and 400 rose bushes.

Mrs. Frona Wait, one of the lady managers of California, has offered to finish in redwood one of the large reception rooms in the woman's building.

The French goverment, through the efforts of Minister Whitelaw Reid, has agreed to permit the exposition authorities to send into France, free of duty, electrotypes of buildings and other exposition matter intended for use in French papers, to stimulate interest in the fair.

A cablegram states that Switzerland will not be officially represented at the exposition, but that the government will examine the representations of citizens desirous of exhibiting and will consider the question of granting a subsidy to enable them to do so.

The exhibit which Illinois women will make in the woman's building will be a model hospital, conducted entirely by women. The women physicians and surgeons of the State and the Illinois training school for nurses will manage the matter. Three rooms in the woman's building have been assigned for the exhibit, and the state board has appropriated $6,000 to defray the expenses.

A heroic statue of Columbus, by Louis St. Gaudens, will stand before the main entrance of the administration building.

The Illinois Woman's Ceramic Association has secured space for an exhibit in the Illinois building.

The Queen Isabella Association will not have a pavilion or club house on the exposition grounds. Its application for space for such pavilion has been rejected by the grounds and buildings committee, on recommendation of chief of construction Burnham, who urged that no space could be spared for buildings of the private club house description.

A choral hall, 160x260 feet, will be erected near the horticultural building. There Professor Tomlins, with 2,000 trained voices, will furnish rare choral music during the exposition. The Welsh International Eisteddfod will occupy the building for a week.

Hayti has appropriated $25,000 for its representation at the exposition. Fred Douglass has been appointed commissioner to represent that country.

The grand entrance to the mammoth manufacturers' building will be decorated at an expense of about $12,000.

The total amount reported appropriated by foreign nations and colonies for their representation at the exposition, so far as heard from, is $3,951,053. Quite a number of those which have decided to participate have not yet made appropriations.

The Illinois state board of agriculture has offered a number of prizes ranging from $50 to $250, for the best exhibits shown at the state fair, to be held at Peoria in September. From these exhibits the board will make many selections for the World's fair.

A bill protecting foreign exhibitors of patented articles from all possible prosecution for infringement has peen passed by the senate and is pending and reported sure to pass in the House. The bill reads as follows:

"That no citizen of any country shall be held liable for the infringement of any patent granted by the United States or any trade-mark registered in the United States where the act complained of is performed in connection with the exhibition of any article or thing at the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago."

M. Seranno, Mexico's special World's Fair commissioner, who visited Chicago a short time ago and made a thorough inspection of exposition progress and affairs, has made to his government a report exceedingly favorable to the exposition. He advocates an elaborate participation by Mexico. President Diaz has expressed himself in favor of making a fine showing of Mexico's progress and advantages rather than of her relics and antiquities.

The Newport, R. I., artillery, which celebrated its 150th anniversary several months ago, and claims to be the oldest active military company in the United States, will attend the World's Fair. It visited the Centennial at Philadelphia and attracted much attention.

The U. S. Treasury Department has decided that machinery imported to the exposition from foreign countries, either wholly as an exhibit or to be shown in connection with the illustration of some manufacturing process, shall be admitted free of duty. Any raw material imported for use in such process must pay regular duty, however.

The lady managers are in communication with Mrs. Aubrey H. Smith, of Philadelphia, who compiled a book of interesting and valuable statistics for the centennial concerning the intention of the Woman's board to take up the work begun by Mrs. Smith, and bring it up to date, showing the advancement of women in philanthropy during the last decade. The lady managers have already collected much supplimentary data of an international character, and are consulting Mrs. Smith as to the best methods suggested by her experience in arranging the available materials.

NEWSPAPER LAW.

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office, whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for the payment.
2. If any person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.
3. In suits for subscriptions, the suit may be instituted where the paper is published.
4. The Courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the post office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, while unpaid for, is prima facie evidence of intention to defraud.

New York Press.

The time has come when the eyes of the Republican party naturally and properly turn toward Minneapolis with comprehensive glances East, West, North and South to see who and where the men are from whom a selection may fitly be maid to lead the party's hosts to victory next November for the three-fold cause of protection of home industry, honest money and the purity of the ballot box. Such a survey of the field is entirely in order. The ground is not pre-empted. The survey is open to every member of the party. Each one has an equal privilege to form and express an opinion. Very different is the Republican situation from that in the Democratic party, where the wishes of the voters are calmly ignored and all schemes for capturing the Chicago nomination are laid on the assumption that the dicker and deal of a few "leaders" will be meekly accepted by the rank and file.

It is certain that there is not one of the Republicans commonly spoken of in connection with the office who would not, if nominated, command the united and enthusiastic support of the party. The list is so long that we can do little more at this time than to call a partial roll of the illustrious names.

There is John Sherman, Ohio's senior Senator, every inch a statesman, with a record of achievement in the halls of legislation and in the Presedential cabinet that has few paralells in the history of this or any other country; a man of spotless character, vast attainments, splendid ability, whose principles are sound to the core, whom the people of the whole country know, admire and trust.

There is Senator Allison of Iowa. He was a leading candidate for the nomination four years ago. The secretaryship of the treasury was later offered to him; and his refusal to accept that great office was a disappointment to the nation. He is one of perhaps a half dozen members of the Senate who have rightfully earned the proud title of "a great Senator." He has no enemies in either party, and his friends would be numbered by many millions at the November ballot boxes if his name were to be presented to the American people for their suffrages.

General Alger, of Michigan is a man after the veteran soldier's own heart. There was no more gallant fighter for the imperiled Union than he. He was faithful, able and brave. That is a record made on many a field of battle, attested by his comrades in the ranks and by his superior officers. Partisan abuse or personal malice cannot rob him of the esteem in which he is rightly held as one who did noble duty at a time when the nation's life was menaced.

Another possible nominee is Senator Cullom, of Illinois. To him the country is indebted for the first comprehensive and successful attempt to solve that great problem of adjusting the conflicting interests and rights of the people and the vast appliances of trade and transportation with which all business enterprises are so vitally connected. The interstate commerce law is no doubt imperfect. But after many years of trial it has proved to be far better for both the railway corporations and the masses of the people than was the system, or lack of system, which existed before this measure grappled with abuses and contentions that at one time threatened to produce commercial anarchy. The distinguished Republican Senator from Illinois has other titles to fame. As the representative of one of the greatest states in the Union his conduct has been marked by progressive conservatism, good sense, incorruptibility and tireless endeavor to promote the welfare not only of his own section of the country, but of every state, every territory and every citizen.

No review like this could be complete without some consideration of possible "dark horses." There are several of them, and they are not so very dark either. In such a list Robert Lincoln, our Minister to England, must be mentioned first. He worthily bears a name forever peerless in American history. Another possible dark horse is Governor McKinley, whom Ohio no less and no more than the whole United States, delights to honor. Yet another is the fearless, brilliant, brainy Tom Reed, whose name elicits storms of applause in every Republican assemblage from Portland, Me., to Portland, Ore.

We have reserved for mention, last of all, the name which leads all others in the popular mind at this time—the name of Benjamin Harrison. Any one must be blind to the signs of the times who cannot see that the President has a long lead in the race, if such an expression may be fitly used in a case where there is, strictly speaking, no "race," but only a friendly comparison of views and a desire on the part of all that the prize shall be adjudged to him whom the people shall deem, upon the whole, the wisest selection. What a day, a week, a month or three months may bring forth no man can tell. At present the clear outlook is for President Harrison's renomination. The reasons are cogent. To many minds they seem conclusive. He has nobly borne himself in his great office. He has been guilty of no blameworthy acts. He has committed no serious mistakes. But his claims are far from resting on a merely negative foundation. His course is marked by every element of administrative statesmanship. It is strong, safe, judicious, faithful to the principles of the party, in line with the best interests of the country. In each great emergency he has shown himself equal to every demand. Witness the Italian, the Chilian and the Behring Sea complications, in which the President has championed with equal wisdom and firmness the cause of the United States. Witness a series of judicial appointments that commands even the reluctant admiration of political opponents. He is to-day the main bulwark between the business interests of 64,000,000 people and financial chaos through the free silver coinage lunacy.

In short, the fact that Benjamin Harrison has given to the country one excellent administration is the best possible guarantee that he can be depended upon to give to us another.

THE IRON BOOM.

Seen Through Our Own Goggles.

Marshall County Leader.

DULUTH, March 8th, 1892.

LEADER:—Of all the indirect benefits to grow out of the development of the mineral resources of northern Minnesota, it is quite clear that none will be more far-reaching or exceed in importance the benefit to Red River Valley farmers. It means a network of railroads connecting an empire of producers with multitudes of consumers; a constant market near at hand for all kinds of farm products; closer rail connection and cheaper transportation between the granaries and Duluth elevators. The speculation incident to this development, of which the present mining craze here is an illustration, means immense fortunes to some men and poverty to others, but the man who pins his faith and money to real estate in Marshall, Kittson and Polk counties assumes no risk and is absolutely certain of a permanent and increasing benefit. Just now there is an obvious lull in the wildcat speculation of two weeks ago that becomes almost profound quiet. The papers do not admit it for reasons easily divined. The store clerks; newsboys and light-weights have their pennies pretty well in and tied up in cheap snide stocks; but the heavy artillery is just being loaded. The existence of immense ore deposits extending west nearly to Red Lakes, easily accessible and cheaply worked, is demonstrated and as usual the most valuable properties have been quickly absorbed by capitalists. Probably fifty mining companies have been formed already and of the number perhaps a dozen have real substantial merit fully demonstrated and will do an actual and profitable business. Most of the others amount to prospectors' stock and are very uncertain.

Immense areas of land have already passed into the hands of some of these companies, either under lease or in fee. One has 7,500 acres and another nearly 5,000, while one of the best selling and highest stocks is on a lot of only 160 acres.

Thousands of men are scurrying through the woods of northern Minnesota in pursuit of the fickle goddess and discoveries within the next few months of other wealth than iron would not be unexpected. The existence of coal beds is a tradition that may soon be verified and it is already claimed that petroleum has been discovered and the land upon which it is found has been acquired by the discoverer. It would not be surprising even if some of these indefatigable explorers in the ardor of their search, should entirely penetrate the jungles of Cook, Itasca, and Beltrami counties and, emerging on the western slope, discover to the world the golden grain mines of the Red River Valley in Minnesota. I have suggested the thought to certain Duluth people as "a tip to let them in on the ground floor," to appropriate a favorite expression here, and they admit it may not be mere fancy.

H. SMITH.

Are You Going?

Twenty million visitors, at least, are expected at the Columbian Exposition; and whether you expect to be one of them or not, as an American, naturally you are interested in the preparations for the grand event. A splendid paper in Demorest's Family Magazine for April, "The Evolution of a Great Exposition," is the best thing of the kind that has yet been published. From it you may learn all the interesting points about the coming World's Fair, and the illustrations are simply superb, including a comprehensive view and the plan of the grounds, pictures of all the magnificent buildings, and portraits of some of the leading officers having it in charge. "A Talk about Trees and Arbor Day," is a timely and deeply interesting paper, profusely illustrated with pictures of the favorite trees planted in different sections of the United States, so accurately delineated that each may be easily recognized when met with; "German without a Master" furnishes invaluable suggestions for the study of that useful language; "The International Order of the King's Daughters and Sons," a paper by the general secretary of the central council, Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, gives facts and figures most charmingly interwoven; "A Snap Shot at Washington Etiquette" furnishes an insight of the rules that govern society at our national capital; "Easter Legends and Customs" is specially interesting, and "Easter Novelties" furnishes suggestions for all the Easter gifts one may want to make. Besides, there are splendid stories, every department is full of good things, and there are over 200 handsome illustrations; and every month's magazine is just as good, and the subscription price is only $2 a year. Published by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 E. 14th St., New York City.

What to Wear and How to Make it!! Important questions at this season which ladies can have satisfactorily answered in Peterson for April. There will be found every pretty and useful novelty, from an out-door costume to a spring wrap for the little daughter. "The Colonel's Stratagem," by Robert B. Graham, is a very clever story and is beautifully illustrated. "How Olga Met Ivan," by May Florence Alt, is the finest poem we have seen by this rising young poetess, and is admirably adapted for recitation. "Flower-Lore," by Mrs. E. A. Matthews, is a charming paper. "A Strange Country," by Sidney Ross, and "Old Time Thimbles," by Harriet Latham, are among the most interesting articles in any magazine for the month; and their illustrations are noticeably fine. The entire contents are far above the average of periodical literature. Peterson steadily progresses in beauty and excellence. No wowan's fireside is complete without this popular periodical. A sample copy will be sent for five cents. Terms, $2.00 a year. Address, Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

The Maryland World's Fair Board is planning to show in the Maryland building a reproduction of the surrender of his commision by George Washington. The report of the board to the legislature asking for an appropriation of $100,000, states: "It has been suggested by His Excellency the Governor, and the suggestion has met with much favor, that the old senate chamber of the state house be reproduced in our building, and that a group of 32 figures be made to represent the surrendering by Washington of his commission, which took place in that historic hall. Such a tableau would attract many visitors and serve as a feature of great interest. The act is almost unique in the history of the world—a successful general, in the flush of victory, laying down his sword and retiring to the duties of a homely and quiet life after vanquishing the greatest power on earth in a long and bloody war—and is something to be admired as well as wondered at, and every son of our grand old commonwealth should feel a personal pride when he thinks that a deed so noble was done on the soil of his native state, and beneath the roof of his state capitol."

Farming for Health.

May be very fine, and you will no doubt grow strong and be happy with nothing but a hoe, a back number plow and a shot gun seeder. But if you are

Farming for Wealth

You should have the latest snd best tool in the on the market. For instance you want first a DOWAGIAC SHOE DRILL, and as you probably did not get your plowing all done last fall you also want a Grand Detour Plow, a Little Giant or Scandia Gang. We have them to sell and would liketo show you their merits.

——OUR TIME AGAINST YOURS.——

There are several other things you ought to have but you must have these now soon: We have a nice line of Harrows that we are selling cheap; also Wagons, Buggies, Engines, Threshers, Etc., Etc.

A Land of Fruits and Flowers.

No where else in the world are there found more fertile valleys, more beautiful flowers or more fragrant breezes than in the tropical Central American State, Costa Rica—never warmer than 75 degrees, never colder than 65 degrees. The water supply is pure and abundant, the soil is extremely fertile, successive crops being grown each year without affecting it. On the coast is raised bananas, rice and coconuts; on first plateau and valleys, sugar cane and cotton; higher up tobacco, cochineal, cactus indigo. Here are the coffee lands. No country on the globe can compete with Costa Rica in the raising of coffee—40 acres of coffee trees will pay greater than a 1,000 acre grain farm and you can live in a beautiful southern country where fruits and vegetables mature every month in the year.

A splendid chance for the poor man, for the man of moderate means. You cannot afford to let this opportunity go by.

The eyes of the world are now turned toward this country. The Nicaragua canal will be built and this fair country will be quickly populated. You must not wait until others have secured the best lands and locations.

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN MINING AND IMPROVEMENT CO., OF ST. PAUL, MINN.,

Are arranging to place a colony of Northwestern people in Costa Rica, and this company will give full information concerning the country, its resources, both vegetable and mineral, and rates of transportation. Crookston, March 24, 1892.

'Round Home.

Wheat—1, Hard 69.
1 Northern 68.
2 Northern 62.
3 Northern 58.

Go to Wheeler for money.

District court has adjourned.

Begins to look like spring again.

Mrs. VanArnam returned last Friday.

If you want to rent a farm call and see us.

Alderman Buhn is re-shingling his blacksmith shop.

Go to Brown's stables and see those horses—just arrived.

Our Euclid correspondent comes to the fore in elegant shape this week.

T. K. Torgerson is up from Lake Park with a view to renting a hotel.

Now is the time to purchase a valuable team and BROWN'S STABLES is the place.

Rev. R. H. Battey went up to St. Hilaire and Thief River Falls this week to lecture.

Charley Vine is kept as busy as a bee cutting up meats to supply his increasing trade.

What buildings are erected in the city this year will be of a more permanent character than ever before.

J. W. Kelley was down from Mentor on Monday. Says we may now announce that spring is here for a fact.

Comrade S. Snedecker was in from Mentor last week and called to chat with THE JOURNAL man a little while.

See ad announcing combination sale elsewhere in this issue. Big chance to stock up or buy machinery at your own prices.

F. E. Barnum, of the Times, has rented a house on Elm street, taken possession thereof and will hereafter live at home.

C. H. Saake has moved his family into rooms up stairs in the old Markham block, which property he recently purchased.

J. E. Harris returned last week from a visit east. Said lots of people were talking of coming to the Red River Valley this spring.

The M. E. Society gave a supper in their new church parlors on Monday evening which was well attended and a grand financial success.

And now your tickets are before you to select from. From such an array of good names we can't very well help having a good set of officials.

Everything indicates a busy, prosperous year for Crookston, with more building than ever before. And immigration promises to boom too.

W. E. Walker has secured the contract for building the new Fournet Block, and expects that work upon it will be commenced very soon.

The Norman County Herald attempts to be facetious at our expense. If the joke was not upon so pathetic a subject there would be more point to it.

J. V. E. Wyatt has moved into the new Reckitt Block and the new Baptist minister will occupy the house on Broadway that Mr. W. has just vacated.

Geo. W. Tripp and his little son were in from Mentor last week. This was the boy's first ride on the steam cars and he imagined he was being run away with.

Ed. Ross was out to see Rip Van Winkle on Saturday evening. It seems wonderful how well he got along—but then Doc Dampier is an excellent surgeon.

Geo. R. Roberts, of Stephen, dropped in to the Grand one evening last week to see Fierce & Albright. Mr. Roberts was surprised to see so fine a theatre in this city.

Brown A. Hovick sends us from Fertile a long list of contributions to our hail list which we gladly add with thanks. We would like to see our list trebled for next issue.

Mrs. Rose has her new rooms in the Reckitt Block nearly all ready and some of them already occupied. She has a very pleasant dining room and will no doubt do well.

With its last issue the Warren Register completes its fifth year. Bro. Stevens has succeeded in building up a paying business and that he is publishing a good paper is patent to all.

The Methodist Episcopal church building was duly dedicated last Sabbath, and, we are told, start in free from debt. Considerable money was raised at the meeting on Sunday.

Work on Sylvester & Finseth's new building was stopped by a suit brought to test the validity of the ordinance establishing the fire limits. The suit was brought in justice court and appealed to the district court.

Bro. Stevens, of the Warren Register, attended the Fierce & Albright combination at the Grand Opera House one evening last week. Says Crookston has as fine an opera house, in proportion, as any the twin cities can boast of.

Testimony in the LaChapelle divorce case is being taken.

While they are going secure a valuable team of mares at Brown's stables.

M. R. Brown has returned from Iowa with another lot of heavy mares. Call and see them.

Try Charlie Vine's meat market once. He will make it an object for you to call and leave an order.

Be sure to see that your name is properly registered. This is an important feature of the new voting system.

John Alderman was called away on Tuesday morning to look after some mortgaged property near St. Hilaire, the owner of which has skipped out leaving the stock uncared for.

Louis Zange died at his residence in this city on Wednesday morning of heart failure. He was a member of Col. Cobham Post, the first one of its members to pass away. The Post met last evening to arrange for the funeral.

The county hospital is gradually filling up with unfortunate ones and we hear only good words spoken of the management of that institution so far. We are of the opinion that the establishment of this institution was a wise move.

Trefle Daoust was in from the east side on Tuesday and dropped in to gladden the heart of the printer with a paid up subscription. Mr. D. says the threshing is pretty well completed out that way, and farmers are now awaiting seeding operations.

THE JOURNAL is in receipt of a copy of the Great Falls News, published by O. M. Holmes, formerly of Red Lake Falls. The News gives evidence of having a good patronage and is a well got up, newsy sheet. THE JOURNAL wishes O. M. abundant success in his new venture.

O. J. Barnes and W. D. Wilson extend a cordial invitation to their many friends to attend a Blue Jay Tea this evening at the residence of A. A. Miller. Whatever a "blujate" is we dinna ken, but the fact that an excellent supper will be served from 6 to 10 is sufficient for us to know.

H. O. Davis writes us from East Grand Forks did we get that $2 on subscription? We did, H. O., and have been so busy with the grippe and trying to get ready for our new press and outfit that we have neglected to furnish receipt. Just the first minute we get we will forward it.

A. L. Mitchell, a former Crookstonite, arrived in the city this week for a few days sojourn. He is a general agent for the White Sewing Machine Co. and doing well. A. L. says he notices many improvements in the city since he left and says he thinks that Crookston is a good live city and bound to make still greater progress in the near future.

Chief Gonyea returned from a visit to the twin cities and resumed his duties last week. Chief Gonyea was an old friend of J. B. Bresette who fell dead on the street in Minneapolis last week, and was within 10 feet of Bresette when he fell. Chief Gonyea saw him coming and was getting ready to greet him when suddenly Bresette fell and expired at once.

Dave Ross was quite seriously hurt on the work train on Monday. In some way he slipped and fell on the track and four or five cars passed over him, the brake beams striking and rolling him over. Fortunately he did not get under the wheels and no bones were broken, but he was badly bruised and shaken up. At last accounts it was thought that he would pull through all right.

A. N. Hixson returned on Thursday of last week from a missionary tour in Michigan and, judging from what we saw in Michigan local papers he has been pretty busy talking up the good points of this country. Hixson has done first-rate himself while here and has unbounded faith in the resources of the Red River Valley. We have not met Mr. H. since his return but we learn that he expects to see many people from Michigan this spring.

One of Mr. Hooper's horses was badly cut up by a kick recently and Mike Leguee was called for to sew up the rent. Hooper says Mike did it to the Queen's taste and we know that Mike can do that kind of business perfectly, as we had some colts badly cut up in a wire fence during the big storm of last summer. Mike went over and sewed up the rents—some of which were over 12 inches long—and to-day you wouldn't know the colts had been scratched. Men who saw the wounds soon after they were made and who have seen the colts since expressed doubts that those were the same colts—but they were all the same.

At the close of the entertainment on Saturday evening the audience chose Hugh Thompson, P. J. McGuire and A. D. Stephens a committee to superintend the drawing for the pony and then then chose little Trudie Wyatt to draw the number. To the first number no one responded, but to the second Fred Walker sung out loud enough to be heard a mile, while a handsome young lady who sat near us heaved a sigh about half as big as Fred's shout, for she had already elected us to go on the stage and get the pony for her (that was a horse on us and a pony for Fred. He ought to give little Trudie a nice dress or some little present for the neat way in which she won the pony for him.) We rather figured on that pony ourself but since the drawing have concluded that we should prefer a bicycle, anyhow.

THE JOURNAL is always glad to get bright, newsy letters from the different localities, but it is the invariable rule in every well ordered printing office to print no communications not accompanied by the name of the writer. Some of our good friends seem to have overlooked this fact recently. We do not insist upon publishing the name, if the writer objects, but WE MUST KNOW WHO THE WRITER IS. In the case of a newsletter, when we are pretty sure we know the name of the writer we publish the communication, but it is always best for the writer to sign his or her name. In that case the communication will be sure to appear, otherwise it is not so sure. When a person takes the pains to write a nice, newsy communication he naturally expects to see it in print, but he should not blame the printer, if the name of the writer be omitted, if he is disappointed.

The citizens convention was called to order at 7:30 p. m. on Tuesday evening by chairman John R. McKinnon. C. O. Christianson was made temporary chairman and P. J. Russell temporary secretary. The committee on credentials reported the following gentlemen entitled to seats in the convention, viz;

FIRST WARD—H. E. Cooke, John R. McKinnon, John Alderman, with H. E. Cooke proxy for John Alderman.

THIRD WARD—P J Russell and Euclid Munn.

FOURTH WARD—C. O. Christianson, A. McKinnon, E. Asseline, Louis Rivard, C. N. Lindell and W. F. Arnold.

FIFTH WARD—R. G. Marlette.

The committee on permanent organization reported recommending that the temporary organization be made permanent. On motion the convention proceeded to the nomination of officers by ballot, the first ballot to be an informal one. The name of Wm. Anglim was presented as candidate for Mayor and no other name being presented a motion prevailed to suspend the rules and instruct the secretary to cast the ballot for Wm. Anglim. For Alderman at large, A. K. Austin was proposed and no other aspirant appearing this nomination was made as before. For city clerk, E. C, Carruth, G. H. Palmer and J. V. E. Wyatt struggled through five ballots, resulting in the nomination of Carruth by a vote of 9 for Carruth, 6 for Palmer and 1 for Wyatt. For treasurer only one name was proposed, L. C. Couvrette and the secretary was instructed to cast the ballot. For assessor E. C. Davis, R. Burkhart and Wm. Arnold were put up. On informal ballot E. C. Davis received 6, Arnold 6 and Burkhardrt 4. 1st formal, Davis 3, Arnold 11, Burkhardt 2. Halvor Tvedten and Henry Shepard were nominated for constables. On motion the chair was instructed to appoint a city central committee consisting of one member from each ward.

Bert Duntly rejoices in an addition to his family—a recent addition, and while Bert was immensely pleased his better half, it seems, was not, and she kept dinging at Bert to sell it. Bert did not like the idea, so, of course, could not find an opportunity, so Mrs. B. kept on the same tune until one day, as Bert was about to go down town after dinner he gave it up and promised to sell the kid that afternoon. As he put on his hat to go he was greeted by the bone of contention thusly: "Good bye Bert," and that broke Bert all up completely and as he fled he said to his wife: "I don't care what you do about it, but I tell you I will not sell it! There is not a thousand dollars in this city big enough to buy that parrot of me."

The celebrated masonic apron, made by the family of Gen. La Fayette and presented by Gen. La Fayette to Gen. Washington, was on exhibition at Tom Morris' store on Monday. It is the property of Mt. Nebo Lodge, No. 91. A. F. & A. M., Shepardstown, W. V. Each member of that lodge may, by giving a bond for $5,000, keep the apron for a period not to exceed one year. W. Leman, of Angus, is a member of Mt. Nebo Lodge and he has charge of the historic apron. It was taken to the Grand Lodge at its last meeting and while there some cabinet firm made an elegant frame for it and presented to the Grand Lodge and the Grand Lodge will present the frame to the Mt. Nebo Lodge. The apron was brought down from Warren by Clint, Winchester and Mr. Lambertson on Monday evening and was seen by a great many masons and others while it remained in the city.

In the various ward caucuses on Saturday evening the following gentlemen were put in nomination for aldermen:

AN EXPENSIVE ANIMAL.

Difficulties in Capturing Alive a Genuine Man-eating Gorilla.

But by far the most expensive and rarest animal in the world is the great African Gorilla. As the Rocky Mountain goat is the rarest in the American trade, so, too, the gorilla is the costliest and rarest in the trade of the globe. As far as I know, there never was a specimen of the genuine man-eating gorilla brought to the United States. Nor will there ever be one. You see in the first place, this animal inhabits the wildest and most inaccesible parts of the African interior, and furthermore, is the wildest and most blood-thirsty beast in the world.

Hence, in my judgment, it will be years before one is displayed in this country. To meet a gorilla means death, every time. A gorilla can fight and kill an elephant, if need be. Of what avail is a bullet or a snare? The animal will twist a gun barrel like so much straw. A man has no more chance before one of these beasts than a mouse has before a bulldog. As far as I know, only one gorilla was ever brought to Europe and that one died soon after its arrival. It seems the beast pines away in captivity.

With a specimen of the genuine man-eating gorilla a person could easily make a fortune in a year. People would eagerly pay a large price to see the beast. In a year you could clear thousands of dollars. So, if you ever run across a genuine specimen, remember what I am telling you to day, and don't sell out too soon or at a loss.—New York Recorder.

England's Money Guarded.

The Bank of England's doors are now so finely balanced that the clerk, by pressing a knob under his desk, can close the outer doors instantly, and they can not be opened again except by special process. This is done to prevent the daring and ingenious unemployed of the great metropolis from robbing the famous institution. The bullion department of this and other great English banking establishments are nightly submerged in several feet of water by the action of the machinery. In some of the London banks the bullion departments are connected with the manager's sleeping-rooms, and an entrance can not be affected without setting off an alarm near the persons head. If a dishonest official, during day or night, should take even as much as one from a pile of one thousand sovereigns the whole pile would instantly sink and a pool of water take its place, besides letting every person in the establishment know of the theft.

The Cunning of Gulls.

An example of the cunning of gulls was observed at Tacoma when several alighted on a bunch of logs that had been in the water for a long time, with the submerged sides thick with barnacles. One was a big gray fellow, who seemed to be the captain. He walked to a particular log, stood on one side of it close to the water, and then uttered peculiar cries. The other gulls came and perched on the same side of the log, which under their combined weight rolled over several inches. The gulls, step by step kept the log rolling until the barnacles showed above the water. The birds picked eagerly at this food, and the log was not abandoned until every barnacle had been picked.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

ASPIRATION.

The nightingale sat on a bough
And smoothed a shining wing.
"Who taught you"—scoffed the terrapin—
"Who taught you how to sing?"

The nightingale blushed fiery red,
She had not been to school;
She mused on what the tortoise said,
And sighed, "'Twas not by rule."

A rabbit skirted down the path,
A-dancing in the sun.
"Who taught you"—scoffed the terrapin—
"Who taught you how to run?"

The rabbit blushed a fiery red,
He had not had a master,
He flung his heels against his head,
And tried to run the faster.

The nightingale, she cracked her voice
Learning to sing by rule,
The rabbit broke his forward leg
In a gymnasium school.

The terrapin, who could not sing,
Who could not follow after,
She sat beside her native spring
And shook her sides with laughter.

DETECTIVE BENDER.

I WAS alone in my office at the divisional police station situated in the little out-of-way town-ship of Dunboro'. It was after ten p. m., and I was just settling down for a couple of hours at my books, when a tall, fine looking man entered the office with a cherry "Good-night, Inspector," and placed a visiting card upon the counter.

The card bore the inscription, "Sergeant Bender, Criminal Investigation Department, Great Scotland Yard."

"You will be surprised at the late hour of my arrival, but, owing to the defective train service, I have been considerably delayed. However I shall get my man to-night, I think."

Here he produced a neat leather case, a document and a photograph, which he handed over to me for examination.

The paper was a duly-signed warrant for the arrest of one Charles Eldercoat, on a charge of having embezzled £175, the moneys of his employers, Messrs. Spark and Shimmer, a well-known metropolitan firm of jewellers and diamond merchants.

The carte-de-visite, Sergeant Bender informed me, was the portrait of the "wanted" man.

"I have information," went on Mr. Bender "to the effect that young Eldercoat is putting up at the 'Bull and Stump' in Dunboro,' to-night. He is a traveler for Spark and Shimmer, and has been making their money fly like chaff for some time past. Dunboro' is his last business call in this district, and he means to make himself scarce. He has been writing to a pal in London to this effect, and his employers have got hold of the letter. I have called here to let an officer come with me to give me a hand in making the apprehension."

I told him that I should be glad to accompany him myself, and the night sergeant, who had just come, was left in charge of the office, while Sergeant Bender and I sallied forth in the direction of the "Bull and Stump." Arrived at that house of entertainment, which had closed for the night, we rang at the front door-bell and were admitted by the landlady.

The commercial room we found in possession of two men, one of whom, a curly-headed young fellow, with a weak face, I immediately recognized as the original of the photograph which had been shown me by the London officer.

The young man raised his head as we entered, and it was easy to see that the representative of Messrs. Spark and Shimmer had been drinking more than was good for him. He was drunk, in fact, good-naturedly, but almost helplessly, so when addressed by Sergeant Bender, he extended his hand to that officer, with a maudlin smile and the invitation, "Si' down and have a drink, old f'l'r."

Gravely the sergeant proceeded to read over the warrant to his prisoner, whose face all the while preserved a ridiculous expression of tipsy amusement, and at the close of his recital he laughed vacantly, shook the detective cordially by the hand, and remarked: "That's all ri', my boy now have a liquor."

We raised him to his feet between us and led him from the room, the landlady and Eldercoat's late companion taking in the situation with open-mouthed astonishment.

We got our prisoner to the police station with no more trouble than was occasioned by his almost helpless condition.

Whilst I was entering in my record book a report of the apprehension, Sergeant Bender proceeded to make the customary search of his prisoners person. A pocket-book containing £65, a gold repeater, a diamond ring, and a costly scarf-pin were amongst the articles enumerated to me as I wrote. Sergeant Bender, making them up into a neat parcel, and depositing them in the inside pocket of his own great-coat, remarked:—

"These will count as property recovered."

Poor Eldercoat was then carried to his cell, where he lay like a log upon the plank bed assigned him as a resting place.

"Well, now," said Sergeant Bender, "I think we managed that pretty well. I am really much obliged for your assistance, Mr. Inspector, and our people at the Yard will, no doubt, report favorably on the matter to your headquarters. Let me see, now. I shan't be able to start for town with my man until the 9:30 train in the morning, so I'll just go back to the pub. and get a bed for the night."

It was fully eight o'clock on the following morning when a movement in the cell announced that the prisoner was awake, and I walked down the corridor to have a look at him. I was prepared for a rueful countenance, but not for the white, terrified face which confronted me as I opened the door of Eldercoat's cell.

"Where am I?" he gasped. "Good heavens, in prison! What for? What have I done? Oh, yes, I remember, now," he cried, as a less agonized expression came into his eyes. "I was drunk last night, and must have got into the hands of the police. But my sample cases," he added quickly, "my money and papers and things, they're all right, I suppose; you have got them?"

I replied that he would find them safe enough, and then proceeded to enlighten him as to the true cause of his detention.

Expressions of surprise and bewilderment alternated on his features during my communication, at the close of which he broke out into something like a fit of laughter.

"Oh, this is rank nonesense, you know," he exclaimed. "I am Mr. Spark's nephew, and am engaged to be married to his daughter. I never took a penny of the firm's money in my life, and, if I did so, they would go into the Bankruptcy Court sooner than prosecute me. Can I telegraph to my uncle for an explanation?"

I told him he had better wait the arrival of the London officer, whom I expected every moment from the "Bull and Stump."

An hour passed, and the gentleman from Scotland Yard being not yet on hand, I sent a message to the hotel.

It was my turn to be astonished and alarmed when the messenger returned. The gentleman, I was informed, had left the "Bull and Stump" for the police station at half-past seven, taking with him the sample cases which belonged to Mr. Eldercoat.

A light dawned on me. Frantically I rushed to the telegraph office, and despatched two messages—one to Scotland Yard, the other to Messrs. Spark and Shimmer. It was long past the London train time when back came the replies, with stunning confirmation of my tardily aroused suspicions.

No warrant had been issued for the arrest of Mr. Eldercoat, and the Scotland Yard authorities laconically disclaimed "Detective-Sergeant Bender" as a member of their body.

I was in a mess. Poor Eldercoat was immediately released as a matter of course. My superior officers arrived in the course of the day, and every effort was fruitlessly made to effect the capture of the clever rogue.

One result of our inquiries was the discovery that the soi-disant Detective-Sergeant Bender was identical with one Vernon Wells, a notorious member of the "swell mob," who was wanted all over the country for frauds and felonies, all carried out with singular daring and ingenuity.

I was in sad disgrace for a long time, and I vowed that if I ever should meet Vernon Wells again that gentleman would find himself in as warm a corner as he had ever occupied.

I did meet him once again, years after, and he was in as warm a corner as even I could have selected for him. He stood in a felon's dock, out of which he walked a convict for the remainder of his natural life, and a sentence of only a little less severity was meted out to Well's companion in the dock, whom I recognized with astonishment as the prosperous-looking individual with whom Eldercoat had been drinking on the night of his memorable arrest.

WIND AND SAND.

They Level Mountains and Fill Up Deep Valleys.

The wind sweeping across a country bare of verdure and parched by drouth catches up particles of dust and sand and drives them violently into the air in clouds, or sweeps them along more quietly close to the surface where they are at first scarcely noticeable. The impact of a single one of these moving grains on any object with which it may come in contact is infinitesimal, but the impact of millions acting through long periods of time produces striking results. Urged by the winds the grains go sweeping on, undermining cliffs, scouring down mountain passes, wearing away the loose boulders and smothing out all inequalities.

Naturally the abraiding action on exposed blocks of stone is most rapid near the ground, as here the flying sand grains are thickest. First the sharp angles and corners are worn away, and the masses gradually become pear-shaped, standing on their smaller ends. Finally the base becomes too small for support, the stone topples over, and the process begins anew without a moment's intermission and continues until the entire mass disappears—becomes itself converted into loose sand drifted by the wind and an agent for destruction.—From the Engineering Magazine.

Where Money Was of Little Value.

En Englishwoman, describing a visit to an extensive gold mine in Victoria twenty-five years ago, says that many of the workers in the mine were shareholders and very rich men. Few of them seamed to have the slightest idea of the value of money or how to spend it.

"Many of those who can count their money by thousands live in the same little shanties which they built on first coming to the diggings. They treat their friends on every possible occasion, and when they go to the nearest town buy for their wives the most expensive dresses they can find. Few of them have any higher idea of the pleasures or the advantages or even the comforts to be attained by the possession of wealth.

"As illustrating the characteristics of such men, a gentleman told me this story:

"He arrived at a port in Australia, and finding no one who looked like a porter by profession to take his portmanteau to the hotel, he said to a rough-looking man who was standing on the wharf with his hands in his pockets:

"'Here, my man, if you'll take this up to the hotel for me, I'll give you half a crown.'

"The man scowled at him, took a couple of sovereigns out of his pocket, threw them into the sea, turned away without a word, and marched off with the most contemptuous expression on his face."

A Stern Parent.

Mr. Lefaucheur, enraged at the conduct of his son, a student in Paris, wrote to him as follows:—"Monsieur, I am so angry with you that I am determined to stop the supplies. Any money that you receive after this date will be sent by your mother, and without my knowledge. I may tell you that if you will not attend to your studies you will always remain an ass.—Your father (signed) Lefaucheur."—Le Nationale.

LIGHT IN SCHOOL ROOMS.

In his paper on the lighting schoolrooms in the Maine Sanitary Inspector, Dr. James A. Spalding of Portland says they cannot be too light. Any scholar should be able to read the finest type on a dark day. A good rule is one foot of glass to five feet of floor area. He says: "Two window surfaces 5x10, near together, will give more light than two windows 5x10 separated by woodwork three or four feet wide. If masonry is needed to support the wall, make it taper towards the inside of the room, and thus enlarge the space in which the light may enter."

When a schoolhouse is only one story high, Dr. Spaulding remarks, it would be a good idea to have the whole of the left wall in each room one large window, with the exception of two or three feet of plastered surface at each end, and pillars or beams not wider than 12 inches between each pair of windows according to the length of the wall. Light should always come from the left, but cannot come wholly from that side as a general thing. Where the room is too wide to be well lighted from the left alone, we should have additional light from the right side, and in order to avoid cross lights which are "perverse," the windows on the right side should be smaller and higher up. Perverse light does more mischief than no light at all.

The importance of these considerations may be inferred from Dr. Spalding's statement that whereas in 1875 a certain grammar school had exhibited such and such a percentage of short sight with ill-lit rooms, that percentage in 1885 had decreased one half in the same rooms, after enlarging the windows. Gray or blue curtains are useful to bar out direct sunlight. They should be so arranged as to pull both ways in pairs, and by a little ingenuity in this respect the direct light can be excluded without darkening the room at all. Ground glass in all the windows has been proposed as a substitute for curtains, but it is too dazzling for the eyes when the sun lies directly upon it. Blinds on the inside of the window are also useful, but on the whole curtains are the best. The doctor says short-sighted pupils should be given the best seats.—Lewiston Journal.

BODIES CATCHING FIRE.

The Theory of Spontaneous Combustion Once Seriously Entertained.

The theory of spontaneous combustion of the human body in former times was held by almost every expert. French scientists, in particular, supported it, and several of them published pamphlets, in which numerous cases of alleged spontaneous combustion of the human body were described at length, but there are three very significant points to be noticed in connection with such reports. One is the invariable admission that there was a light or fire in the room where the catastrophe occurred; another, that the alleged instances always happened in families composed of ignorant persons, and another, that in no case was there any actual witness of the occurrence.

Something like 75 per cent. of the human body consists of water; this fact in itself is sufficient to discredit any of the alleged instances of spontaneous combustion. It is just conceivable that persons who drink an enormous amount of spirituous liquors may become so saturated, as it were, with this inflammable material that their bodies burn much more easily than would those of people who do not over-indulge in this way, but it is perfectly certain that the fire would have to be applied from without, for no such thing as spontaneous combustion could be possible in any article containing so great a preponderance of the liquid element as does the human body.—Pearson's Monthly.

The Law an Expensive Luxury.

Just how expensive a luxury the law can be upon occasion is illustrated by a recent case in London where the costs were seventeen times as large as the sum originally in dispute. A Mrs. Large refused to pay rent for a house on the ground that it was in such an insanitary condition that her husband inhaled sewer gas there and died in consequence. An action was brought against her, and for some reason which does not appear, she failed to defend it. Judgment was given against her for the £41, and the costs amounted to £700. Mr. Justice Grantham went so far as to declare that it was "one of the most scandalous things he had ever heard of," adding that "the moment a fund was in Court it seemed to be treated like a sow—a thing to be milked." The Judge's indignation, however, did not help Mrs. Large, as she practically had put herself out of Court by not defending the action.

Various Uses for Newspapers.

The uses of a newspaper, aside from its readable qualities, are not perhaps fully known. If on a raw day you have to walk across town for several blocks and meet the keen wind which New Yorkers invariably encounter, stop at the corner stand and buy a newspaper—its politics are non-essential—which slip beneath your fur cape or wrap, from neck to belt. Its protection is remarkable. Two newspapers spread between the insufficient covers of a bed on a cold night are an excellent substitute for the unprocurable blankets or comfortables. In traveling, one of these clean, new sheets on the floor of a dirty car means valuable dress protection. And light-soled shoes are most efficiently added to by two thicknesses of the same thing. Stand the shoe on the paper and draw an outline of the sole, which then cut out. This slipped in place is as good as a cork sole, and vastly more comfortable.—New York Times.

TO SWALLOW A MAN.

The Big Crowd That Assembled to Witness the Wonderful Feat.

John Thomas was a man of keen wit, and was strongly tinctured with a love of the humorous. He had been down to Concord, and had seen the Fakir of Ava perform his wonderful tricks of legerdemain. He was relating his experience in the bar-room of the Conway House, and among other things he declared that he had gained an insight into many of the magician's manipulations, and that several of the most wonderful tricks he could perform himself.

"For instance," he said, "I can swallow a man whole."

"Yes!" criticized Tom Staples, a red-faced farmer, weighing at least 200; "p'raps you could swallow me?"

"Yes."

"I'd like to see you do it. I'll bet $50 you can't."

"I'll take that bet."

"Then let's see you begin."

"Not now. I have just eaten my supper. I will do it to-morrow morning in the presence of as many witnesses as you choose; and it shall be done in the square in front of the hotel."

This was agreed to, and the money was put up. By the following morning the news that John Thomas was to swallow Tom Staples whole had become widespread, and a vast concourse, embracing men, women and children had assembled to witness the wonderful feat.

At the appointed time the chief actors appeared in the square. John Thomas was smiling confidently, as though sure of success, while Tom Staples looked a little timid and uneasy, as though not quite at rest concerning what was to become of him.

"Are you ready?" asked John.

"All ready," answered Tom. "Begin as soon as you please."

"Take off your hat."

"Sartin."

"Now your boots."

Tom removed his boots.

"Next you will remove your coat. Those big brass buttons might stick in my throat."

Tom took off his coat, and as he threw it upon the ground one of the cooks came out from the hotel with a pail of melted lard and a big whitewash brush, which he deposited by the side of John Thomas.

"Now," pursued John, you "will take off your stockings, and then remove your pants and shirt."

"What! D'ye mean for me to strip stark naked?" queried Tom, aghast.

"Of course I do. The agreement was that I was to swallow you. You are meat, but your clothes aren't, nor were they in the bond. If you will strip I will give you a thorough greasing and double the bet if you wish. I know I can swallow you—or, at any rate, I can try."

BAKING POWDER

In the New York Legislature.

The following, taken from "The Oil, Paint and drug Reporter," refers to a new bill just introduced in the legislature of New York State:

"The latest development in the baking powder war, is the introduction of a bill in the Legislature of this State, requiring all packages of baking powder which contain ammonia, to be branded with a statement of that fact in large type on the label.

Now while the ammonia contention is on, why cannot the law give the public the benefit of the doubt? Wholly unprejudiced people are certainly not willing to be dosed with the substance acknowledged as a poison, simply because scientists, some of whom are not even physiologists, disagree as to its potency."

A similar bill was introduced last April but it is shrewdly surmised that the influence of interested parties prevented its passage. The provisions of the present bill are so just that it probably will soon become a law.

This will be welcome news to the manufacturers of pure Cream of Tarter baking powders, the most prominent of whom is the Price Baking Powder Co. of Chicago and St. Louis, makers of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, who have always made a strictly pure Cream of Tartar powder, notwithstanding the temptations of adulteration suggested by the enormous profits realized by a large New York concern which uses ammonia, and advertise its powder as strictly pure, by means of garbled official reports and certificates signed by its own employees, dubbed professor, doctor or government chemist, as fancy may dictate.

A bill compelling alum powders to be conspicuously labelled as such, already exists in Minnesota and it is to be hoped in the interest of the consumer that similar laws will soon be enacted in other states, for ammonia as well as alum.

The following powders known to contain either ammonia or alum or both, will be affected by the proposed legislation:

Royal, Pearl, Calumet, Chicago Yeast, Forest City, One Spoon (Taylor's), Bon Bon, Kenton, Echo, Snow Puff, Unrivalled, Yarnall's One Spoon, Shephard's Economical, Crown, Clymax, Hercules, Monarch, New Era, Snow Ball.

Japanese and Chrysanthemums.

The Japanese consider it especially difficult to arrange chrysanthemums, and seven faults are noted which must carefully be guarded against in disposing of large blossoms of this plant. A blossom must not present its back in a composition, nor yet turn its full face to view. The different flowers must not have stems the same length; three must not be arranged in a triangular form, nor may any number be placed in a regular step-like way; the flowers should not be hidden by leaves, nor should a large open blossom be put near the base of the composition, and, finally, the artist must not fall into the sin of color sandwiching, or placing a blossom of one color between two others of another tint.—Garden and Forest.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. It is the province of a wise man to bear poverty with equanimity.

Now is the time to treat Catarrh of long standing. Ely's Cream Balm reaches old and obstinate cases, where all other remedies fail. Do not neglect procuring a bottle, as in it lies the relief you seek.

Rev. H. H. Fairall, D. D., editor of the Iowa Methodist, says editorally, "We have tested the merits of Ely's Cream Balm, and believe that, by a thorough course of treatment it will cure almost every case of catarrh. Ministers as a class are afflicted with head and throat troubles, and catarrh seems more prevalent than ever. We cannot recommend Ely's Cream Balm too highly."

Apply Balm into each nostril. It is Quickly Absorbed. Gives Relief at once. Price 50 cents at Druggists or by mail.

THE GREAT HESPER.

TALE OF A BIG DIAMOND.

How an Immense Gem Was Lost, Recovered, and Lost Again.

CHAPTER III.

When Van Hoeck recovered, and the baronet heard of our long fast, he took us at once into the dining-room, and had us served with the best he could give. It was a repast to recompense us for our long privations, and for a time we famished wretches forgot our treasure in the keen animal pleasure of satisfying the craving of hunger. Sir Edmund sat at the table with us, directing the servants, who surely had never before waited upon such strange company. One could see that it was a real delight to this large-hearted man to see us eat and drink. Miss Lascelles herself waited upon Van Hoeck, attending to his wants with feminine delicacy, his affliction appealed to her woman's sympathy.

She was a tall and graceful girl, with her father's fair, complexion, bright, mirthful eyes, that added to the happy expression of her face, and beautiful soft brown hair that took golden lights and chesnut shadows in its undulation. She looked you in the face with a fearlessness only possible to those who are perfectly healthy and perfectly honest. To the charm of physical beauty was added a faultless manner,—the complete self-command and unfailing grace inseparable from a lady of birth and education. She was as courteous to us, who must have seemed the veriest outcasts of society, as though we were her equal. A true lady can never be ungracious.

Her presence had an indescribable effect upon my senses,—the effect of fine music after discord. I was conscious of a return from savagery to civilization. But it was not until my gross appetite was satisfied that I became susceptible to this new delight.

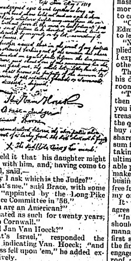
The Baronet spoke not one word about the diamond during dinner, but when it was all over he said:

Well, now, we will go back to the library; and you shall come with us, Edith, if our cigars will not be disagreeable to you, for we have a marvelous matter to talk about."

In the library Miss Lascellas seated herself beside her father, while we three men sat facing them on the other side of a small round table, on which I placed the diamond. At a little distance from there was a lion skin on the floor, and on this the Kid threw herself; as she lay there looking toward us, with her chin resting in the palms of her hands and her elbows planted in the fur, we saw scarcely anything of her but her great lustrous eyes, because of the shadow thrown by the lamp shade.

"Now, let us understand the position of things to begin with," said Sir Edmund, taking a cigar, after handing the box to us.

"This will explain a good deal," said I, putting in his hand the copy of our agreement.



Agreement (copy)

Jan Van Hoeck

Bernard Thorne

X The Kid (Lola Brace) her mark.

He held it that his daughter might read it with him, and, having come to the end, said,—

"May I ask which is the Judge?"

"That's me," said Brace, with some pride; "appinted by the Long Pike Vigilance Committee in '56."

"You are an American?"

"Located as such for twenty years; born in Cornwall."

"And Jan Van Hoeck?"

"That's Israel," responded the Judge, indicating Van Hoeck; "and darkness fell upon 'em," he added explanatively.

During a short space of his eventful career Brace had earned a precarious existence as a travelingpreacher.

"Then you are Bernard Thorne," the Baronet said to me, "and Lola is—"

"The Kid," said Brace; "her mother was a greaser,—a Mexican," he explained to Miss Lascelles. The dinner had warmed his spirits and loosened his tongue, and he continued, "We were drawed together at Cape Town by an advertisement in the paper. Our afflicted brother wanted to stake his little pile upon a mining venture. He hed studied the thing scientific'lly; he had laid out a kinder chart in his head, pricked down where the great finds hed been made, sorter reasoned out the cause thereof, end sot his mind firm as a big find was to be made in a certain spot known only unto himself. We conversed, and he perceived without much difficulty as he hed found the right sorter partner in me, end he kinder left it with me to find a third party to jine in the venture. I spotted out Gentleman Thorne here among a dozen. I liked the shape of his chest and shoulders; I liked the look of his face: I see that though he was outer luck, he was a gentleman every inch of him; and I tell you, miss," he said, addressing Miss Lascelles, "that though I ain't no gentleman myself, I back blood and breedin' agin' all creation. A man like Gentleman Thorne, who has been kep' clean in his infancy, fed wholesome, trained up in a public school, and been learnt to respect hisself and God Almighty, has better temper, more endurance, more pluck and lightin' power to overcome and win, than a dozen of the muckers that bounce about bein' workin' men. He paused a moment to let his words make due impression, and then continued, "Gentleman Thorne had no experience, but he had a hundred pound to put into the concern, and that fetched Israel jest, as much as his looks fetched me. Israel had three hundred. I hed nothing in the shape of dollars, but I threw in the Kid, which, being a female, was calc'lated to be useful unter us in the nat'ral order of things. What we hed we lumpt in, and by written agreement drawed up mutual, we undertook to play it out to the bottom dollar and the pint of starvation. We worked, sir, through thick and thin, through the measliest streak of luck mortal man ever struck.

"Israel was the first to funk it. 'My calc'lations are wrong; it's a hopeless venture, let us chuck it,' he says; to which Gentleman Thorne replies,—'No,' he says, 'we'll stick to our color and fight it out,' says he; end he did his level best to cheer us on. You should have heered him there a-whistlin' like a black-bud, singin' songs, drawin' us out of ourselves, and makin' a pleasant joke out of our bad luck. Ast the Kid down there who was her best friend in that trouble. She'll tell you it was Gentleman Thorne, not her father. She had a bit of a fever,—it was him made up a bed for her, built a screen to keep the sun off, walked fifteen mile in the night to get things from the store, set up night after night to give her water, end used for to sing out about the sleepin' beauty and Cineralla, while he was peggin away at the durned stones. I will allow, miss, I were ashamed to let him see I was loosin' heart; and, when I felt like blasphemin' at things in gen'al, I used to take a short walk and let off all my swearin' where he couldn't hear me; well, it did look as ef we had hooked onto the everlastin' fishkittle. Then Israel funked it a second time. 'We hev still a few pounds left,' he says to Gentleman Thorne, 'let's throw up the cards,' which they might hev done without going from our written word, they two formin' a majority. But Gentleman Thorne wouldn't agree to it. It wouldn't be fair to the Judge, he said, and then he promised that if we failed in the end he'd stick by Israel, and keep him like his own flesh and blood until he found the means of keeping hisself, which was more than I'd hev promised him, I will allow. Well, we played on till the last cent was spent in stores, and the stores had got down to a half a tin of beef and a screw of shag, and then I lighted on a two-carat stone. The very next day Gentleman Thorne found the Great Hesper. We couldn't allow it was real, yet we sorter thought it was. Anyhow, we didn't sleep till we got to Natal and had it tested. We sold the littler stone, and scraped enough together to pay our passage to Southhampton by the next boat. In committee we agreed to go to a bank and raise money on the diamond as soon's we landed; but no one wouldn't take us on, end, if the police hadn't put us on this track, I'm durned if I know what partic'lar 'ole we should hev been stickin' in at the present moment."

During this recital, which I have abbreviated considerably, Van Hoeck, who despised the Judge, and abominated all he said, sat with his eyes closely shut his nostrils pinched, and his black brows creased together so that they almost met. Miss Lascelles listened with intense interest, her pretty lips just parted, and I thought she looked more kindly upon me for the glowing eulogium—of which I have omitted a great part—paid to me by Brace.

The Kid changed her position, seeming to catch some of her father's enthusiasm, and; sitting upon her heels with her hands clasped before her, turned her flashing eyes sometimes upon me, but more often upon Miss Lascelles, as if to catch the effect of this narrative.

"One thing is obvious," said Sir Edmund, cheerfully; "you won't want to leave me to-night."

"Neery one on us, sir, you bet" replied the Judge, while Van Hoeck and I expressed the same sentiment in other words.

The baronet spoke in a low tone to his daughter, who rose and left the room.

"The next thing to consider is," he then said, "how can I be of service to you in this affair. To purchase your treasure is of course altogether out of the question. But I should like to buy a small—a very, very small—share in it, paying down a certain sum for your present convenience, and taking it back when the diamond is ultimately disposed of, with a reasonable percentage upon the outlay. I make this suggestion as a matter of business, that you may feel yourselves free from any restraint in accepting my offer."

It took us but a few moments to agree to this proposal.

"In that case," he proceeded; "I should wish to have a voice in the management of this business; and the first suggestion I should make is, that the finest artist in work of this kind be engaged to cut the diamond under this roof, and that during the operation you should take up your residence here. This precaution is necessary for the safe keeping of the treasure, and for our own common security."

This arrangement was too obviously advantageous to us to require argument; we consulted together, and quickly agreed to accept the condition.

Sir Edmund read the agreement through again, and then said:

"We must consult a lawyer with regard to a legal form of agreement. Here there is a kind of tontine arrangement by which one would receive an enormous advantage by the death of his partners. It is an uncomfortable clause, and I do not see the necessity of existence, now that the circumstances which called for its being made are changed. A lawyer may provide for our security without exposing us to ugly possibilities. That, however can all be settled later on. There is no hurry. It will be time enough to make the legal arrangement when we have ascertained the value of the property to be arranged, and that we can not know before the stone is cut. We will question the best firms in London with regard to a lapidary, and take our time. Meanwhile, I will supply you with what money you want upon your I. O. U., and the diamond shall remain in your keeping. Talk it over amongst yourselves at your leisure, and any modification you may think advisable, I have no doubt I shall be able to accept."

Miss Lascelles returned to the room, and she spoke to her father. Then she went to Lola, who had curled herself up on the skin, and knelt down beside her. The girl was not asleep; she started up into a sitting attitude as Miss Lascelles approached, and flung off the hand that was laid tenderly on her arm.

"Yor don't dislike me, Lola?" the young lady asked, smiling.

"Yes, I do," the girl replied, savagely.

"But I want to be your friend."

"We sha'n't never be friends."

I lost Miss Lascelles' response, for a servant entered the room, and Sir Edmund addressed us:

"Your rooms are ready," he said; "Johnson will show you to them if you feel you would like to turn in."

The prospect of sleeping once more in a good bed brought us to our feet at once.

Miss Lascelles, undaunted by the first rebuff, had got Lola's hand in hers, and was talking in a low, endearing tone to her. The Kid snatched her hand away, started to her feet, and came to my side, seeing we were about to go.

"A little cuss," said the Judge; you must excuse her, miss. Her mother was a greaser, and she's never had any kindness shown her, except by Gentleman Thorne. A lick with the strap is what she understands best. No, miss," he added, when Miss Lascelles offered to take Lola to her room; "leave her to me. There ain't nothing but disappintment and vexation of spirit to be got outer the ongrateful varmint."

The room given to the Kid was the prettiest imaginable, with hangings of white lace over blue silk, and everywhere the eye was pleased with some pretty evidence of care and taste. The bed was suggestive of coziness and fresh virgin purity at the same time. I might have taxed my ingenuity in vain to have told Lola. We left the Kid there, leaning against the wall, her unfathomable eyes looking around her in sullen curiosity.

In the morning the room was found empty, the bed untouched, the floor covered with shreds of the clothing Miss Lascelles had laid out for Lola's use, and which, undoubtedly, the little savage had torn up.

Poor little Lola! She and I had always been the best of friends, except when a question of cooking or washing occurred to trouble us. She would yield to my persuasion when nothing else would bend her stubborn spirit. She feared my silent reproach more than the scathing sarcasm Van Hoeck treated her with, or the heavy hand of her father. She respected no one but me, probably because I alone respected her feelings.

Had I foreseen that night the course she was about to take, I might, with a little patient persuasion, have brought her to reason. My spirit is weighed down with regret when I think how perhaps a dozen words from me at that time would have turned aside the fearful consequence of that act, an act so slight, yet followed by terror upon terror, by crime upon crime. TO BE CONTINUED.

A Fancy-Work Partnership.

Since fancy work has become "decoration," and the dealer possesses a knowledge far beyond that of assorting German worsteds, the interiors of our houses no longer resemble bazaars of canvas-worked articles. Young women who aim to supply fancy work for dainty fingers now study designing at the Museum of Fine Arts or the Lowell Institute of Design. They understand historic periods of decoration, adapting attractive features of the past to the needs of the present; they study the peculiarities of ornament of various nations, and use all suggestions in an artistic manner. Two young women who formed a partnership have been most successful in showing how the business of producing dainty fancy work may be carried on. In a large, light room divided by a screen into a large reception room and a small work room, they receive orders, make designs, and in dull seasons take up needles and silks for embroidery. To the question whether it is not difficult to keep up with the fashion of decoration, which changes almost as often as that of dress, one of the partners said, with a smile, "Oh, we try to be ahead of the fashions." This ability to be in advance is, in reality, the faculty of originating designs.

The charming manner in which the two young partners work together is an encouraging indication of woman's tact in business relations. One who particularly enjoys finances attends to the bookkeeping; the other receives most of the orders, and both design patterns. "It is very amusing," one said, "to see how difficult to understand the idea of our partnership seems to be. Some people cannot realize that our interests are identical; and believe that each is conducting an independent business." The partners, in two years' business relations, have become so united in method that each takes up her duties without hesitation, and the result is both harmony in partnership and beauty of designs.

Should Women Smoke.

The Hospital has got into trouble for advising women whose nerves cannot bear the strain of small worries to try smoking if their doctors recommend it. But, says Mr. James Payn pertinently, why the general public should be more shocked at a lady being recommended to smoke tobacco than stramonium one is at a loss to conjecture. It will not be denied by anyone short of a lunatic that a pipe allays the troubles of a man, and why shouldn't a few whiffs of a cigarette allay the worries of a woman? At present its mitigations among the fair sex are confined chiefly to the fast and loose, but there is no more reason why it should be so than that the devil, as John Wesley observed, should have all the best tunes.—Hospital.

The Sportsman and the Wolves.

With reference to the exceptionally cold weather a company of sportsmen were discussing the chances of meeting a famished wolf in the woods near Rome. Said one of the sportsmen:—

"Quite recently I found myself without arms, and with the snow lying three feet deep on the ground face to face with three wolves."

"Well, what then?"

"Then I stared intently at them for the space of ten minutes, after which I walked away with my hands in my pockets and whistling a tune."

The friends who had been listening to him then cried in chorus: "And didn't they eat you up?"

"No they couldn't; they were in a cage."—Il Motto per Ridere.

WILD BOY OF WALLAHEE.

BY MAURICE THOMPSON.

The plantation was called Wallahee from the name of an Indian chief who once owned it. In 1829 it was bought by Thomas Verplank, who settled upon it with some fifty negro slaves, and it remained in the possession of the Verplank family until about the year 1863, when a detachment of Federal troops destroyed it.

At the end of the war Wallahee was badly grown up with bushes and brambles, the fences were all gone, the house a ruin, and the large cotton gin stood roofless and forlorn, the rusted machinery all exposed to the weather and falling to pieces.

Nobody came to occupy or assume ownership of the place, nor did any one know what had become of the Verplanks.

About September, 1868, there arose a rumor in the neighborhood that a wild boy had been seen at Wallahee. It was such a preposterous story (told by two or three not over-reputable negroes) that little notice was at first given to it by the neighbors. The boy was long-haired, wild-eyed, poorly clad, so these negroes said, and ran like a deer whenever he was approached.

But in a little while, so ready are people to receive gruesome impressions, the story was a familiar one at the firesides of all the families along Pearl river for miles, and although everybody openly refused to believe a word of it, a good deal of talk was had about it.

Again and again the negroes who were cutting wood near Wallahee, saw or pretended to see, the wild, disheveled boy, skulking in the thickets, or running, ghastly and emaciated, through the open pine woods.

One day Squire Gordon was riding along by way of the bridle-path known in the neighborhood as Little Wolf Trail, when suddenly this strange, much talked of lad stepped forth from a clump of haw bushes a little way ahead of him. The apparition startled not only the 'Squire, but his horse as well. Indeed, the latter shied so viciously that his rider was tumbled all of a heap at the side of the path. To be sure there was nothing in the boy's looks particularly frightful, although his eyes were sunken, his cheeks waxen and withered, and his clothes ludicrously worn and tattered.

When the 'Squire scrambled to his feet the apparition was gone.

As soon as it became known that a justice of the peace could testify to the story of the Wild Boy of Wallahee there was a mighty stir in the neighborhood among both the blacks and the whites. What had before this been a mere fireside whisper now swelled to a veritable wonder-tale.

And now more and more frequently the boy was seen, by this one or that one, black or white, it was always in some lonely place near Wallahee and he invariably evaded in the most mysterious way any would-be pursuer. Finally it began to be observed that no matter where he started up he never failed to run toward a certain area of swamp land which was covered with wisps of cane and tangled clumps of moss-hung oak trees. He seemed to like the night better than the day, especially when the moon shone. Many good people affirmed that they had seen him looking wistfully in through their windows, and that before they could get out of doors he was gone.

So the matter went on until nearly everybody had seen the Wild Boy of Wallahee, and those who hadn't seen him were expecting to do so every moment. More than once a party of men organized themselves and went on a systematic hunt, determined to capture this myeterious little fellow; but every trial ended in failure.

"It's er sperit, thet's what it air," declared old Andy Davis. "How d'ye s'pose ye're goin' ter ketch er ghost?"

Andy was the oldest inhabitant. His memory went back to 1829, when the Verplanks first came to Wallahee.

"They wuz a leetle boy a livin' thar 'at Tom Verplank was guarjin of—Tom hed no chile'n of 'is own—an' thet leetle feller diserpeared mighty s'picionable like; I 'members it very well. They wus some talk of foul play, but nothin' was done erbout it. Ye see the leetle boy was heir ter all the money, niggers, an' land 'at Tom Verplank war a usin'—don't ye see?"

Andy winked knowingly, but nobody else could be found who had heard of a missing heir to Wallahee.

A great many people came to accept this hint, however, as the true solution. The wild boy was, they were sure, the ghost of little Tunis Verplank, who had disappeared so mysteriously in 1831. No sooner did Andy Davis's theory become current neighborhood talk than the little specter appeared twice as often as before. He was to be seen both night and day. Children and nervous women were afraid to go out alone for fear of meeting what they now named the "haunt of Wallahee."

It was William Raglan, or Billy Raglan, as the people called him, who at last roused and organized the men and boys of the country round about to make a comprehensive, systematic "drive," as he termed it, to capture the thing, be it ghost or boy.

Billy Raglan was a youth of sixteen, reckless, and yet a good enough fellow in his way. When he set out to do something everybody knew that he would succeed if success were possible. His plan in this case was for all the men and boys in the Wallahee settlement—some two hundred or more—to form a great circle around the woods haunted by the wild boy, then gradually draw in a center by closing up the line and marching abreast from all directions in toward the little swamp. The plan was accepted to be acted upon, to Billy's great delight, and he fell like a general in command of an army when he saw the line forming.

"We'll ketch that 'ar' boy," he said, "er run 'im inter his hole an' stop up the hole wi' er a pine knot—thet's what we'll do!"

It was a lovely night, with the full moon climbing up a soft sky in the East. Dim and strange were the outlines of the trees in the thick Southern wood. A light breeze made a wide rustle and a solemn moan in the tall pines. The shadows waved fantastically.

Wallahee, with its tangled woods, was encircled by the men and boys. They blew horns and shouted as they closed in toward the little swampy spot in the center.

Billy Raglan was the most eager one of all. He tried to be everywhere at the same time.

"I air jes' er achin' ter git holt er that 'ar boy," he kept saying as he ran this way and that just inside of the line.

Many wild animals, mostly small things like hares, raccoons, and opossums were seen; but the Wild Boy did not show himself.

At last the little swamp was reached by the noisy and now closely drawn cordon.

"There he is! Yander he goes! Look out! don't let 'im through!" Suddenly a chorus of voices yelled out, "Grab 'im ef he tries to pass! We'll git 'im now!"

Billy Raglan rushed forward, and many declared they saw him in full chase of a wild, ragged, haggard, tangle-haired boy.

Plash! plash! plash! the feet of the pursuer and pursued flung up the water of the coffee-colored pools as they tore along.

The line pressed in with a surge, and a tumultuous yelling that made the forest ring for miles.

Those who could distinguish them said that the Wild Boy was not as large as Billy Raglan; indeed he did not appear to be more than twelve years old, and that he ran like a deer and went straight for the central little hummock of the swamp. Billy was straining every muscle. Slowly but surely he gained until, as it was afterward said, he could almost touch the long, yellow hair that streamed in half-curling locks from the bare head of the emaciated little fellow.

Closer and closer, in the wavering moonlight, swept in the rapidly diminishing circle of crowding, vociferating, floundering people. The Wild Boy could never break through. Once, it was said, he turned his face back on Billy with a look of terror and despair. This was just as the two were entering the shadowy, moss-festooned clump of trees on the hummock.

The circle was now so narrow that a stone could have been tossed across.

Into the central clump, as the account goes, plunged the Wild Boy, and just one step behind him followed Billy Raglan.

A moment later an awful scream was heard, and then came a dull, muffled sound, as of some heavy body falling to the bottom of a pit.

Instantly the voices of the cordon were hushed; even the dusky trees seemed to be hearkening. Everybody pressed on, scrambling over fallen trees and dashing kneedeep through the black muck and leaf-covered ooze.

"Whar' air ye, Billy?" called old Andy Davis. "Hev ye cotch 'im, Billy?"

Andy's large yellow dog darted forward from his master's side and began sniffing at something beside a huge, half-decayed water-oak log.

"What ye got thar, Trumpet?" demanded the old man, as he cautiously approached the spot. "Hev ye foun' somethin'?"

The crowd now rushed up, and what they beheld almost curdled their blood. Billy Raglan lay in a shallow, grave-like pit, face upward, apparently dead and by his side a skeleton of a small boy. The Wild Boy himself was nowhere to be seen.

When the first shock had passed they lifted Billy out and found that his heart still beat. He was ill for some weeks; but he recovered. The skeleton when examined proved to be old and bleached. Evidently it had lain there for many years undisturbed.

One thing about the story was always and still is vexatious. Billy Raglan himself, although living, has never told any person a single particular of that strange adventure; perhaps there is nothing for him to tell. If you ask him to relate to you the real facts of it he only smiles and shakes his head with a shrug. But old Andy Davis, now in his nineties, is always glad to give you his account of the whole matter; but Andy has never been considered a very good or a very truthful man.

HE WAS CHEEKY,

But She Rebuked Him in an Admirable Manner.

It occurred on a West Madison street car. The car was crowded with clerks and workmen and shop-girls coming down town to their daily work. Among the latter was a young woman who had bought a morning paper, evidently intending to read it on the way to work.

But the crowd prevented this, and so, folding the paper, she held it in one hand and grasped a strap with the other. Directly in front of her a well-dressed specimen of the two-legged hog contentedly held down a seat.

Without offering the girl his seat he suddenly gave her cloak a jerk to attract attention and said:

"Say, miss, if ye an't usin' that paper, just let me take a peep at it for a minute, won't yer?"

Looking squarely into his eyes the indignant young woman replied:

"No, thank you, sir, I prefer to stand; pray keep your seat."

And, strange to say, the fellow refused to do so. He left the car at the next crossing very hastily. I wonder why? Perhaps he jumped off to buy a paper.

Legs as Means of Protection.

A group of reporters were discussing the question of carrying revolvers. All, excepting one agreed that, considering the chances to which a reporter was subjected, it was a necessary precaution. He who objected is a champion amateur sprinter and record holder.

"I used to carry a pistol myself," he said, until an acquaintance chanced to see it.

"'If you should shoot some one,' he asked, do you suppose that you could establish a plea of self-defense? Would a jury acquit a man of a charge of manslaughter, if it were proved that he could run a quarter of a mile in less than fifty seconds, and a half mile in better than two minutes?"

I came to the conclusion that it was doubtful, and that's why I keep my gun at home."—New York Herald.

Odors of Christians.

It appears on Chinese authority that Christians can be identified by their smell. But skeptical travelers are inclined to believe, after seeing the filthy condition of Chinese towns and villages, that it is by the comparative absence of odor among civilized races that a Chinaman can spot a christian.

By the best accounts Chinese towns are incredibly filthy, there being no pretense of sewerage, everything being thrown on the street.—Toronto Mail.

INSECT HORSES.

Ants Can Carry on Their Backs Many Times Their Own Weight.

A gentleman on the island of St. Croix instituted several experiments with reference to ascertaining the truth of what he had often been told of the ingenuity and apparent reasonings of the ants of that beautiful island, says the New York Ledger.

Having slain a centipede which had been sent him by a friend, he laid it on the window-sill within his apartment, where, though not a single individual of that mischievous race of vermin had been seen, to his great gratification, in the course of a few hours, one solitary ant suddenly made its appearance through a crevice in the casing, attracted probably by the odor of the dead body.

Shortly after, having surveyed the premises, it disappeared, but speedily returned with a host of companions, to whom the discovery of a prize had unquestionably been communicated; a more careful survey of the magnitude of the object was evidently instituted. The whole company then disappeared simultaneously through the crack, but an army was put in requisition, for the third appearance was a multitude.

Having mounted the carcass, examined minutely its exact position and satisfied themselves that it was actually bereft of life and that no danger would be incurred from their premeditated operations, a new and unlooked-for series of labor was commenced, bearing such a striking analogy to human reason in what is commonly called "contrivance," that, if there is no intelligence in it—why, the metaphysicians have in reservation an unexplored field of observation.

Not being able to move the mass entirely, they divided themselves into platoons and cut the body into portions of about half an inch in length, which was effectually and skillfully done between a late hour in the afternoon and the following night and each piece transported to their citadel through some contiguous aperture of sufficient diameter to allow the loads to pass.

When the observer arose at daylight every part had been carried away except the head, which was really moving off toward the hole surrounded by an immense concourse of admiring spectators, probably on the qui vive, happy in the delightful anticipation of future feasts and revelings.

On further scrutiny he found that the decapitated head was mounted on the backs of about a dozen bearers who, like a roman phalanx with a testudo upon their shoulders, were marching off in orderly manner toward the same orifice through which the rest had disappeared.

AN INSTRUCTIVE FABLE.

The Joyous Tale of the Dervish and the Walking Delegate.

A dervish journeyed forth to teach mankind the uselessness of riches, says Truth. He was scantily clothed in the filthest of rags; his head was bare and on his feet were fragments of sandals. About his neck hung a leather scrip with a handful of dates.

On the edge of the desert he met a walking delegate who was on his way to Mecca to order a strike among the pilgrims—a non-union hadji having been permitted to kiss the holy Kaaba.

"Hello, old duffer!" said the delegate. "Where do you buy your garments? you look like a locked-out tramp."

"I am dressed," answered the dervish, "as befits my vocation and in all respects am equipped for any emergency. No blight of fortune can cast me down or impede my mission."

"So?" replied the delegate; "suppose I were to confiscate that bag of grub?"

"I have been inured to hunger from my youth up and seldom is the thought of food uppermost in my mind. Besides it is the fast of Ramadam and it is not lawful to eat."

"The stones of the desert are sharp; what if I were to take away your sandals?"

"Behold!" and the deverish uncovered a foot and exhibited a sole as tough and leathery as that of a camel.

"But suppose I was to strip those rags from your back."

"Sun and simoon have scorched my back for seventy years and it matters little whether it be covered or not. And now," continued the dervish, "shut your bread-winner and let me talk. You think your equipment perfect, but you are not rigged for a long-distance race. A little accident by the way will rattle you. See me prove it!" and grasping his staff, he executed a flourish and with one swift, clean, horizontal stroke he hit the delegate's plug hat in the middle, and knocked it a shapeless thing upon the sand. With a look of anguish the delegate picked up the wreck. The top was gone, the sides were caved in and the brim was cut across and hung dangling from the crown.

"There!" said the dervish, "your power is gone from you, for what is a walking delegate without a plug hat? Oh, Bismillah! Oh, Marshallah! Oh, rats! Yah!" and, brandishing his staff, he drove the delegate forth. And as the burning Syrian sun rose higher in the sky the vanishing forms passed over the line of the horizon, the delegate ahead, with the dervish a good second about two jumps behind.

ELECTRIC PAINS.

What One Man Experienced as the Result of a Lightning Stroke.

A Dallas News reporter met a man who was struck by lightning five years ago and has never quite recovered.

"When I was first struck," he said, "I was dead for two or three days. Then consciousness returned, and with a sense of most acute pain. My muscles were all contracted, and whenever I was at rest for ten minutes at a time the torture was positively unbearable. For days and nights I walked the floor, and when I wanted to sleep I got two of my friends to walk with me and walked in my sleep. Seven doctors worked on me constantly for weeks, and they did not alleviate the pain in the least. So I let them all go and started traveling and kept up a perpetual motion. One thing I noticed. For two days before a rain or electrical storm there would be a rigid contraction of the nerves and my sufferings were intensified. Many a time I have predicted a storm when the skies were clear, and people laughed at me for a while, but to this day I have never missed it. After the storm passes there is a relaxation to a certain extent. After the doctors confessed they could do nothing for me I was in despair for a while. Then I tried hot springs and got more relief than from anything else. I drink water almost boiling now, and it comforts me. I am getting a little more like myself now, but still suffer horribly at times. The least exposure brings on an attack, and some of those spells my whole nervous system is, for the time being, perfectly shattered."

He was asked his recollection of the shock.

"I was standing by my house one cloudy day. Suddenly I saw a flash of light, which looked as if all the heavens were being opened and the stars running together. I could feel pain as if men were sticking needles into a thousand different portions of my body at once, and then I knew nothing until I opened my eyes and heard a doctor say: 'He's alive, anyhow, but he will suffer any pain, and far more terrible to my notion."

The gentleman still keeps his body heavily protected from head to foot, wearing twice the clothes sufficient for ordinary mortals, and in damp weather he piles on still more.

HAIR SEVEN FEET LONG.

It Is Cropped Close to the Owner's Head to Relieve Her Suffering.

A story which demonstrates that long hair, though beautiful, has its drawbacks comes from De Soto, Mo. Mrs. C. T. Aubuchon, the wife of a well-known merchant of that city, up to a few days ago had, it is said the longest hair in the world. Mrs. Aubuchon is five feet two inches in height, while her hair measured seven feet three inches.

She was always rather weak, and frequently confined to her bed with dreadful headaches, sometimes two and three days in a week. She was treated by several prominent physicians, who came to the conclusion that all her strength was going into her hair. By their advice she was finally induced to have it cut off, and with the exception of a small portion, was cut off close to the scalp. The remaining portion was cut off at the waist.

The change has not yet had a decided effect on Mrs. Aubuchon's health, but it has served to relieve her of a great burden, which is somewhat of a benefit, as she is very weak.

Mr. Aubuchon was at first very much opposed to having his wife's hair cut, and has taken it rather hard. His wife declares that unless she is greatly benefited she will allow her hair to grow again to please her husband. It would not take a great length of time to obtain its former length, as her hair was shingled in 1882.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Use Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder.

IF YOU WISH TO AVOID THE TWIN DRUGS, ALUM AND AMMONIA

Dr. H. Endemann, for twelve years chemist of the New York Board of Health, in his paper read before the American Chemical Society at Washington, in October, 1891, states that an ammonia baking powder acts on the gluten of the flour, altering its chemical properties, and cites numerous high authorities to prove its injurious effect on the stomach and kidneys.

Liebig the great chemist says: "The use of alum in bread is very injurious, and it is very apt to disorder the stomach and occasion acidity and dyspepsia."

The following powders are known to contain either ammonia or alum or both: Royal, Chicago Yeast, Calumet, Bon Bon, Taylor's One Spoon, Unrivaled, Forest City, Snow Ball, Pearl.

BEFORE THE JURY

Investigation of Alleged Stealing by Chicago Aldermen Begun.

Sufficient Evidence Is Secured to Make Uneasy Many "City Fathers."

CHICAGO, March 19.—The scenes about the criminal court building to-day were a repetition of the exciting incidents that marked the investigation four years ago that landed in the penitentiary half a dozen of the best known politicians in the city. The inquiry which began to-day opened with a supposed "squealer" as the first witness to disclose the secret money getting methods of his fellow aldermen. The witness was Ald. Stanley Kunz, who, while in his cups, gave utterance to some strikingly queer remarks the other night on the floor of the council chamber, and who, it has been stated, felt that he had not received all he was entitled to when favors were being passed around for franchises worth hundred of thousands.

While Kunz was within the jury room, being put upon the rack, reports were current among the interested groups outside that at least one alderman had fled the city and that a number of others were under detective surveillance. It was stated that President C. K. Billings, of the Gas Trust, would be the next witness after Kunz, and would be followed by City Clerk Van Cleave, the latter of whom is present at all meetings of the aldermen.

States Attorney Longenecker had an earnest conference with Detective John Bonfield, of anarchist fame, before the inquisition began. It was whispered that the prosecution had struck a snag at the outset in the fact that the corporations interested in the alleged fraudulent grants had representatives in the membership of the grand jury. Color was lent to this report by an announcement after Ald. Kunz came out of the jury room that no other witnesses would be examined till to-morrow. Kunz denied having given up any valuable information, but admitted that he was to be recalled later on. State's Attorney Longenecker said:

Kunz can tell a great deal; in fact we have so much incontrovertible evidence that he can do as he pleases about verifying it.

The state's attorney seemed to have no doubt of the indictment of a number of the city fathers forming a and the possibility that much larger fish might be caught in the net. The discovery is said to have been made by the detectives employed by the investigators that the "combine" met in a room in the rear of a saloon owned by a certain alderman for the division of the spoils or the planning of other sandbagging schemes. John Bonfield, who is said to have done most of the detecting in the case, rented a room directly over that used by the "combine" as a clearing house. Through a hole made in the ceiling and a micronepho communicating with the interior of the lower room the ex-chief of detectives saw and heard everything that transpired below him. Shorthand reports of the scenes and conversation were made by the detective's assistant, who sat beside him while taking observation.

In addition to this, it is said that disappointed political ambition has had considerable to do with the expose. Two aldermen—one a Republican and the other a Democrat—were turned down by their respective parties at the recent primaries, and in revenge are divulging the secrets of the gang.

Alderman Roth was defeated for a renomination, and a report was current today that to him largely the inception of the investigation was due. He was said to have received $1,000 in two bills of $500 each in the retiring room of the council chamber or the Sherman house on the night of the passage of the Economic gas ordinance. The story is that he kept the money, voted "yea" and then "wilted." He subsequently, it is said, went to a newspaper office, gave up the money and told of other transactions that had come to his knowledge.

ALDERMEN COME HIGH.

"It costs a good deal of money sometimes to buy the city council," said an attorney who is closely connected with the state's attorney. "The Northern Pacific had all the worst of it in the last three big deals the aldermen have made. The figures or those three sales of city franchises are just these: Northern Pacific, $280,000; economic gas, $150,000; compressed air, $130,000."

When the jury assembles to-morrow Ald. Kunz will be again put on the stand. The next witness will probably be President Billings, of the gas trust. Billings fought the passage of the economic gas ordinance. It is rumored he will give positive testimony to the effect that he was given to understand that he could prevent the passage of the economic gas ordinance by bidding over the men behind it. It is also understood that he will testify that $150,000 was the figure named as necessary to prevent the passage of the Economic Gas ordinance and subserve the interest of the gas trust. He will also tell the names of aldermen who told him of the amounts they had received to vote for the ordinance. City Clerk Vancleave will be required to bring the record books and to trace the ordinances from their inception to the time the mayor affixed his signature. He will also give the official votes on the ordinances. A subpœna has also been issued for "Promoter" Bacon, of the Power Supply and Smoke Abating company.

Baron Guenzburg, the Russian banker who failed the other day, has paid nearly $30,000,000 to depositors. The greatest admiration is expressed for the manner in which the disaster has been met.

Not at All Serious.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 19.—Commissioner Carter said to-day that there was nothing serious affecting South Dakota surveys. The report of the investigation and the selling of contracts grew out of the effort on the part of the general land office to systematize the work so that one contractor would not be appointed to examine the work of another contractor, and in turn have his work examined by the second man, and so secure approvals of surveys where there might be a possibility of fraud. This investigation extends to other states as well as South Dakota.

CONGRESS

Proceedings of the House and Senate.

FRIDAY, MARCH 11.

SENATE.

Senator Davis introduced a bill authorizing the Manitoba Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Red river between Norman county, Minnesota and Traill county, North Dakota.

Senator Hansbrough introduced a bill granting the state of north Dakota a site for a reform school.

Senator Dolph, from the committee on commerce, reported in an amended form the bill introduced by Senator Brice, providing for a number of lighthouses and signals on the great lakes and adjoining waters.

The senate passed the urgency deficiency bill.

The senate adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE.

The tariff discussion was resumed in the house to-day to the exclusion of private business.

Representative Mitchell, of Wisconsin, introduced in the house a joint resolution granting to the state of Wisconsin the privilege of placing in statuary hall in the capitol building at Washington the statue of Pere Marquette.

Representative Rielly, of Pennsylvania, introduced a joint resolution authorizing the secretary of the interior to prepare for exhibition in the women's building at the World's Fair, any articles, models or drawings now in his custody or deposited in the patent office, prepared or invented by women.

A bill to establish postal telegraph, prepared by Postmaster General Wanamaker, is introduced in the house.

SATURDAY, MARCH 12.

SENATE.

Not in session.

HOUSE.

The house spent the afternoon in eulogies on the late John R. Gamble of South Dakota. Addresses were delivered by several Northwestern congressmen.

MONDAY, MARCH 14.

SENATE.

The committee on quadro-centennial reported their resolutions for which they asked immediate consideration one of them was to extend an invitation to the royal family of Spain and the decendants of Columbus to attend the World's Fair as the guests of the United States. The resolutions went over till tomorrow.

The senate went into executive session to consider Mr. Vest's postoffice bill. Mr. Vila's amendment increasing the maximum cost of any building from $35,000 to $75,000 was adopted. The bill was then reported to the senate and passed.

The senate again went into executive session at the request of the committee on foreign relations, after being in session a little over an hour the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

The speaker laid before the house a message from the president transmitting a communication from the secretary of the interior, submitting the agreement concluded between the commissioners of the United States and the Cherokee Nation for the cession of the Cherokee outlet, and stated that it would be referred to the committee on Indian affairs.

On motion of Mr. Bowman, of Iowa, a bill was passed to establish a port of delivery at Council Bluffs, Iowa.

TUESDAY, MARCH 15.

SENATE.

Bills were introduced and referred in the senate providing for the leasing for a term of 10 years or less of buildings to be especially constructed for postoffice purposes; to regulate the value of coin as currency, and to prevent discriminating in favor of gold and silver as legal tender.

The senate adopted the conference report on the urgency deficiency bill. The military academy bill was passed with senate amendments.

Senator Kyle today introduced a bill appropriating $300,000 for the construction of buildings for a military post at Forest City, S. D. It is provided that citizens shall convey to the government a site of 1,000 acres.

The senate in executive session to-day listened for two hours to arguments by Messrs. Voorhees and Turpie in opposition to the confirmation of Judge and to Mr. Hoar's defence of the nominee.

HOUSE.

The house resumed the discussion of the free wool bill. Mr. Combe of New York, concluded his speech in favor of the bill.

Capt. Harris today presented a large batch of petitions from Minnesota opposing the repeal of the duty on barley. The farmers are greatly exercised over the attempt to doctor the barley tariff. He stated to your correspondent today that he would work and vote to maintain the duty on this cereal.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 16.

SENATE.

The senate discussed the confirmation of Judge Woods in executive session without coming to a vote.

Judson C. Clements, of Georgia, was confirmed to be interstate commissioner, vice Bragg, deceased.

Mr. Hale, from the committee on naval affairs, reported a bill for the construction (by contract) of three battleships of from 7,500 to 10,000 tons displacement, two armored coast defense vessels, five gunboats of 800 to 1,200 tons displacement and eight first-class torpedo boats. Referred.

HOUSE.

Mr. Joseph, of Mexico, from the committee on territories, reported a bill in the house for the admission of New Mexico as a state. Mr. Smith, of Arizona, from the same committee reported a bill for the admission of Arizona. Calendar.

The resolution for the impeachment of Judge McCormick, of Texas, was laid on the table in the house.

In the committee of the whole, Mr. Blount, of Georgia, in the chair, the house resumed consideration of the free wool bill, but did not come to any agreement.

THURSDAY, MARCH 17.

SENATE.

Senator Platt introduced a joint resolution for the appointment of a commissioner from the District of Columbia to act with commissioners appointed by the several states to secure uniformity by the laws of marriage and divorce, insolvency, etc. This course was recommended by the American Bar Association.

Mr. Peffer introduced a bill to establish an electrical station for the purpose of investigating and determining whether electricity can be profitably used and applied as a motive power in the propulsion of farm machinery. Referred to the committee on agriculture.

Mr. Hawley, from the military affairs committee, presented a bill to amend the statute relative to certificates of merit to enlisted men of the army (the amendment being to change the word "privates" to "enlisted men"), and it was passed.

A large number of appointments were confirmed, among them being that of Walter H. Sanborn of Minnesota as judge of the eighth circuit.

HOUSE.

The entire time of the house was occupied in a discussion of the tariff.

Her First Query.

"My dear," said Mr. Cubbage to his wife, who was dangerously ill, "Mrs Kickshaw is down stairs and wants to see you."

"What has she got on?" asked the dying woman, feebly.—Epoch.

Found After Many Months.

ANACONDA, MONT., Special Telegram.—In the first snow storm of the year, in November, John Akers, well known in mining circles as a prospector, was lost. No trace of him could be found by searching parties, and large rewards were offered by secret societies for the discovery of his body, foul play being suspected. Yesterday, in Olson gulch, twelve miles from town, miners at the camp were surprised by the singular actions of a dog, and its continous barking. The animal was followed, and led the men a short distance from the camp, where lay Akers' body buried in snow, where it is supposed he strayed in the blinding blizzard, and succumbed to the cold.

THE SHODDY INDUSTRY.

ITS PHENOMENAL GROWTH UNDER HIGH TARIFFS.

Example Better than Argument in the Matter of Tariff Taxes—American vs. Foreign Labor—Trust Economies—Sample Prices Under McKinleyism.

Shoddy and the Census.

Under the high tariffs on wool and woolen goods since 1860 the growth of the shoddy industry has been phenomenal. Shoddy is a comprehensive term, and in common parlance includes all the various wool substitutes used in manufacturing, except cotton, cows' hair, etc. There are two classes of shoddies: The first is made from the waste pieces of woolen goods left over in the manufacture of ready-made clothing, and known in the trade as new shoddy; and the second from old woolen rags collected from the ash barrels and refuse heaps of our large cities, called old shoddy; but, like other industries, the shoddy industry has grown to such an extent that there have been added new terms to describe the products which formerly went under the general name of "shoddy." Chief among these are "extracts," which are made from mixed cotton and woolen goods by the application of an acid which eats out the cotton, leaving the woolen fibers intact, though much impaired. At the same time extracts are subdivided into two classes: First, those made from waste pieces of cloth not in use, just as new shoddies are produced; and second from old mixed rags picked up from all possible places.

So great have been the improvements in machinery used for working up shoddies and extracts that they are now used in all classes of woolen goods, and are so disguised as to be detected with great difficulty.

The growth of the shoddy industry cannot be better shown than by a comparison of the census figures since 1860. The following table shows the number of establishments, the capital invested, the number of workmen employed, and the value of the products during each census year:

Census.	Establishments, No.	Capital.	Workmen, No.	Product, value.
1860	30	$143,500	291	$402,500
1870	56	815,950	632	1,763,593
1880	73	1,165,100	1,281	4,980,615
1890	91			9,208,011

From a product of $402,590 in 1860 this industry has increased until, according to the census of 1890, the product is $9,208,011, or an increase of 2,187 per cent.

Though the growth of the woolen industry as a whole, including the shoddy industry, has been considerable since 1860 it has not been in proportion to the growth of the shoddy industry. In 1860 the value of the woolen goods produced in the United States was $65,596,364; in 1890, according to the last census, the value of the woolen goods was $338,231,109, showing an increase since 1860 of only 415 per cent.

Nothing will show better the great growth of the shoddy industry and its present extent than the figures from the census of 1890. In the following table is shown for each of the large woolen products the amount of wool used, and the amount of shoddies, extracts, cotton, hair, and other substitutes for wool:

Woolen goods	185,347,914	93,640,386	34.7
Worsted goods	97,701,471	7,574,264	7.2
Felt goods	6,729,083	4,301,344	38.4
Wool hats	4,537,953	453,931	9.1
Carpets	56,587,816	5,054,011	8.2
Knit goods	21,669,593	37,206,934	63.2
Total	372,173,713	154,130,801	29.0

The consumption of wool in 1890 increased 25.8 per cent. over the consumption in 1880, while the consumption of shoddy in 1890 increased 44.7 per cent. over the consumption in 1880.

No wonder that when President Cleveland advocated in his famous message the putting of wool on the free list so as to build up the industry the shoddy men got out a protest declaring that by free wool "our business would be ruined and we and those dependent upon us would suffer. There is only one way to avoid this loss to ourselves and that is by the defeat of the candidate of the Free Trade party, Grover Cleveland. We have determined in the coming election to support the candidates of the Protection party, Harrison and Morton. Their election we consider to be indispensable to the maintenance of our business."

Free wool would be the death of shoddy.

American vs. Foreign Labor.

Our labor the cheapest labor in the world.—J. B. Sargent's opinion.

The following extract from the speech of J. B. Sargent, one of the largest manufacturers of hardware in the United States, at the hardware dinner, shows that our labor is cheaper than that of Europe. Mr. Sargent has traveled around the world several times and knows what he is talking about. The applause which greeted every statement he made shows that the hardware manufacturers agree with his conclusions: "In agricultural tools and implements, at least, we take half the trade of the foreign counties outside of Europe, and in all kinds of edge tools we take half the trade of South America and of Asia. But, gentlemen, my time is more than gone, and I will bring my remarks to a close by saying that with the manufactures of this country in their present condition, with our machinery, with our unrivalled help, with our skilled mechanics, and with you, gentlemen of the hardware and mercantile branches, there is no reason why we should not only hold our own in our own country, but take a large part of the trade of all the world.

The American manufacturer, with the American mechanic, has never seemed to realize his own strength, or the strength of his trade. We have, as I have always said, the most willing, the most energetic, and the most ambitious workers, workmen and mechanics, anywhere to be found. Although our wages in this country—the earnings of men per day—are very much more than those of any other country, and especially of the countries on the continent, who are our competitors, and although they earn so much more per day, still their labor to the manufacturer is cheaper than that of laborers in other countries. In other words, the labor cost of almost any article of American hardware manufacture is less than the labor cost of the same article in any other country. The fear which so many of us have had of the pauper labor of England is a matter unworthy of consideration. The pauper labor of England in the manufacture of hardware, as compared with our labor, may be compared with the cheap farm labor of India, where that class of labor is paid 10 cents per day, as compared with our Western farm labor in the raising of wheat. With land as plenty and as cheap, with millions of acres which are not used in India, but that are roamed over by wild beasts, with land in plenty and with labor at 10 cents per day (cheap labor in the usual acceptance of the term), still in this country we can produce wheat more cheaply than they can in India, and yet we pay $1 per day for the labor. In other words, the 10 cents per day labor in India, under all the conditions that they have there, is not so cheap in the product obtained as is the $1 per day labor of our Western farmers, and so if we will only take courage and go out before the world with our industries, with our machinery, with our intelligence, and with our mercantile ability we can conquer the world in industrial pursuits.

When I look upon this intelligent, this energetic, this ambitious company, it seems strange that any one should think that the industry and business ability of any other nation on the globe can compete with us in a free field and in a fair fight.

I have only to add that I know that you, gentlemen, of the hardware trade, you manufacturers and merchants, will carefully consider the question that must come before you—of the greater freedom of trade; the question of placing ourselves with our raw materials on an equal footing with the manufacturers of England. Whenever we do that we can certainly take care of ourselves in any quarter of the globe.

Trust Economics.

We have been trying to find in the current reports of the trade journals some evidence as to the changes made in prices when the manufacturers in a large industry lose the advantages derived from those "economies" which a trust or similar combination enables them to practice. Everybody has heard of these "economies." Everybody has been told by the trust makers that they reduce the cost of production and the selling price of the products. Many have been surprised when they saw prices considerably increased as soon as combined manufacturers were able to enjoy the "economies." It appears also that prices suffer a serious decline when manufacturers who have been in combination are no longer assisted by the "economies." The facts are curiously at variance with the trust makers' doctrine.

The combination of the manufacturers of steel beams was dissolved some weeks ago. While these manufacturers enjoyed the saving caused by the "economies" the price of steel beams was 3 1-10 cents per pound at the mill, or $69.44 per long ton. A few days ago 2,000 tons were sold in Chicago at the price of 2¼ cents, delivered. Other sales at even lower prices have been reported, as follows:

"It is stated that one large contract, 5,000 tons, for season's delivery, has been placed with a leading architectural works in this city [New York] at 2 cents, Pittsburg mill."—The Iron Age, Feb. 11, 1892.

"In the beam trade the only item of news of the week is the report that contracts for 5,000 tons have been placed in Boston at 2 1-10 cents, delivered."—The Iron Age, March 3, 1892.

The price of barbed wire, as fixed by the barbed wire trust, was, at Pittsburg, on Jan. 28, just before the dissolution of this combination, $2.55 for painted and $3.05 for galvanized. On March 3, about one month after the dissolution of the trust, the prices at the same place were $2.25 and $2.65, and corresponding reductions had been made at other points.

The changes caused by the loss of the trust "economies" may be set forth as follows:

	With "economies."	Without "economies."	Decline, per cent.
Steel beams	$69.44	$44.80	35
Barbed wire, painted	2.55	2.25	11
Barbed wire, galvanized	3.05	2.65	13

These figures will tax the ingenuity of the professional advocates of trustism. Immediately after the great advantages due to the practice of combination "economies" were withdrawn, the price of steel beams did not rise. It fell 35 per cent. And in the case of barbed wire there was a decline of 13 per cent. The trust's professors should overhaul and revise their chief doctrine.—New York Times.

An Example of Tariff Taxes.

As an example is always better than an argument, I will present to the reader an actual transaction under the McKinley bill, which has been furnished me through the kindness of a friend in New York.

He says, under date of Feb. 17: "I received a shipment this week from Manchester containing a number of cases of dress goods, mostly all wool, and some woolen and worsted cloths, also some cotton warp dress goods. Entered value, $2,631; packing is accountable for $19 of this, the value of the cloth being $2,612. I paid $2,621.05 duty. Of course the consumers, the public at large, will eventually pay this."

Let us study this concrete example for a moment.

We see that cloth and dress goods of the value of $2,612 cost the importer $5,233.05, which sum he must get back from the consumers of the goods, with his profits upon the transaction.

2. The goods imported are among the necessaries of our country and climate, and not the mere luxuries of those who are rich and extravagant.

3. The farmer or the laborer buys these goods for his wife and children, and believes, when he puts down on the store counter a dollar of his earnings, that he is getting a dollar's worth of goods, when, in fact, he is paying more than half of the money for the tax and the profits of the tax of several middlemen that have been secretly wrapped up in the goods.

4. These goods are also largely made in this country. They would not be imported unless they could be sold here for cost and tax, and a fair profit on both. Except for the tax, we could buy them for the cost and a fair profit on it. The tariff tax which the Government mixes with them before it allows them to pass into the clothing of the people thus more than doubles their cost, and at the same time increases by a like amount the price which similar homemade goods can be sold to the people. This last is the purpose for which it is levied.

5. The labor cost of producing these goods in this country is not more than 20 per cent. greater than the labor cost in Manchester, and but for a tariff on wool that actually depresses the value of our native wool but increases the cost of the foreign wools needed for mingling with our native grades to make these goods, the cost of material would be the same in both countries.

5. Let the farmer and laborer now sit down and figure to his satisfaction if he can why a law of Congress should be made to compel him to give two bushels of wheat or two days of his labor for the same quantity of necessary goods that he could but for such a loss procure with less than one bushel of his wheat, or less than one day of his labor.—Congressman W. L. Wilson, in St. Louis Republic.

Cleveland on the Campaign's Issues.

Ex-President Cleveland expressed his views about national politics.

"All evidence," said the ex-President, "of what the people want and what they expect of the party would seem clearly to indicate that the tariff reform must be the issue if we are to go into a winning fight. My idea has been that a general bill would be the best method, but I am willing to defer to those who are on the ground and have the battle in Congress to fight. I hope the Springer free-wool bill will pass, and am also in favor of any other measures which will lighten the burden of taxation now resting on the people. In fact I favor any measure in the direction of genuine tariff reform. As to the prospects of the Democratic party's ultimate success, I have but one opinion. If the party is true to itself, true to its principles and fulfills its pledges to the people, it cannot fail."

HINTS FOR THE FARMER.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS OF VALUE TO FARMERS.

Clover-Meadows and Pastures—How to Raise Horse-Radish—Feed a Little Corn—Sowing Oats Early—About Rennet—Notes.

How to Raise Horse-Radish.

Horse-radish can be planted either in fall or spring, it being an entirely hardy plant. The practice, however, is to plant in the spring, and among those who make the most of their land, and crop every foot as much as it will carry, it is placed on the ground, for example, as a second crop. The method is somewhat as follows: In the spring, where land is no object—or, as we said before, the fall will do—each set should be inserted in the ground with a dibble, so as to be just below the surface, the hole being made perpendicular, and the set made fast by a back-thrust of the dibble.

If no other crop is to be taken off, they should be set sixteen inches apart each way in a hole ten or more inches deep. Ordinary cultivation during the summer will by fall give a solid root—sometimes a half-pound weight. As a second crop they are lined between early cabbage, or almost any other vegetable.

The crop of cabbage for first use is generally about two feet apart. Line out a row every foot and plant the cabbage every alternate row. When this is completed place horse-radish sets between. The early crop will have become nearly ready for the market before the horse-radish makes much of a stir, and by the time the cabbage or other crop comes off, and the whole land is given up to horse-radish the latter is ready to take hold, and will bring nearly as good returns as if given the entire land to perfect in.

Of course, as all well know, this double cropping can only be done on good, well-manured soil. In many cases where ordinary field cultivation is depended upon, one crop will probably be the better. This business of raising horse-radish in large quantities is more remunerative to those who have farms near some large village or city, as enormous quantities are sold in the fall to men who make a business of putting up in bottles this pleasant condiment, and shipping it to all parts of the world. It is now put up in vinegar, but it will not, however, keep very long. Hence it can not be treated as ordinary canned goods.

Sowing Oats Early.

Of all crops grown on the farm, earliness of sowing the seed is of more importance with oats, says an exchange, than almost any other. Of course there is no advantage in sowing in the wind but as far as possible arrangements should be made so that as soon as the soil can be be worked into a good tilth in the spring the seeding should be done. They will stand considerable frost with much less injury than they will the hot summer sun, and in very many cases a fair average crop will be secured from the early seeding when late seeding would prove almost a failure.

One of our best farmers was talking of this a day or two ago and he said that he had never failed to grow a good crop of oats and he was satisfied that the reason was largely due to the fact that he had made arrangements ahead so as to get the work done early and having the soil in a good tilth when the seeding was done. His plan is to plow the ground, if necessary, in the fall, run out the furrows so as to secure good drainage, get the seed ready and everything in good shape so as to push the work as rapidly as possible. As soon as the soil is sufficiently dry to work well it is gone over with a disk harrow, followed with a spring tooth cultivator with a broadcast seeder attachment that sows the oats and works them into the soil. This in turn is followed by a good smoothing harrow that not only fines the soil but leaves the surface in good tilth. Having plenty of teams the work is all done at once, and from eight to ten acres a day is put in this way. The seeding being done early, the plants soon make a sufficient growth to fully shade the soil, and after the weather gets hot and often dry the plants are much less affected than when sown later.

In localities subject to drouth, giving the plants a good opportunity to get well established before hot weather sets in is an important item, and oats is no exception. In order to make oats a profitable crop it is very necessary to secure a good growth and yield and every advantage should be taken to secure this, and early seeding with the soil in a good tilth is one of the importat items in this.

Feed a Little Corn.

The most profitable disposition that the farmer can now make of a portion of the corn cribbed up on the place is to feed it to the young cattle. The critical period in their existence is from now until they go on to grass in May. Young cattle that are wintered without a grain ration are usually illy prepared for the change from hay to grass. Corn stalks and hay, under favorable conditions, may answer for matured animals, but for the young things it is not sufficient to hold them up in strength and vigor.

The changeable weather of early spring makes it imperative that the stock not only receive the strengthening influence of the grain feed, but the protection afforded by good shedding, if satisfactory results are to be had. There is no economy in hoarding up corn in view of good spring market, when it is done at the sacrifice of flesh and growth on the steers and heifers. On the farm where stock is raised they are just as much a product of the farm as the crop of corn. To make farming pay the farmer can not afford to manage his farm operations in a way that will permit of loss in any department.

The grain and stock business on the farm are so closely related, that one depends on the other for its most advantageous revenue growth. The process of starving off during the winter season a portion of the flesh and growth produced during the growing season can not be practiced by the successful farmer. The advantage of bringing the young stock through the feeding season in a strong and vigorous condition can not be over-estimated. Feed some corn to the young stock.—N. Y. Herald.

About Rennet.

A rennet is at its best when a healthy calf is between three and five days old, and has a stomach full of milk. Salting and stretching over a bow is better than to fill full of salt. None but the best and cleanest salt should ever touch it. If stretched over a stick or filled with salt, hang it in a pure, dry air, so that the skins do not touch each other, as they will mould if they do. Many believe the older they are, if kept dry and white, the stronger they are; but we don't know about that, but used them when dried to a crisp condition.

When ready to extract the rennet element from them, soak them in water that has been boiled and cooled, with salt enough in it to keep the liquor from tainting, as it is an animal substance and will taint nearly as quickly as fresh meat. Lukewarm water will hasten the process, but in no case use water up to one hundred and twenty, for that temperature ruins the rennet and makes the coagulating element inert and worthless.

Let the skins soak a week or more, than handle and squeeze, getting as strong liquor as possible from them; then set them again in more fresh water, and get liquor of less strength, always bearing in mind to avoid weak solutions as much as possible. Then mix the first and second tinctures, so that all will be of one strength. To purify the liquor, filter it through layers of straw, clean gravel and charcoal, after having strained out all animal tissues by passing through cloth.

Be sure and have it salt enough to keep well; then put in jugs, or well-covered jars, and set in cool cellar till wanted. It is well to make enough early in the spring, when the calf crop is plenteous, to last the season. As the whole has the same strength, the cheeze-maker can soon learn how much of it to use per one thousand pounds of milk.

Clover—Meadows and Pastures.

Seeding to clover is now advisable in most sections. The old method of sowing clover on snow is still practiced by good farmers, though it may be sown this month upon the bare ground. It generally succeeds well when sown with spring wheat, rye or barley. When clover is sown alone, for seed, about 10 pounds per acre are used; if for hay or pasture, 16 pounds. If sown alone it will generally produce a cutting late in the season, and when sown with wheat will give valuable pasture after the grain is harvested. The large kind of clover is best for sowing with timothy for a permanent meadow, as both mature at the same time; use four pounds of clover seed and from four to six quarts of timothy.

Meadows and pastures should be protected against injury from animals feeding and trampling upon them at this season, and until the ground becomes settled. Farmers who turn out their catte very early are wont to "miss it," as they are greater losers than gainers. It is beneficial to roll the surface of meadows as soon as dry enough to counteract the roots by frost. Stones that the roller does not push down into the soil should be removed or buried, the latter being the easiest method. In all grassgrowing sections the care of meadows and pastures is an important item in farm economy, and one which no farmer should neglect.

Notes:

Horses should be watered frequently.

Cutting back stimulates fruit bearing.

A permanent sod is injurious to fruit trees.

Every bruise on fruit is the beginning of decay.

Use only well-rotted, clean manure on the garden.

Whipping a scared horse is only to intensify the scare.

Water for plants is improved by a few drops of ammonia.

Don't crowd your fruit trees. Give room for air and sunshine.

In setting out an orchard keep together all of the same variety.

Pears are best when picked and ripened in the dark, covered from the air.

A dead limb is a source of disease; it also shows lack of vitality in the tree.

When making a brine in which to immerse meat, a good test is for the brine to float an egg. There is no liability in using too much salt.

Foals should be taught to eat grain while yet with the mares, and then the weaning process will not check their growth if properly supplied with food and drink.

The best and surest way in which a farmer can add to his capital is to increase the productive power of his farm. The better the soil the larger the interest it will pay.

The turkey hen is the best living incubator. She will hatch out and care for twice as many chickens as a hen (chicken) and can be made to bring off two broods by giving the first brood to foster mothers.

It is said that a Minnesota farmer, this year grew 1120 bushels of potatoes upon one acre of ground, a statement "sworn to by trustworthy people in that vicinity."

Fathers and mothers stop grumbling about the miserable lives you lead. Teach the boys and girls to see the beauties surrounding them on every hand, and which are inaccessible to the city dwellers.

For most vineyards in red clay soil a fertilizer composed of finely ground raw bone meal and muriate of potash in about equal parts may be used to good advantage, and from two hundred to two thousand pounds per acre may be applied.

George J. Kellogg says the soil for small fruits, including grapes, should be rich enough to raise 100 bushels of corn per acre. Side hills that wash should be avoided; yet southern slope for grapes and early strawberries is best, and northern slope for late berries.

SPRUCE GUM.

How It Is Gathered in Vermont, and How It Is Disposed Of

In November, when the cold weather has fairly set in, the gathering of spruce gum begins in Vermont. Genuine spruce gum has almost entirely disappeard from the Bennington market as a regular article of merchandise. Formerly the supply was abundant, the price low and the quality first-class.

But the supply now largely depends on chance, the gum-pickers not being so numerous or industrious as in former years, as there is little money in the business. The sawmill, pulpmill and forest fires have wrought such devastation among the big tracts of spruce trees which formerly clothed the Green Mountains, that the occupation of the gumpicker is almost gone. Sometimes a lumberman or a mountaineer in Woodford, a town adjoining Bennington on the east, discovers a tree that will yield several pounds of marketable gum, which is brought to Bennington, where it finds a ready market at good prices.

The price depends entirely upon the quality, ranging all the way from 50 cents to $1.50 a pound. Gum of poor quality is readily distinguished by its opaqueness and by its intimate admixture of minute bits of bark, which became entangled with the gum when it exuded from the tree in a semi-liquid state. Poor gum is further distinguished as being too heavy or too light, bitter and permanently sticky to the teeth in some cases, and hard and crumbly in other specimens. Gum of the finest grade is either translucent or transparent, of a light amber color, filled more or less with the minute bubbles of air, breaking with a short shining fracture and having a sweet, peculiar and balsamic odor and taste. The word "gum," however, is popularly misapplied, as the sustance is a resinous matter.

A considerable portion of the gum offered for sale in Bennington is sent West in small packages by mail. The reason for this is that large numbers of Eastern people who have gone West send back to their old home for small supplies at a time. In this way, too, quarter-pound packages of gum are sent across the continent to California, where the article is valued almost beyond price. The Ohio and Michigan branches of the Olin family, that recently held their annual reunion in Bennington, "cornered" about all the spruce gum stocks in town.—Chicago Tribune.

PLANTS AS VEGETARIANS.

Mr. Francis Darwin's Interesting Experiments With Insectivorous Blooms.

Mr. Francis Darwin, the son of the great naturalist has been investigating the effect on the insectivorous plants of supplying them with, and withholding from them, animal food. He grew two lots of plants under similar conditions. One lot he fed with roast meat, one-fiftieth of a grain being placed on the secreting glands, while from the other all such material was carefully excluded.

The results were most marked in the number and weight of the seeds. The number of seeds produced by the fed plants was as 240 to 100 of the unfed ones, while the total weight of the seeds was as 380 to 100. In other words, the plants which were restricted to a vegetarian diet were invalids compared with the plants furnished with animal food.

Should not that do something toward convincing the vegetarians that their doctrine does not make for health? It is difficult to suppose that if there are even some vegetables which do not flourish on a vegetable diet there can be anything against nature in supplying animals provided with all the instincts and organs which appear to point to a carnivorous diet with a considerable portion of animal food. And we suppose that the heavier seed would imply also the more fertile seed. At least it is so with wheat, where the heavier the grain the more abundant is its fertility.—London Spectator.

Extremes.

I read of some fellow plowing 15 inches deep. Place the standard high and us common fellows can have a shining example. That man can get all the ditching he wants to do, and make money. Another man, Jan. 30, says he paints over 400 sugar pails in seven hours—or one a minute. If that man wants to make a fortune let him come down this way. I am the champion here and it takes me half a day to paint 100.

There are other extremes more injurious than these. One is high salaries paid to officials and the little work done; the traveling at public expense. I think $1200 is enough for a legislative session every two years. It is too much to pay for redistricting or gerrymandering every two years. Gov. McKinley gave those fellows some good advice but they don't heed it. The honest voters of Ohio don't want their legislators to spend their time traveling on free passes and redistricting the state every time it changes political complexion. One session every two years is enough. A representative who will accept a railroad pass is not fit to represent honest people. Sustain the Lampson bill, abolish the pass system. I helped to elect one of the Republican representatives and he must toe the mark or I will help to defeat him if he ever comes up again.—C. H. C.—in Ohio Farmer.

Burglar-Proof Glass.

Under the name of wire-glass a new invention has been brought on the market in Dresden. The process of manufacture consists in furnishing glass in a hot, plastic condition, with a flexible metallic layer, iron wire netting for instance, which, is completely inclosed by the vitreous substance and effectively protected against exterior influences, as rust, etc. The new glass possesses much greater resisting power than the ordinary material, and is, it is claimed, indifferent to the most abrupt changes of temperature, and will even withstand open fire. The glass is specially adapted for skylights, the powerful resisting qualities of the material enabling the usual wire protectors to be dispensed with. As wire-glass can not be cut by the diamond, except under the application of great force, and can not be broken without creating considerable noise, the substance is claimed to be, in a measure, burglarproof.

MEISSONIER'S TERRIER.

A Good Story About the Artist and the Doctor.

Meissonier was very fond of cats and dogs. Among his pets was a rugged little terrier. The terrier got very sick one day, and the great painter was in a sore fix. In Poissy, where he lived, there was no dog doctor, and the animal was getting worse every day. At last the artist accidently met a friend of his, one of the most illustrious physicians of Paris. "Doctor," said he, "do me an immense favor; cure my sick dog."

"Now, my dear sir," said the doctor, "are you really serious?"

"I am," replied Meissonier. "I know that the thing isn't precisely in your line, but you would do me a great kindness, and I will remain forever your debtor if you will consent to try your skill on my little terrier."

The doctor at last consented. He saw the dog, perscribed and cured. When he returned to Paris he received a polite note from Meissonier, asking him to name the amount of his honorarium "for medical services rendered to the dog." The doctor laughed and did not reply to the note. But soon another note came with the same request and a statement that the author made it a rule not to owe anything to anybody. The doctor replied to this with the single word, "Nothing." But Meissonier would not be denied. He sent a messenger with another note.

"In the dog's name," exclaimed the mighty medicine man, "tell Meissonier that I have just put up a new iron gate at the entrance to my garden. Let him paint that and then we'll be quits."

And there the correspondence closed.—New York Sun.

MID-OCEAN DUEL.

Possible Tragedy on Board the Steamer Majestic, Bound for New York.

Two Society Gentlemen and Mortal Enemies Sail on the Same Ship.

LONDON, March 19.—The White Star steamer Majestic, which is now endeavoring to break the record between Queenstown and Sandy Hook, may arrive in New York with a tragedy on board.

Two of its passengers are Hallett Alsop Barrowe, son of Samuel Barrowe, vice president of the Equitable Life Insurance company, and James Coleman Drayton, who married a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Astor. Drayton sailed on the Majestic from Liverpool yesterday. Barrowe, learning this fact after the steamer had left the Mersey, took the Irish mail at 8 o'clock last night and overtook it at Queenstown to-day. He is accompanied by Harry Vane Millbank, whose reputation as a duelist is known throughout Europe.

For two months the American colonies of London and Paris have heard vague rumors of a prospective duel between Barrowe and Drayton growing out of suspicions entertained by Drayton regarding Barrowe's friendship with Mrs. Drayton, which Barrowe has always declared to be entirely platonic. Friends of Barrowe say that Drayton recently made charges against his wife to her parents, and that they agreed to pay him $5,000 a year and $15,000 a year for their children, who should remain under her care, but that if she continued the acquaintance of Barrowe, the children and their $15,000 should come under the chaage of Drayton.

IN A ROOM TOGETHER.

The latter part of last year Drayton, his wife and children came to Europe, and he took a house at Wimbledon, spending most of his time, however, in London, where he made the St. James club, in Piccadilly, his headquarters. Barrowe arrived in January and took up his abode at the Hotel Victoria. Soon after his arrival Drayton found Barrowe and Mrs. Drayton together at the Midland Grand hotel. According to Barrowe's friends Drayton came upon them, accompanied by two detective, and said: "Ah! caught again; when are you two going to bolt?" and left the room.

It was not long afterward that Drayton endeavored to bring about a duel. Barrowe was ready enough, but his seconds, Harry Vane Millbank and Edward Fox, refused to allow him to fight on the ground that Drayton's conduct in accepting money and the fact that he had been suspicious of his wife five years before he had challenged Barrowe forfeited his right to ask for the satisfaction of a gentleman. In this decision the seconds were upheld by no less authorities than Aurelian Scholl and the Duc de Morny, two of the most celebrated duelists in France. Nevertheless Drayton has not hesitated among his friends to attribute Barrowe's conduct to cowardice.

BOTH ON THE SAME BOAT.

Barrowe telegraphed to friends in America some time ago that he would sail yesterday on the Majestic. A week ago he postponed his departure for a week, and only learned yesterday, after the steamer had sailed, that Drayton was on board. Fearing that the circumstance that he had announced his departure by the Majestic and had not sailed on it, while Drayton had might lent color to Drayton's charge that Barrowe was afraid of him and he started for Queenstown at an hour's notice. This is the reason why there may be a tragedy on board, though Millbank will do all he can to prevent it.

On Feb. 1 Drayton wrote to Barrowe, asking him to come to Paris to settle a little matter. Barrowe began to make his arrangements to visit Paris and invited a friend, Mr. Edward Fox, a gentleman well known in the history of American journalism, through his connection with the Modoc war and Sioux campaigns in the Western country, to accompany him. They left in the club train the afternoon of Thursday, Feb. 11, but before they started Mr. Borrowe received another letter from Drayton, asking him at the Hotel Chatham Feb. 11. Barrowe on arriving in Paris proceeded in search of Mr. Harry Vane Millbank and discovered that gentleman at his hotel in the Avenue Montague. On telling the nature of the business on hand Mr. Millbank immediately placed himself at Mr. Barrowe's disposal, and agreed to call at the Hotel Chatham at the appointed time. At 5:30 that afternoon Messrs. Millbank and Fox met two Frenchmen who introduced themselves as Mr. Ferdinand Bolsacy and Mr. Francis Cherbouquet, the seconds of Mr. Drayton. These gentlemen knew very little of the supposed cause of the trouble between Mr. Barrowe and Mr. Drayton, and acknowledged that they had made the acquaintance of the latter at the Salle d'Armes. After some aimless discussion Messrs. Millbank and Fox suggested that they return to their principal for further particulars and they meet again Saturday, Feb. 12, at the same hour. This was agreed to, and the seconds met again on the following afternoon, but the same difficulty intervened, and as Messrs. Millbank and Fox declined to permit their principal to meet Mr. Drayton the seconds of the latter suggested that the matter be referred to a jury of honor, a compromise that was prompdy accepted by the seconds of Mr. Barrowe.

TO MEET HIS SECONDS

Drayton was not heard from for two days, when he sent a letter to Barrowe's seconds denouncing Barrowe as a coward and a scoundrel, and demanding satisfaction on the field of honor.

DECIDED AGAINST DRAYTON.

After reading the communication Messrs. Millbank and Fox decided to close all further correspondence, but first took the advice of two French gentlemen of eminent authority on such subjects—M. Aurelien Scholl and Duc de Morny—explaining the situation and stating that the injured party had accepted and enjoyed annual monetary consideration.

Hits Noble a Whack.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 19.—A bill came up in the senate to-day to prevent the sale of liquor upon Indian reservations and Senator Pettigrew requested that it be laid over until to-morrow, as he wanted to offer an amendment. He made a severe thrust at Secretary Noble by stating that his amendment proposes that special agents of the interior department should not be allowed to take liquors on reservations and get drunk, and if they did and the secretary's attention was called to it, he wanted them dismissed. He stated that such things had been going on and the present secretary did not deem it worth his notice.

Entire Family Poisoned.

NASHVILLE, Special—Mrs. Richard Melrose, her daughters Minnie, Katie and Mattie and her eldest son, David, became violently sick last night after drinking coffee containing arsenic. Robert Melrose, the younger son, drank but little coffee, and it is a disputed question whether he drank any. He complained of being sick, and drank some salt and water, vomiting freely. This morning Misses Mattie and Katie, aged fifteen and seventeen respectively, died. David and his mother are very ill. Robert is sick, it is thought from drinking a small portion of the coffee to-day. The circumstances surrounding the case seem to point to the guilt of Robert, and he is now under arrest to await the result of the inquest.

THAYER VS. BOYD.

The Fight for Nebraska's Governorship Will Be Renewed.

LINCOLN, Neb., March 19.—Tuesday next Gen. Thayer will move in the supreme court of the state for a reopening of the case of Thayer vs. Boyd. This announcement comes as a surprise to the people of Nebraska, but is thoroughly reliable. When the mandate from the supreme court of the United States was served on the judges of the circuit court last Tuesday, Gen. Thayer was out of the city and was unrepresented by counsel. The ex-governor returned last night and expressed surprise at the issuance of the mandate. He had no knowledge of its presence and thinks the court is in duty bound to reopen the case upon his application. Gen. Thayer says he is impelled to this act by the earnest solicitation of the leading men of the states. Judge Blair of Omaha, ex-supreme justice, and M. R. Brees of this city will probably act as attorneys for the ex-governor. They will base their arguments on the theory that the court at Washington in its decision merely overruled the demurrer of Gov. Thayer to Gov. Boyd's answer. Therefore it is only necessary for a reply to be filed to Gov. Boyd's answer, which averred upon information and belief that Joseph Boyd, father of James E. Boyd, had completed his naturalization in 1854 at a time when James E. Boyd was a miner, and alleging further that James E. Boyd had for many years been a citizen of the United States within the meaning of the law and acts of congress.

Headed by a Harrison Man.

ABERDEEN, S. D., Special Telegram, March 19.—The Republican county convention for the election of thirty-two delegates to the state convention at Chamberlain met here to-day. No instructions or recommendations were passed, but the delegation was headed by Receiver MacLeod, of the United States land office, a strong Harrison man, and is undoubtedly favorable to Harrison. Postmaster Mills, another Harrison appointee, is also a member of the delegation. The resolutions endorsed the national administration and declared that the Republican party is alone committed to the doctrine of protection for labor and the home. A new county central committee was named, with W. C. Allon of Groton, secretary of the state committee, as chairman. There was no contest of any sort.

So the Fat Man Says.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 19.—Edwards of Fargo said to-day that North Dakota would send a double-headed delegation to the Minneapolis convention, and there would also be a split convention when state officers are nominated. He said this is all on account of the appointment of Jordan as postmaster at Fargo. These statements by the fat man give rise to the suspicion that there is a great deal of truth in what has been said about him and his offers to assist the Democracy to turn North Dakota over to that party. If there is a split delegation to the national convention and a divided state ticket, there is little doubt that the Democrats would capture the electoral vote and also the state ticket, and if it is carried to the extent Edwards says it will, into the legislative districts, it is apt to return a Democrat to succeed Casey.

Peck Roasts Hill.

CHICAGO, March 19.—Gov. Peck of Wisconsin in an interview here to-day said:

The people of the country may countenance the scheming of politicians for small offices, but they draw the line on the presidency and they draw the line on Hill. No man can be elected who bustles like a ward politician for the great office of president. I have been through New York State recently, and I tell you the people are not for Hill. The people want Cleveland and will elect him. The Wisconsin delegation will be for Cleveland, although there might be a few delegations favorable to the nomination of a Western candidate.

Quite Different.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, March 19.—The caucus of the house of representatives last night agreed upon a plan for congressional redistricting, and this practically determines a question which has been the cause of much contention during the whole session. Under the new arrangement the Republicans will have sixteen districts and the Democrats five. The Democrats at present have fourteen. Congressmen Outhwaite, Donavan, Haro and Layton are the only Democrats left in safe districts, and are likely to be returned. The bill will be reported to the house next week.

Homeward Bound.

AUGUSTA, Ga., March 19.—Senator Hill spent the morning at Savannah, arriving here this afternoon. He held a reception from 7 to 8, and to night spoke to a large audience. He devoted his speech to political subjects and concluded by thanking his hearers for the compliment paid to his stay. Hon. J. W. Ridgeway, district of Brooklyn, followed in a brief speech. Senator Hill expects to leave the city to-morrow and to arrive at Washington Sunday morning.

Enthusiastic Republicans.

RED WING, Minn., Special, March 19.—An enthusiastic meeting of Republicans from all parts of the county was held here to-day to lay plans for organizing for the campaign. President Goodman and Secretary Stevens, of the state league, and Secretary Bixby, of the state central committee, and Gen. S. P. Jennisen of this city, made addresses. The plans for organizing were thoroughly discussed.

All Harrison Men.

ELK POINT, S. D., Special Telegram, March 19.—The county Republican convention to-day elected the following delegates to the state convention:

Ericson, Ringsrud, Gilmore, Kent, Mosher, Martin, Dahl, Bichmeyer, Sinclair, Anderson, Johnson, Lehue, Lewison, Johnson.

They go uninstructed, but are for Harrison.

Two Democratic Tickets.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—If the Democratic house passes by a substantial majority a free silver bill, and if this action be followed by the insertion of a free silver plank in the Chicago platform, it is not improbable that two Democratic presidential tickets will be in the field this year. Leading anti-silver Democrats of the house are said to be considering the advisability of such a course as the only mode of correctly defining their position on the great questions of the day.

Room for All.

NEW YORK, March 19.—Thomas Lowry was interviewed here and talked mostly about the arrangements being made in Minneapolis for the convention. He says there is no doubt that they will be able to take care of everybody, and that everybody will be given good accommodations. He stated very emphatically that accommodations had been provided for thirty-eight state delegations, and each of these were satisfied.

Bimetallism in England.

LONDON, March 19.—The success of the bimetallic propoganda has so encouraged the bimetallic league committee that the committee has decided to raise the question of an international conference by a debate in parliament. The many adhesions of members of the house of commons seem to justify the movement. Among others, Sir M. W. Ridley, who has a potent, though quiet, influence in the house, has joined the league. Commoners Howell (Radical) and Weston Jarvis (Conservative) have been elected parliamentary secretaries of the league.

Proceedings of the Board of County Commissioners.

At the meeting of the board of County Commissioners on March 3rd, the following business was transacted:

The petition of Hendricks and others relating to a new school district was laid over till next meeting.

School petition of Rodflod granted. That of Lars Anderson set for hearing at next meeting.

Application of N. P. Hanson for abating taxes granted.

Also that of P. G. Falardeau for the same purpose.

The assessment of the Red River Transportation Company reduced to $2,000.

School petition of Wesley Morris and others set for hearing at next meeting.

Steps were taken to quiet title to that part of the Jacobus property on Broad-Way that was formerly deeded to the county.

Application of August Munn for abatement of taxes granted; also that of M. E. Kersch.

Bond of Scandia-American Bank presented and approved; also bonds of Matthews & Co., Fertile.

The assessment on the s ½ s w ¼ of section 9, Tp 150, R 42 was reduced to $260.

Bonds of Wrought Iron Co. presented and approved.

Petition from Ovid Moreau and others for a county road was laid over, also that of the county coroner in diptheria cases and a coroner's inquest, J. S. Denyer for justice fees and Sheriff Grundysen for coal shared the same fate.

The petition of the hail sufferers in the town of Fairfax for abatement of personal property taxes was refused.

The petition of Thora Walseth and Suan Anderson for abatement of personal taxes was rejected, also that of John Gratton.

The applications of Louis Fontaine, Wm. Anglim, Max Ericsson and A. J. & A. McKinnon for abatement of personal taxes 30 per cent, granted.

Bond of Christianson Bros. approved.

The auditor was empowered to issue $35 each month for Mrs. A. J. Streeter as hospital matron and $15 each month to the janitor.

The usual grist of bills were audited and allowed.

Euclid Items.

E. D. Childs was in the city on Saturday.

Vernon Warrington, general agent for the Washington Life Insurance Co., was doing business in town Saturday.

Children's entertainment in the church Tuesday evening.

It is rumored that Frank Strause is about to meet his absent rib once more.

Mr. Frich and Kellogg Johnson, of St. Paul, and Mr. C. F. Bronson, representing Finch & Skinner, also of St. Paul, were in the city doing business last week.

Harry S. Wood who was recently running the red elevator, has resigned, packed his grip and set out for Warren where he will be engaged in keeping a set of books.

H. C. Misner wishes to rent the old Griffith place, Sec. 26-27, Euclid Township.

Mr. Fargo says he is afraid we won't get to seeding until along toward May, although he would like to see an early spring on account of the scarcity of fall plowing.

C. E. Harrington's better half arrived from the East on Wednesday.

H. G. Horn is about to build a barn, which, the boys say, will cover about a quarter section of land and need about 14 carloads of nails to put it together, but Henry says it will only take two carloads of lumber to put it up.

G. Vanderbeck has put up some buildings on the northwest quarter of 22, Euclid township. He intends to make it his home.

A certain young gentleman told me with a wink like a bull's eye lantern, that he believed Mr. George Nelson and Miss Nellie Losey were about to join hands and circle to the left. That's right, George. Marriage is the common lot of man.

A gentleman arrived in this city the other day and stuck up his shingle as a harness maker, and before night he had some fifteen harnesses to repair and oil. This shows what a man with grit can do.

Willie Misner is as happy as a clam. Says he never saw business livlier in Euclid in his life.

The iron shoe shop is rushed these icy days.

Thomas Seeley, the expert telegraph operator, is still enjoying himself as of old.

Henry Tiedt intends to return to his home in Montana where he has a neat little business in partnership with his brother, in the shape of a cattle ranch. Henry has many friends here who will be sorry to see him go.

E. Taylor & Co. intend to put in hardware and dry goods when their store is completed.

Mr. P. Losey established a wood yard here some time ago and sold out his whole stock. He is now waiting for more clubs to arrive.

Dr. Chapin is rustling his high-heeled boots to keep the population in repair.

Henry Stuhr has drowned his sorrow for the loss of his old hat by love of the new one.

Now that I have done with all the news I can think of let me say a word for our little town. We live in one of the progressive cities of the Northwest, the chief business center of Polk County, where the wild rose blossoms in summer and snow balls in winter.

FRED.

MELVIN ITEMS.

The last kick of winter is rather a prolonged one, making vigorous protests against soon shuffling off its mortal coil and spring being ushered in.

Those farmers who held their wheat over, are not getting as much as they expected for it. Some are hauling and storing for the "May market," hoping they may still come out on top of the heap. But the speculators are not satisfied yet, so, until they are, we cannot expect justice.

A case of mistaken identity was that of B. Durdall's ox reported dead last week, which was found alive and well at a neighboring farmer's, while the dead ox E. B. pronounced his belonged to this neighbor.

The Peoples' party committee of the town of Onstad, held a meeting on the 14th of March, and organized a Peoples' party club. Tosten Menson delivered the dedication address, and the club passed a resolution to suppurt the Peoples' party of the United States.

The town officers elected met on Friday, the 18th of March, at the residence of H. H. Aarhus to qualify. Supervisors, John Matheson, chairman; J. P. Bullan and Peter Bakke. Town clerk, W. A. Marin; Treasurer, H. H. Halvorson; Assessor, H. B. Hofterson; Justices, C. H. Holmes and E. L. Stowe. Can they swear well? they did that day and quite freely.

W. S. Landt, our genial wheat buyer, is running the elevator alone now; his wife left for a visit to her relatives in Wisconsin.

The People's party club will meet March 28th, at the north school house in district No. 19. We expect a speaker from Crookston and a rousing big time.

GOSSIP.

MAPLE BAY, March 21, 1892.

The Farmers' Alliance met on the 19th inst. It was agreed to hold a Peoples' party meeting at the residence of W. W. Godfrey, on Tuesday, the 29th inst., and we hope there will be a rousing turnout. Come one, come all. Never mind the sneers and jeers that are pointed at you. Come forth and stand up for your own rights, and like men help to kill the big bear that has cowed you so long, and show that you are the bone and sinew of the best country the sun ever warmed. We bear the burden, then let us run our own affairs and get rid of these tricky ringsters that have lived so long on the fat of your labors while we fed on the refuse and wiped the sweat from our brows. Then I say come forth and enjoy the luxuries of our own labors.

The Rev. Mr. Sorenson, the Lutheran minister, has gone south to preach to some of his people left without a pastor.

Sam Felsing has gone to Spokane Falls to his brother-in-law, Mr. De Camp. Sam's salary is $75 per month. We shall miss him at the Bay very much. We wish him prosperity wherever he goes.

Dexter and Scott Godfrey have just returned from Motley where they have been engaged in cutting wood.

Miss Nellie Hunter has been engaged to teach in district No. 90.

Mr. Wm. Davison has sold his farm in Woodside and moved to the Bay.

D. T. Mitchell saw a wild goose flying over since the storm, but Thompson says the goose was a gander that he had tamed himself.

The ice on Maple Lake is three feet three inches thick.

Maple Bay Items.

Godfrey Alliance met on the 19th inst.

Rev. Sorensen has gone to Renville Co. on business.

Andrew Christianson, our genial chairman of the board of supervisors, has returned from Crookston where he has been courting.

Miss Bertha Moen has returned to Crookston.

Mrs. Wm. Klinger is visiting friends in Crookston this week.

N. S. Stale has rented his farm for two years and gone to Spring Valley, Fillmore Co., where his wife has been for some time under medical treatment.

Wm. Tatro visited Maple Bay last Tuesday. Mr. Tatro is one of the proprietors of the Maple Lake Belle and has been with us two summers. Welcome, Billy. Come often.

Miss Carrie Moen, who has had a week's vacation, returned to her school at Woodside Monday morning.

Rev. Sorenson has a class of thirty-seven pupils preparing for confirmation.

Eli Gustafson lost a valuable colt last week.

S. D. Felsing has gone to Spokane Falls, Wash., where he has obtained a lucrative position.

Mr. Thorval Torgrimson, who left during the winter to attend school at Portland, N. D., and soon thereafter returned sick, is now mending slowly.

BLIZZARD.

Wanted.

A situation as foreman and housekeeper by a man and his wife. Best of references given. Call at JOURNAL office. [45-47]

Mentor Items.

We always find a welcome guest in THE POLK COUNTY JOURNAL.

Miss Ida Berg, who has been attending school in Crookston, has returned home.

The glee club gave an entertainment at Mr. Walker Morris' on Monday evening of last week. Herman H. Kergs carried off the prize given to the best step dancer, and every one seemed to enjoy themselves immensely. On returning home the teams took fright, causing a run which might have terminated seriously.

The entertainment at D. Overholt's on Friday night was not very well attended on account of the inclemency of the weather.

Another Justice of the Peace will need to be appointed in our town, Thor Halderson, who has faithfully fulfilled this office, having moved from our midst.

Messrs Moe & Buhn continue to do a remarkable business here. Their store is always well filled with good varieties which look very inviting. May Moe & Buhn still continue to have good success.

MICK.

Farm to Rent!

A fine farm of 480 acres about three miles from city, from 275 to 300 acres for crop, will rent with teams and machinery if desired. This is a good opportunity for a young man to make a start in farming business, or for a man and wife. Will not rent to a man with large family as owner intends to occupy part of the house. For particulars call at JOURNAL office. [59-52]

Always on hand, anything you want in the line of choice fresh meats, at Charlie Vine's.

Ship your wheat to O. Tharaldson general agent of the Northwestern Farmers' Protective Association, at Duluth, and make from 4 to 7 cents a bushel. For further particulars as to membership, &c., inquire of L. K. Hassel, Grand Forks, N. D. [25-tf]

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

[First publication March 24th, 1892.]
[Last publication May 5th, 1892.]

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Nils S. Nilson and Cecilia S. Nilson, his week, mortgagors, to Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, mortgagee, bearing date the 24th day of December, A. D. 1888, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 9th day of January, A. D. 1889, at 10:45 o'clock a. m., in book 43 of mortgages, on page 455; and

Whereas, such default consists of the failure to pay the following installments of interest, to-wit: $22.75 that became due June 24th, 1889, $22.75 that became due December 24th, 1889, $22.75 that became due June 24th, 1890, and $22.75 that became due December 24th, 1890, $22.75 that became due June 24th, 1891, and $22.75 that became due December 24th, 1891. And whereas the said Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, the holder of said mortgage, has elected to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole principal sum in said mortgage set forth due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained.

And whereas there is actually due and payable at the date hereof upon the premises in said mortgage described upon which there is default the following sum, to-wit: eight hundred twenty-one and 71-100 ($821.71) Dollars, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The south half (s½) of the north-east quarter (ne¼) and the north half (n½) of south-east quarter (se¼) of Section two (2) Township one hundred and forty-seven (147) Range forty (40), containing 160 acres more or less according to the government survey thereof. All of said premises situated and being in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty (50) dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston in said County and State, on the 9th day of May, A. D. 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

Dated March 17th, A. D. 1892.

World's Fair Notes.

Bulgaria has decided to participate in the Exposition. Foreign participation, so far as ascertained up to the present, embraces seventy-two nations and provinces.

Canada has been given 68,471 square feet of space in the various buildings, exclusive of space yet to be granted to the agricultural and live stock departments.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union wants to put up a building, 70x100 feet, in the Exposition grounds, in which to exhibit the entire system of its work and to conduct a cafe for the sale of temperance drinks.

Seven of the World's Fair buildings are now so far advanced that they are fast assuming the appearance of finished structures. The rough carpentry work on them is practically done and the ornamental and finishing work is in progress. These buildings are the Woman's, Horticulture, Transportation, Mines, Administration, Forestry and Fisheries. Five more—the Government Fine Arts, Agriculture, Dairy and Illinois State—are erected to the roof lines. The Electricity, Manufactures and Machinery buildings are being advanced rapidly.

The Exposition authorities are anxious that all the States and Territories which intend to erect buildings at the Exposition, and which have not yet submitted plans for approval, do so at the earliest possible moment. Very soon a time will be specified beyond which plans will not be accepted. May 1st is the date likely to be chosen. The demand for space is so great that delinquent states are liable to lose the sites that have been assigned to them.

Lieut. Baker, of the Marine Section of the Department of Transportation, has secured a promise from the Detroit Dry Dock Company for an exhibit of a perfect model in stucco of the entire ship building plant of the company, both at its Detroit and Wyandotte yards.

Mr. Ossian Guthrie, of Chicago, together with many other scientists, declare that no more striking proofs of the glacial epoch exist in this country than are seen in the Desplaines valley between Chicago and Joliet. For educational reasons Mr. Guthrie advocates the making of an exhibit demonstrating this fact at the World's Fair, with maps surveys and collections of geological specimens, which are abundant, so arranged as to show the lines of glacial progress. This, he estimates, would require about $10,000.

Five acres of space in the Midway Plaisance have been reserved for a nursery exhibit.

A joint bill has been introduced in Congress, carrying an appropriation of $18,000, "To procure, prepare, compile for publication and publish statistics of the moral, intellectual and industrial progress of the colored people of the United States from January 1st, 1863, the date of emancipation proclamation, to January 1st, 1893, as a part of the government exhibit, the same to illustrate the growth of liberty, morality and humanity of the United States.

The Suffolk Horse Society, England, has offered two gold medals, of the value of $50 each, for the best Suffolk horse and mare or filly exhibited at the World's Fair.

The Custer Mining Company, of Idaho, is making a very extensive collection of ores for exhibition at the Fair.

The city of Cincinnati wants to erect a building at the Exposition, to be used both as a club house and receptacle for a municipal exhibit. It is willing to expend $30,000 in the undertaking.

English women are active in preparation for their participation in the Exposition. At a meeting of the woman's committee in London, on March 3d, it was announced that Queen Victoria had promised specimens of her own work in spinning and knitting, done when she was a girl; also some of her embroidering, fine drawing and water-color painting. Princess Louise will contribute some clay modeling, Princess Beatrice several paintings, and Princess Christian some embroidery. The committee assigned charge of various branches of woman's exhibits as follows; Irish exhibits, Countess of Aberdeen; Scotch, Lady Reay; Philanthropy, Baroness Burdett-Coutts; Education, Mrs. Fawcett, the writer on political economy; Hospital nursing, Mrs. Fenwick; Woman's art, Mrs. Robert Austin. Several women were selected to prepare papers on various educational and economic subjects.

It is probable that the visitor to the Exposition will have an opportunity of seeing a more extensive and finer exhibition of ancient Greek art than it has heretofore been possible to see outside of Greece. P. Cavreading, Director General of Grecian Antiquities, has written that the Grecian government has accepted the invitation to participate in the Exposition, with the understanding that it will be represented only by memorials of its antiquities. Chas. Walstein, Director of the American School of Classic Studies at Athens, states that the Grecian government has agreed to make and send to the Exposition casts of the principal works of ancient art now in Greece, together with maps, diagrams and photographs. To these will probably be added casts, and perhaps some of the originals of classic Greek art which are now distributed throughout Europe.

Two Buried Cities.

In the first century after Christ, there stood near the beautiful Bay of Naples two cities, Herculaneum and Pompeii, which were noted through all the Roman world for their fashionable luxury. In the year 79, during a tremendous eruption of Vesuvius, these cities disappeared from view as completely as Sodom and Gomorrah. It was commonly reported that both cities were overwhelmed with a flood of molten lava, and the occurrence has been vividly portrayed by Bulwer in "The Last Days of Pompeii." March 24, 1737, the ruins of Herculaneum were discovered, and it was then found that this city had been destroyed by an immense flood of water which carried along enormous quantities of mud, tufa and ashes. This explains, in some degree, why so few people escaped from Herculaneum, while thousands had time to flee from Pompeii, which was buried first under a gradual shower of ashes. Mistakes and errors in regard to things out of sight are excusable, but the people of this day and section are too well informed about the railroads to commit the error of taking any other line than The Burlington when going on a journey. For rates and tickets to any point via this line, apply to your home ticket agent, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

NEWSPAPER LAW.

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office, whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for the payment.
2. If any person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.
3. In suits for subscriptions, the suit may be instituted where the paper is published.
4. The Courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the post office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, while unpaid for, is prima facie evidence of intention to defraud.

April Fool Day—to-morrow.

Commissioner C. P. DeMers was in the city last week.

The oldest inhabitants have decided that spring has come.

J. W. Benedict was down from Fosston last week visiting friends.

Sam Wallace had a severe attack of tonsilitis last week. Reported better at last accounts.

Wm. Vannett went to Barnesville last week to attend the wedding of a relative there.

The schools closed on Friday of last week for the spring vacation. Will re-open on Monday next.

J. F. Holmes, of Red Lake Falls, was attending the Democratic convention in the city last Thursday.

M. Wilson and Annie Nelson were married last Wednesday, Judge C. O. Christianson officiating.

Mrs. Chris. Muggley, of Pratt, Wis., was in the city last week to attend the funeral of her mother, Mrs. Helen Moeckel.

T. B. McManus has withdrawn his name from the People's Party ticket as a candidate for assessor and Mark Rauenbuchler's name was substituted.

The glass transoms in the Reckitt Block were all nicely lettered last week—where the rooms were occupied. A. C. Schmidt did it with his little brush.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Skinner were visiting friends in the city last Thursday evening, remaining over night. Mr. S. was in attendance on the I. O. O. F. meeting.

We have in our hands to rent a farm with stock and all machinery needed to run it. A good chance for a man and his wife to get a start. Don't want a man with a large family. For particulars call at this office.

Frank T. Haseltine, proprietor of the Crookston Nurseries, writes THE JOURNAL from Madison, Wis., that he has passed a very pleasant winter recuperating and will return about April 1st ready for a big season's business. Save your orders for Frank.

The Blue Jay tea, announced in our list issue to occur on Thursday evening at the residence of A. A. Miller Esq., was well attended and netted the Congregational Church Society $25. The "Blue Jay" part of the affair was a souvenir, the letter J cut from blue card-board. The affair was a pronounced social success.

Wm. Beck was one of those who called on Friday to say set it ahead a year. The one peculiarity with Mr. Beck is a very agreeable one for the printer. He has been a subscriber to THE JOURNAL for many years and never in that time has he missed one week of coming in to renew on the very day the subscription runs out. If every man was only built that way how happy would we be.

News from Mrs. Bucknam in Chicago states that little Clipper will have to undergo a painful surgical operation. One day last winter the child, while playing at school, fell and it would seem fractured her collar bone. Nothing was thought of it at the time but later it gave her so much pain that a doctor was called who said it was nothing serious and would get along all right. When Mrs. B. and the children went to Chicago to visit friends there a doctor was called to examine Clipper who said that the child was suffering with a fractured collar-bone and that as it had already commenced to knit it would have to be broken over again and set, and this will be done at an early day.

As intimated in our last, T. K. Torgeeson on Thursday closed the bargain for renting the Minnesota House and will become a citizen of Crookston. Mr. T. has for a long time been one of the leading citizens of Becker County and we predict that he will become one of Crookston's leading business men. Our friends will find T. K. a straight man to deal with in every particular, and when they require a good hostelry they will find the one that Tom keeps that kind of a hotel in every particular.

The Citizens' Ticket.

On Tuesday evening of last week there gathered at the city hall a delegation of representative citizens who had been sent there to select from such aspirants as might present themselves a ticket composed of our leading business men. Each delegate seemed fully impressed with the fact that he had been sent in there on a business mission—a business of great importance to the welfare of this city, and the way that duty was discharged indicates that their duty was well performed. The man whom they selected to head the ticket, Mr. Wm. Anglim, came to this city in 1878 and with Louis Fontaine formed the firm of Fontaine & Anglim, now one of the leading mercantile firms of the city. They bought out an established business, that of W. D. Bailey, and commenced business in a log building. Very soon their business required more room and they built one of the first brick stores in the city, this being found inadequate another change was made finally followed last fall by the erection of the handsome brick block they now occupy, which would be a credit to a much larger city than Crookston. While Mr. A. has never been prominent as an office seeker he has been an honest, upright business man and the creditable way in which his personal business affairs have been managed is an earnest of the manner in which he will strive to administer public affairs should be elected to the office for which he has been nominated. It is true he is not a professional orator, neither was Alexander McKinnon when he first took the chair, and behold how he has developed into as good, fluent and easy an off-hand speaker as we have in the city. However that may be, whether he succeeds in developing eloquence remarkably we think we can assure our citizens that the administration will be a business one if Mr. Anglim heads it. The candidate for Alderman-at large, A. K. Austin, has showed his faith in the city by helping to build the fine opera house block, than which none finer exists in the city. No man has greater interests at stake and no man will guard them more zealously than A. K. Austin. The clerical ability of the balance of the ticket is the surest test and the fact that two of them, Capt. Couverette and E. C. Carruth were re-nominated for the offices which they had filled for one term should be an indication of the appreciation of the people. Wm. Arnold has creditably filled the office of county surveyor, is an old resident of Polk County and should be sufficiently acquainted with values in the city to make a good assessor. We believe he would be if elected. Upon the whole the ticket is a good one from a business standpoint a worthy of the support of every business man in the city.

Pure Food in Congress.

Action which has Resulted in the official Determination of the Best Baking powder.

The act of congress authorizing the examination of the baking powder has resulted in a most unprecedented compliment to the Royl Baking Powder. The test were made in the Government Laboratory at Washington, and the official report shows that the Royal is superior to all others in leavening strength—being over thirty per cent, above the average. The report also shows the purity of the Royal Powder and the wholesomeness of the ingredients.

This is probably the highest compliment of an official character ever paid to a proprietary article, though no more than the great army of baking powder consumers would expect in behalf of their old friend and favorite.

The result of the official examination, as thus determined, will, of course, make the "Royal" the standard for Government purchases.

Council Proceedings.

Proceedings of an adjourned meeting of the City Council of the City of Crookston, held in the City Hall on Tuesday evening, March 22d, 1892.

Meeting called to order by president Cromb.

ROLL CALL.

Alldermen present—Buhn, Jennings, Jerome, Marshall, McGlogan, Marlette, Schmidt, Walker, Cromb.

Aldermen absent: Childs, Steenerson.

Owing to the city convention being called to meet in the city hall the council adjourned to the police room.

Minutes of previous meeting read and approved.

At an adjourned meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston, held the 22d day of March, 1892, Alderman Walker offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Alderman Marshall:

Resolved, that inasmuch that no bids have been received to build a sidewalk on north side of Fourth street, between Broadway and Elm streets, the street commissioner be and he is hereby instructed to proceed with the least possible delay to lay said sidewalk, and make and file with the city engineer, when finished, a correct statement of the outlay incurred thereby.

Upon the call of ayes and nays, the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative—Buhn, Jennings, Jerome, Marshall, McGlogan, Schmidt, Walker, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative—none.

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the president of the council.

Passed this 22d day of March, 1892.

JOHN CROMB,
President of the Council.

Approved the 26th day of March, 1892.

ALEX. MCKINNON,
Mayor.

Attest: E. C. CARRUTH,
Clerk.

Mr. Louis Godbout presented a petition asking the privilege of moving his frame building now on lot 5 of block 12 onto lot 4 of block 12 all in Fletcher & Houston's addition.

Moved by Alderman Marshall seconded by Alderman Jerome that the petition be granted. Carried.

Mr. Arthur Dufresne presented a petition asking the privilege of using one half of the street, opposite his lots, while his building was being erected, also the use of the streets while moving his building now on lot 20 block 6, down toward Spendley street.

Moved by Alderman Schmidt, seconded by Alderman Marshall that the request be granted. Carried.

Mr. E. Barrett presented a petition asking that he be allowed to use one half of the street opposite his building, also that he might move the frame building now on lot 19 block 6 across the street onto the property owned by Mr. Finseth, while his new building was under construction.

Moved by Alderman Walker seconded by Alderman Jerome, that the petition be granted. Carried.

Gaarder & Sundet presented an application to sell intoxicating liquors in the building on corner of Robert and Main streets.

Resolved, that the liquor application of Gaarder & Sundet be granted upon proper proofs of publication and that the bond accompanying the same be approved upon the payment of $500. Carried.

On motion Council adjourned.

E. C. CARRUTH,
City Clerk.

Warren Register.—We were in Crookston Tuesday night Wednesday and Wednesday night of last week. On Wednesday evening we witnessed the play of "Hazel Kirk" at the new Opera House. We were in good company, too, as we were the guest of Bro. Cooke of the Journal and his amiable wife. The play was rendered in good style to a large audience. Crookston has an Opera House she can well be proud of. Its size and elegance was a surprise to us. Speaking of Bro. Cooke, we are reminded that he has received a new $1,700 Potter press and engine, which he will put to work as soon as he makes some necessary additions to his office building. He has also received a lot of new material, including a paper cutter, type, etc., and says he will have the best newspaper outfit in Crookston when he gets things to rights. May he live long and prosper all the time.

Money Motion.

During the discussion of the United States Banking bill in congress some time in 1835 or 1836 John Randolph, of Roanoke, who was opposed to establish a United State bank, said that he had discovered perpetual motion, and it was very simple, being the fact that—

"Paper makes money.
Money makes banks.
Banks make poverty.
Poverty makes rags.
Rags makes paper.
Paper makes money.
Money makes banks."

and so on forever and forever. Without speaking of the bearing of this on the present financial discussion in and out of congress, it may be said that the Burlington System goes on forever increasing its milege and that it goes everywhere, that it reaches all principal cities and towns in the West. No matter what your destination, buy your ticket over a Burlington line, and you will get there by the quickest and best route. Do you want to know more about it? Then write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent. St. Paul, minn.

Farming for Health.

May be very fine, and you will no doubt grow strong and be happy with nothing but a hoe, a back number plow and a shot gun seeder. But if you are

Farming for Wealth

You should have the latest and best tool on the market. For instance you want first a DOWAGIAC SHOE DRILL, and as you probably did not get your plowing all done last fall you also want a Grand Detour Plow, a Little Yankee or Scandia Gang. We have them to sell and would liketo show you their merits.

——OUR TIME AGAINST YOURS.——

There are several other things you ought to have but you must have these now soon. We have a nice line of Harrows that we are selling cheap, also Wagons, Buggies, Engines, Threshers, Etc., Etc.

Regulating Elevators.

The Supreme Court Says, It Can Be Done by States.

Grand Forks Daily Herald.

The federal supreme court has handed down a very important decision affecting the right of a state to control the charges of grain elevators at large centers or terminal points, and as parties here are interested in nearly similar litigation, it will be interesting to them.

The case arose in New York under an act of the legislature of that state passed in 1888, fixing the maximum charges of receiving, weighing and discharging grain by means of elevators and warehouses in cities of at least 130,000 population. It is known as the Budd case. Budd was indicted and convicted of charging more for elevating grain in Buffalo, N. Y., than the maximum rate allowed by the statutes. On appeal to the court of appeals the constitutionality of the law was affirmed. The ground in which the case was assailed was that the provisions of the state had been violated and also those of the federal constitution, declaring that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law. The court of appeals decided that under the peculiar facts of the case the owners of grain elevators and warehouses in Buffalo enjoyed a virtual monopoly of the business and that therefore it was subject to state control On writ of error the federal supreme court, affirmed this decision.

The question is somewhat similar to the one now pending before the North Dakota supreme court, involving the right of the legislature to fix the ratio of elevature at all points in the state. The main difference between the cases seems to be the fact that the elevators whose charges are sought to be regulated by the statutes in this state are not at great centers where a large volume of grain must pass through them and where, by reason of the peculiar circumstances surrounding them, as in Buffalo in the Budd case and in Chicago in the Granger case they enjoy a virtual monopoly.

The old reliable dealer, who has sold horses in this county since 1878 and who is always on hand to make his guaranty good. Every man who ever sold horses here is ready (when he sells) to guaranty, but later, if you happen to want him to make his guaranty good you can't most always sometimes find him. You can always find Brown, and always find him ready to make his recommend good. He handles only good young horses and has sold more than and dealer in the county.. He is now prepared to supply the demand for GOOD teams—he handles no other, and guaranty them just as recommended. Before you buy you will do well to call at Polk County Journal.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

Crookston, March 31, 1892.

Wheat—1 Hard 63.
1 Northern 62.
2 Northern 56.
3 Northern 52.

If you want to rent a farm call and see us.

Geo. Vine went north this week to buy hides.

M. A. Sture is quite indisposed these days. Grip.

The river will break up very soon if this weather continues.

Miss Emma Sture has returned from a winter's visit to the western coast.

Lots of work, of every kind, for everybody in Polk County the coming year.

Charley Vine is kept as busy as a bee cutting up meats to supply his increasing trade.

Miss Edith McGrew went out Fosston on Tuesday morning to visit friends for a day or so.

W. E. Slocum is fixing up the house that Rev. Mr. Whitney occupied and will take possession soon.

S. B. Palmer was up from Lockhart on Tuesday looking after business in the line of gasoline engines.

Charlie Vine is not doing any bragging but he is just simply selling the choicest cuts in the market. Try him.

Rev. R. H. Battey will exchange next Sabbath with Rev. Seth N. Wilcox, of the Congregational church of Grand Forks.

Miss Emma Sture was in the earthquake and don't like 'em pretty much. Prefers life in Polk County where such things happen not.

The ladies of the Congregational church are getting up an experience social to come off sometime in May. Lots of fun expected.

The Northern Pacific will change time on Sunday next. The train for St. Paul will leave Crookston at 7:05 p. m. and arrive in the morning at 7;27 a. m.

Bert Duntley is preparing plans for a residence in Jerome's Addition, near Wm. Thune's and will commence building as soon as the weather permits.

Farmers all predict good crops this year and good weather. We predict good prices and if all these predictions come true look out for booming times.

Miss Edith Grasse, who has been visiting in this city with Mrs. Edward George for a while returned on Tuesday morning to her home in Winnipeg.

Adolph Rauch has purchased the Hack & Gallasch corner for $5,500 cash and will erect a brick block thereon. This is one of the finest corners in the city.

A few more days of thawing weather will put the ground in fine shape for seeding. Some expect to be able to begin this week.

C. J. Knox, the Thief River Falls boomer, was in the city on Monday evening on his way to St. Paul. Reports prospects good for a large sized boom up there this coming summer.

"Do you know" that J. W. Wheeler has money to loan at reasonable rates and no long waits for the money to come from some place? He has it on hand ready for delivery as soon as the papers are made out.

Mrs. Adams and Miss Veronneau are getting their stock into the building on Second street recently occupied by A. D. Stephens and will soon be ready to greet their many friends.

Fred Anderson:—"I expect Ike Simmons will be the next alderman from the First Ward. I have not time to make much of a canvas and I don't think Ike is working very hard but his party is."

Eli Steenerson:—"Yes I noticed that 'conjuction' business, but it strikes me that somebody is getting a little fresh. There is nothing in the city charter that prevents a man repairing a leaky roof and as the roof to my meat-market building was somewhat leaky I undertook to repair it. Then came the injunction—I am still engaged repairing the roof."

The Belmour-Gray Comedy Company opened a week's engagment at the Grand on Monday night in "Solomon Isaacs, or Queen's Evidence." The leading parts were exceedingly well sustained and the company is an unusually strong one. Popular prices. Reserved seats on sale at Tom Morris. If you enjoy a pleasant evening try the Grand any night this week.

If foreign nations don't quit monkeywith Uncle Sam, Harrison will be nominated by acclamation and re-elected with a whoop. Every time a foreign nation bristles up and makes faces at the U. S. Harrison's actions show that "Grandfather's Hat" is not an atom too big for him. His dignified attitude toward England in the seals fishery question wins the admiration of the world.

The committee appointed to meet a G. A. R. committee met at committee on Monday evening and agreed upon preliminaries for the encampment in July next. As the encampment will include the 4th of July these ceremonies will be merged in the celebration we were to have and a grand good time provided for. Look out for the best celebration ever held in the Northwest.

The roads are softening up continually.

A. C. Schmidt is painting the M. E. church building.

W. E. McKenzie and wife went to St. Paul on Tuesday evening.

Eli Steenerson is at work on the old Crookston meat-market building.

John E. Tice and J. J. Tice came up from Mentor on Tuesday's train.

J. O. McWaters called on Friday to cheer our heart by renewing for one year.

Doc. Rutledge, of the Fisher Bulletin was up on Tuesday to observe the Lady of Lyons.

Mrs. Powell and Mrs. Nailor, of Warren, are visiting in the city with their sister-in-law, Mrs. N. P. Stone.

Will Carl, brother-in-law of Charlie Vine, who has been very ill with brain fever is reported out of danger.

W. C. Andrew gave us a call on Saturday last to see what stationary we need from Wright, Barrett & Stilwell.

Fred Anderson commenced work on his building on Broadway. It will be remodled into a neat residence building.

The new pastor for the Baptist church Rev. Mr. McDonald, has arrived and will enter upon his duties on Sabbath next.

A very brilliant aurora borealis was witnessed on Thursday night of last week. This would indicate another cold snap soon.

The little house on Main street so long used by Judge Reynolds as an office and later as a residence was moved off last week.

A. Griffin, brakesman on No. 9, had hand badly hurt on Monday evening. Dr. Dampier soon fixed the injured member in good shape.

Street commissioner Dan McDonald was busy on Monday with a crew of men flushing the gutters. An improvment very much needed.

A washout on the line west delayed the Great Northern train several hours. The train due at 7 p. m. Friday evening arrived at 1 p. m. on Saturday.

Charlie Pearson was in the city on Saturday selling cutlery for Wright, Barrett & Stilwell. Charlie is one of the best hearted fellows on the road.

Attorney D. Hattlestad was called away to Iowa last week by the news of the death of his sister at Decorah. He will be away ten days or a fortnight.

Rev. S. H. Barteau, of Stephen, was visiting friends and relatives on Tuesday. Mr. B. has just recovered from a severe illness and looks pale and thin yet.

I. W. C. Misner writes: "Send me the JOURNAL, can't keep house without it." All right. The name is duly added to the list together with quite a batch this week.

The delegates to the democratic convention at St. Paul, Alex. McKinnon, Wm. Anglim, Alderman A. C. Schmidt and Sam. Rosenthal, left for St Paul on Tuesday evening.

One of Nap. Rapin's little boys took a prominent part in the play of "Solomon Isaacs" on Monday evening. As this was his first appearance on the stage the little chap did nobly.

Iver Krohn was up from his farm in Garden last week laying in a stock of provisions for seeding. Says if this weather continues he can go to work at an early day. Thinks they will get to work generally next week.

Attorney Steenerson went down to Fergus Falls last week to defend a man charged with selling whiskey to Indians and succeeded in mixing up the witnesses so badly that several of them were indicted for perjury.

The O'Neil boys report their land drying off nicely. They got their plowing all done last fall and now all they have to do is to sow as soon as the ground is ready and it is almost ready now. They expect to begin seeding this week.

The funeral of comrade Louis Zange occurred at the Methodist Episcopal church on Friday afternoon. The Post turned out to pay the last sad respects to a departed comrade and the remains were tenderly laid to rest in Oakdale cemetery.

We have been somewhat handicapped for the past week owing to the illness of our foreman, and as you can't always step out on the street and pick up a man in this business when you want him, such an absence is generally severely felt.

THE JOURNAL is informed that the residence of F. W. Bruce, a few miles southeast of Carman, was destroyed by fire on Tuesday. During his absence the house took fire and his wife, who was not entirely recovered from a severe illness was barely able to save her life.

Joseph Dostal was down from Tabor on Tuesday and dropped in to square up on subscription. Says that more people are coming into Tabor this spring than ever before and that there can be but little if any more railroad land yet for sale in the town. About one-fourth of the threshing remains to be done but the plowing was pretty well completed last fall. He thinks seeding will not be commenced inside of two weeks yet.

L. F. Menage,

14-39] Minneapolis, Minn.

Wm. Campbell came down from Maple Bay on Thursday to bring his little boy to consult a doctor. For about two years the boy has been a sufferer from hip disease and he does not seem to improve as rapidly as could be desired. On Friday morning Mr. C. dropped in to say he could not keep house without THE JOURNAL and to renew for the coming year.

Joseph Laframboise gave us a call on Friday afternoon to report on his visit to Canada during the past winter. He says many will leave that country during the coming season and many more would if they could sell. He thinks it would be an excellent idea if practicable for the railroad companies to run excursion trains soon after seeding, that if they did do so many would come out and see what the country can do. We think that would be a very excellent idea.

Friday was field day for subscriptions—mostly renewals. This is very acceptable to us in view of the fact that our new press and engine have arrived and we are arranging to get them set up and running at as early a day as possible and when that day comes we shall need considerable more money than we have been able to collect so far. Of course we do not expect help from those who have not threshed as yet but all who have the money handy and will kindly liquidate will lay us under lasting obligations if they will call and see us.

THE JOURNAL does not presume to be dictatorial, nor to advise in the matter of voting. The two tickets are in the field—there are some good men on both of them, but it may be advisable to study the platforms of the parties as far as the executive officers are concerned, the others, of course, demanding merely clerical ability are not so important—providing the ability is there. Looking over the platform of the citizens' party one is impressed with the idea that it embraces the essential elements of a good business administration. Again, the character of the men selected by the citizens' convention is a guaranty of the faithful performance of the duties devolving upon them. Their interest in the welfare of the city is conspicuous in the character of the buildings they have erected and a hundred different ways. Could we ask for better evidence of good faith? Could we find it if we did? THE JOURNAL has nothing but good words to say of the candidates on the People's ticket but claims that the citizens' platform is very much the better one for the interests of our city. The ticket was placed in the field more in accordance with the principles of freedom which is the boast of the American people, because the caucuses were duly advertised and every body who cared to do so was privileged to go in and have a voice in making it. It was not put in the field by an exclusive society whose members alone knew when the ticket was to be made. The citizens' ticket was made by at least two thirds of the people of the city in caucus assembled, thus representing as nearly as may be the will of the people. We think these ideas furnish good and sufficient reason why the citizen's ticket should be triumphantly elected as we confidently believe it will be if its friends are on the alert—but they can not go to sleep and expect to elect it.

Republican Caucuses.

Republican caucuses will be held in the various wards at the usual plans on Saturday evening at 7:30.

THE JOURNAL regrets to notice the assignment of Mr. J. V. E. Wyatt. Mr. W. started in business in this city a few years ago with a limited capital and has done a good business but the unfortunate fire, by which he lost a considerable money obliged him to go more on credit and now one of the houses with whom he deals is crowding him for its money. Mr. W. thinks he will come out of it all right.

FONTAINE & ANGLIM, Leaders in Low Prices on Quality.

Tom Harris took the contract for moving Felix Fournet's wholesale liquor store buildings across the street and commenced operations last week. He figures that the job will take about 10 days. As soon as the buildings are well off, the work of excavating for the new block will be commenced.

We have experienced several vexatious delays which interfere with our building operations but we live in hope to see our press room completed and our new Potter press up and running off our edition by the commencement of Vol. 16. Our old Fairhaven has been a true and faithful friend but although it would run from 600 to 700 per hour it has become altogether too slow so it had to go to make way for one of the latest improved Potter presses and a gasoline engine to run it. We have our press and engine all ready to set up just as soon as we can make the necessary changes in our building which will take but a few days when we can get at it. With our press we have bought a quantity of body type, advertising type and many beautiful new faces of the very latest styles of job type and with these added facilities we think we shall be able to turn out as good work as can be done outside of the twin cities. Give us a trial. Try THE JOURNAL job rooms for job printing of any description.

MRS. E. E. BANGS

Has secured the services of Miss C. B. Hammond as her milliner. Miss Hammond comes from Edson, Keith & Co.'s Chicago pattern rooms where she has been for many weeks studying up all the latest styles and designs in millinery, and she is an expert in this line. Mrs. Bangs has received the finest line of millinery goods from Chicago that has ever been in Crookston, and she is now prepared to give the best style, and the lowest prices ever given in this city give her a call and see for yourself.

Elsewhere in this issue we publish the particulars of a remarkable cure that fairly outrivals the celebrated case of John Marshall, of Hamilton, which created such a sensation throughout the country. The particulars of this case are vouched for by the Albany Evening Journal, recognized as the leading newspaper at the New York State capital, and one of the leading papers of the United States. There is, therefore, no room to doubt that the particulars of the case are accurately and carefully set forth, in every respect true, and must therefore prove of the deepest interest to our readers, we therefore commend the article to their careful perusal.

Widely known as proprietor of Derry's Waterproof Harness Oil, tells of his terrible sufferings from Eczema and his wonderful cure by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Gentlemen: Fifteen years ago I had an attack of inflammatory rheumatism, which was followed by Eczema or breaking out on my right leg. The humor spread all over my legs, back and arms, a foul mass of sores, swollen and itching terribly, causing intense pain if the skin was broken by scratching, and discharging constantly. It is impossible to describe my 13 years of agony and torture. I spent in futile efforts to get well, and was discouraged and ready to die. At this time I was unable to lie down in bed, had to sit up all the time, and was unable to walk without crutches. I had to hold my arms away from my body, and had to have my arms, back and legs bandaged by my faithful wife twice a day.

Thousands of Dollars

"Finally a friend urged me to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. I began by taking half a teaspoonful. My

Stomach Was all Out of Order

But the medicine soon corrected this, and in six weeks I could see a change in the condition of the humor which nearly covered my body. It was driven to the surface by the Sarsaparilla, the sores soon healed, and the scales fell off. I was soon able to give up bandages and crutches, and a happy man I was. I had been taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for seven months; and since that time, 2 years, I have worn no bandages whatever and my legs and arms are sound and well.

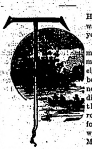
THE WISDOM OF A CHILD.



THE matter was settled yesterday. The very mayor who married us eight years before pronounced us divorced, in the same room and before the same witnesses. My wife was accompanied by her father, her mother, and two friends, while my two old comrades, who had assisted at the tying of my pretty love-knot, came, with saddened faces, to witness the severing of the bond.

A stiff bow, exchanged at the beginning and the end of the ceremony, was the only farewell between two beings who for years had never had a thought that was not shared. We sat on a bench, where, five minutes before had been a smiling bridal pair, and I felt within me an agitation that was painful; there seemed to be a tension at my heart as if my whole being were about to be racked with torture. Was it possible that my companion and confident, the woman who had consoled and encouraged me in all my trials, the woman I had loved so long and so dearly, could witness without regret, without a thought of the sweet past, the sundering of the bond that had united us.

My glance wandered round the room, from the ugly moulding of the cealing to the pictures on the wall, but suddenly it rested on a graceful head, with soft dark hair, which I had not seen for four months, and, through the meshes of my wife's veil, I saw two sparkling tear-drops.

"She too, remembers and regets," I thought; "perhaps she could forgive."

"Alas if we two could have been alone at that moment. But close beside her was the pale stern face of her father and the determined one of her mother, those two had, from the very beginning of the trouble watched her jealously. I had tried every means of having an interview with Helen, but my letters had been intercepted, my messengers turned away, and our only meeting had been in the presence of a magistrate, an utter stranger, who with the best intentions, had by his cold formality made matters even worse.

Since that day I have not entered my home. But now, on leaving the mayor's office, I went to the house to pack up my clothes. I knew that I could not live there alone among the memories of my vanished hapiness, so I resolved to travel, and thus fly from all that could remind me of my wife and home. A mutual friend arranged the details of the matter; I was to spend the night in the house, and the next morning Babette, my only child, would be allowed to come and breakfast with me. At three o'clock I was to leave; at four, Helen would come and take away her belongings; and twenty-four hours later the house would be "To Let," a party of workmen would come and put it in order for the next tenant, and then it would be left empty and desolate, an image of my life.

I stopped in the midst of my packing to order a breakfast such as would please my little Babette; I held a consultation with Lucas, my old servant, and we chose those dishes that the child was fond of. I also put aside for her two little trinkets, a pretty porte-bon-heur and a locket containing my own likeness.

Poor little Babette! She was blessed with the happy ignorance of a child of 7, and yet she was precocious enough to understand, in her own way, that there was something serious the matter between papa and mamma.

At 10 o'clock precisely she came accompanied by my mother-in-law's maid, who said she would return for mademoiselle at 2 in the afternoon.

Who can say where and how little girls acquire tact? They must be born with a germ of it, and, when developed, it makes them either women of the world, capable of reading one's secret thoughts or else gentle, patient nurses for the sick and wounded. Babette asked no more questions, but kissed me rather gravely; sat on my knee before the fire, as was her custom, and, when I gave her the locket, pressed my likeness to her lips, then hung it round her neck, whispering:

"I will kiss it every morning and every night."

When we had finished breakfast, however, she said, abruptly:

"Do you know mamma is coming here at 4 o'clock?"

"Yes, my dear," I answered.

"Are you not going to wait to say good-by to her?" she asked. After an instant's hesitation I said:

"I cannot. I have to leave the house at 3; the train will not wait for me."

"Why can't you take another train?" she persisted.

"Because—because I have promised to go by that train, and I must not break my word, you know."

Then, forgetting her presence, I added, half aloud: "And yet, if I could but see her alone!"

Babette said nothing more, and while I continued my preparations for going away she wandered all over the silent house, collecting her playthings, coming back occasionally with a doll or a little box of treasures, and looking unusually serious.

Her behavior wounded my paternal love, for it seemed as if she were already indifferent to our appoacrhing parting.

All too soon the servant came to take my darling from me, and I needed all my fortitude when we kissed each other for the last time. Never, never should we meet again in our home! The time dragged after she had gone; but at last the clock struck three. Then I sent my servant for a carriage, and while he was gone, I went into the bedroom and stood looking at a portrait of Helen, painted when she was a young girl. It belonged to her, so that I could not take it with me; and, as I gazed at it, my tears burst forth and I cried aloud: "Forgive me!"

A slight noise startled me, and turning round, I saw Helen standing in the doorway, pale and agitated. In an instant I was on my knees before her, pressing her hand to my lips and murmuring:

"You have come an hour too soon—does this mean that you love me still?"

Trembling and tearful, she replied: "You have stayed an hour too long. Why have you done so—what is the use?"

Just then Babette danced into the room, and, clasping her arms around our necks, exclaimed delightedly: "I did it, mamma—I put the clocks back, papa!"

Of what avail are legal papers and magistrates against the power of love's pardon? I went on my journey, but in the company of Helen and Babette, my wife and child.

"SOAPY" SMITH'S CLOSE CALL.

That Wicked "Kid" Went to Talk to Him With a Gun.

There was considerable excitement in Jimtown last evening, caused by a gun play in which several parties were interested and several others mixed up. A young man known in the camp as "Louisiana Kid" went into "Soapy" Smith's place and after losing some money on the games, made a big kick and received a blow over the head from the butt of a six-shooter for his trouble and was fired out of the place.

Thinking he had been abused he laid in wait for Soapy's outfit and as soon as a couple of them showed up he opened up on them with his gun. They returned his fire and then the shooting became general. After the gun play was over it was found that Soapy's manager had both thumbs shot off, a ball through his arm and a slight wound in the body. The "Louisiana Kid" received three balls, one in the head and the other two in the body. He then made good his escape and up to date nothing has been heard of him. Last seen of him he passed through Waterous and Bannigan's saloon and took up Wason's toll road toward Wagon Wheel Gap. Soapy's manager was taken away from the camp on the train.

The affair is trying to be hushed up by the tin horns and the gambling fraternity of the camp. There is a report current to the effect that if these affrays are not stopped all of the gamblers will be run out of the camp. The promiscuous shooting came very near causing the death of one of the peaceful citizens of the camp. John Kepper, who is about to start a restaurant in the camp, was sitting in a building across the street and a ball came through the building and cut off both the rear legs of the chair he was sitting on, and caused him to suddenly find himself on the floor, very much to his surprise and discomfort. The report that a man was hung on the school land caused nearly all the camp to rush down there, but it turned out to be merely a fake to draw the people down there by the saloon-keepers and merely an effigy of a man.—Denver News.

INGENIOUS WOMEN.

How They Act in the Presence of Disagreeable Incidents.

Women have their own ways of keeping their conscience clear and their minds freed from all uncharitableness. One woman when she encounters a disagreeable person goes off into a corner and counts off on her fingers the agreeable people she knows. This she does, not in effect, but literally as she might tell her beads; and she keeps on doing it until the image of the disagreeable one is effaced.

Another woman in the presence of an unusually annoying circumstance was observed to unhook her gown. The rehooking miscarried several times to her great impatience. She was asked why then had she unhooked it. Her answer was that hooks and eyes were the most disagreeable thing ever invented. One always began to hook them in the middle, and the chances were ten to one that you linked the wrong pair. But this you did not know until you were half through and one side came out ahead. So with that, and the strain on your fingers, you were naturally exasperated, and as they were only hooks and eyes, it didn't much matter what you said. With the chance to free your mind other disagreeable things seemed almost pleasant.

It will be observed that it occurred to neither of these women, who were both religious, to fall on their knees and ask in the old-fashioned way to be delivered from anger and ill-feeling. This was not because they distrusted the efficacy of this method, but simply because they hadn't at that moment, and seldom had, the time or place. Also, both being scientific minded, the one knew that in thought, as in physics, two things cannot occupy the same space at the same time, and so pried out one thought with another; while the other, by simply transmuting her angry force from an incorporeal offense to hooks and eyes, had the relief of its expenditure without its sin.

A Sort of Digital Depression.

Did you ever notice, when a man smites his thumb with a hammer, while putting down a carpet under wifely supervision and criticism, how quickly he thrusts the bruised and throbbing member into his ready mouth? writes Robert J. Burdette in the Ladies' Home Journal. People think it is because the application is soothing. But no; it is an involuntary movement, same as winking. The man cannot help it. Nature knows what the man would be apt to say under the circumstances, and so she has provided him with a stopper, and has ordained that, whenever he hits his thumb hard enough to hurt—and it doesn't take very much to nearly kill a man when he is doing something he doesn't want to—by a sort of interlocking system the thumb flies into his mouth and stops him up, so that he can't say anything. Some men whom you and I know should be provided with an extra thumb which they might carry about in their hand all the time it wasn't in active use. It would be a great thing, wouldn't it?

FACTS FOR FARMERS.

THE FARMER MAY PROFIT BY THESE SUGGESTIONS.

How to Make a Hot Bed—A New Clover Truth—Testing Grass and Clover Seed—A Calf Feeding Experiment.

How to Make a Hot Bed.

A correspondent to the Kansas Farmer says that to make a hot bed, it is best to excavate a place to the depth of one spade, and the size of the bed, which is usually six by twelve feet. Haul fresh horse manure, that which has never went through fermentation, or been rained on; unload beside the intended bed, making a compost heap. In a few days it will show fermentation, then make the bed, by scattering the manure evenly in the pit and tramping it very compact, to the depth of 12 to 18 inches; then make a frame of good boards, let the front or south board be 12 inches wide, and the back or north board 14 inches, This will give the sash about the right pitch. By using 12-foot timber and six feet for the ends, three sashes four feet wide will just cover it. After the frame is put on square, put in about six or eight inches of good garden soil. With this should be mixed some old and rotten manure, so it will not bake; put on the sash and examine in a few days as to the amount of heat. After the most violent heat has passed off, and the temperature has gone to about 90 degrees, then it is ready for planting. If radishes and lettuce are to be planted frequent airing on warm days is necessary. Tomatoes, peppers and egg plants need more heat. Cabbage needs about the same treatment as lettuce. Watering must be attended to whenever the soil appears to be getting dry, but the most attention should be given to airing to prevent the plants from drawing up and getting shaky or spindling. At the aproach of night, the beds must be covered with boards or straw, or the cold will penetrate through the glass and kill the plants.

A New Clover Truth.

There are some things, we believe, about clover, says the Homestead, that we have never yet published because we have not practically demonstrated their truth on our farms. For example a farmer from northwestern Iowa was in the office a short time since complaining that although his clover did well on new lands for a few weeks, it finally died out as if starved. We asked him if he had any spot on his farm where clover succeeded and he replied that it had grown luxuriantly in his orchard for 10 years. We advised him to resow his field next March as soon as the ground was dry, plow up a corner of his orchard, harrow it fine and sow part of his field with this fine dirt as if he was sowing it to oats, but to do this purely as an experiment. We did not know then that this had ever been tried, but inferred it from some European experiments. Since that we find that the question of sowing the microbe has been made the subject of exhaustive experiments in Germany, and with the most complete success. It has been there demonstrated that while clover will grow without the microbe it will grow only on lands that have great superabundance of nitrogen; that under these circumstances it will not form tubercles on the roots, while it will grow equally well on poor land, provided the microbe is sown either with clover soil or with water that has been through clover soil. If, however, the water is cold it will not grow. Suppose we had made this statement a year ago, it would have been considered, by sensible farmers, as cranky to an extreme, and yet it would have only stated what is now a demonstrated scientific act.

Testing Grass and Clover Seed.

It is well to test grass and clover seed, not only to determine if the vitality of the seed is impaired, but also to ascertain if it is adulterated with seeds of weeds or noxious grasses. Testing should never be neglected, for it is the seed not suspected that does the harm. Select a number of seeds large enough to make the test a test—at least 100. Count carefully. Place the seeds between woolen cloths moistened with tepid water. The cloths should be boiled after they are used, and the plate or pan in which they are laid should be scalded to avoid the growth of fungi or mould. For the same reason, only recently boiled water should be used for moistening the cloths. At least two cloths should be laid upon the plate. Then the seed is distributed over them, and covered with another cloth. If the reader can cover the plate with glass, he should do so, as this will retard evaporation and protect the cloths from floating germs. Under these conditions and a temperate of 70 to 80 degrees Fahr., good seed will germinate within 10 days. Seeds of little vitality may germinate after ten days, but they should not be counted in the test, as they would probably fail to germinate under field conditions Seeds should not be used when more than 10 per cent fail to germinate, if better seed can be procured in time for testing and sowing.—American Agriculturist.

The Use of Fertilizers.

If a proper rotation is pursued ordinary farm crops can be grown indefinitely where only mineral fertilizers, chiefly phosphate, are applied directly to the soil. This rotation includes frequent applications of clover as green manure. It has been tried on land rich in mineral plant food for many years without decreasing the crop of grain. It would not do for growing corn, potatoes or garden vegetables. In all of these clover alone is too slow a manure, but for wheat on land rich in phosphate the biennial clover crop has been found sufficient.

But for the great majority of farmers speculations, as to what can be done with mineral manures alone have no practical value. They are more expensive than the supplies of nitrogen and mineral matter that can be made by careful feeding of the best stock. It behooves every farmer to make accurate experiments so as to determine the cost of his stable manure, and if it costs more than mineral fertilizers to either change his stock or place more reliance on fertilizers with clover.

A Calf Feeding Experiment.

An experiment at the Iowa Experiment Station indicated that

A ration of skim milk and ground flax seed compares favorably with a new milk ration for young calves.

The larger gain came from the whole milk but a part of it was partly due to the individuality of the calves and good results and a thrifty growth were made on skim milk and ground flax seed.

The skim milk calves were interrupted less in their growth by weaning than the whole milk calves.

A saving in value of butter fat alone of $1.11 per month on each calf was effected by substituting the ground flax seed. The cost of producing a pound of gain (estimating new milk at eighty-seven and a half cents per hundred pounds and skim milk at fifteen cents per hundred pounds, grain one cent per pound, hay five dollars per ton, and flax seed meal three and a half cents per pound) was 7.6 cents for the fresh milk ration and five cents for the skim milk ration.

Avoiding Potato Scab.

After a series of experiments, Prof. Bolley of the North Dakota station comes to the conclusion that he can avoid the production of scabby potatoes if he cannot entirely eradicate the disease. He finds no substantial evidence that any soil of whatsoever kind can in itself give origin to the disease. But the disease germ can and does remain in the ground from crop to crop for at least four years. Scabby or disease bearing seed tubers can and will under ordinary circumstances produce a diseased crop. But by soaking the seed tubers before planting in chemical solutions enabled him to raise an undiseased product from the scabbiest of seed where the ground was known to be free from the disease. Seed tubers free from the disease germs will in any soil, clay, sand or muck raise an undiseased produce, provided only that the soils themselves are free of the disease.

We Have Seen

A young man sell a good farm, turn merchant, break and die insolvent.

A farmer spend so much time in town that there was nothing at home worth looking after.

A worthy farmer's son idle away the prime of his life in dissipation and end his career in poverty.

A farmer too self-conceited to mend his way and too obstinate to mend his footsteps.

A poor boy grow rich by industry and good management, and a rich boy grow poor by idleness and dissipation.

A man spend more money in folly than would support his family in comfort and independence.

Corn Fodder.

We cut our corn fodder and find by so doing that it makes an excellent ration for dairy cows, says a writer in the National Stockman. We cure in the field. When dry it should be carefully housed. The old method of inviting dairy cows to dine on mud, snow and water with a little sprinkling of corn fodder, well tramped down and thoroughly mixed, is an insult to the brute creation. In cutting our fodder we usually use steam power. We have frequently cut by hand when steam has not been available, and we think it pays. It has been our practice to cut our feed for the past seven years, and we have reason to know that we save from one-third to one-half our feed. Feed is embodied cash and it is a farmer's mission to "grind it out."

How to Make Lambs Grow.

Ground oats, placed in a pen where the lambs can feed at a trough which the sheep cannot reach, with a liberal supply of milk from the ewes, will make lambs grow rapidly, and if they gain as they should they will reach the market a month sooner than if they depended on the ewes alone, and as this gain in time is an important point to keep in view for the high prices, every inducement should be made to keep the lambs feeding and growing, but the gain will not be rapid unless the lambs are well bred, nor will grades equal the pure breeds. The heaviest grades made have been with Oxfords and Shropshires. The main point to observe with the ewe is that of providing plenty of milk for her lamb.—Home and Farm.

Farm Hints.

The age of sheep can be cold by its teeth. At one year it has two large teeth in the center of the jaw, and two more appear each year until the animal is five years old. After this the age of the sheep cannot be definitely decided.

If the sheep appear to have taken cold and run at the nose, separate them from the others, give them warmer quarters, warm clean and well ventilated, and a warm bran mash daily and they will soon forget the catarrh.

A noted potato grower of Chippewa county, Wis., says he can raise potatoes at a cost of six cents a bushel. Another man whose crops were double, raised them at a cost of 13 cents a bushel, growing 400 bushels on an acre, at a profit of $100 per acre.

Experiments made in England showed that the larger grains of wheat, obtained by sifting, sprouted sooner, grew more rapidly, made more straw, and on average 10 bushels of grain per acre, than did the small seeds sifted out from the same lot. The wheat was also much heavier to the bushel and made a better flour.

Fire! Fire! That Dreadful Cry

Is fraught with import doubly dire to the unhappy man who beholds his dwelling or his warehouse feeding the devouring elements uninsured. Happily most people who can, insure—everything but health. Nine-tenths of us neglect the preservation of this when it is in palpable jeopardy. Incipient indigestion, liver complaint, la grippe, inaction of the kidneys and bladder and malaria are all counteracted by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

THE GREAT HESPER.

TALE OF A BIG DIAMOND.

How an Immense Gem Was Lost, Recovered, and Lost Again.

CHAPTER IV.

I must summarize as briefly as possible the events that took place the week following Lola's flight, not because I find them lacking in interest,—for indeed these were the happiest days I had ever spent—but because the lengthy description would unduly retard the progress of the history I have set myself to narrate.

On the morning of the 15th, search was made for Lola. She was not in the house. A little after mid-day, one of the keepers sent out to explore the Abbey woods and park, reported that he had seen the fugitive in the fir plantation, about a mile from the Abbey. At sight of him she had "scuttled" away like a young deer, but he, obedient to orders had not pursued her.

"It's the smell of the pines as drawed her there," said the Judge; "she was born amongst 'em, end she loves 'em more than laces and satins and picters, and sich like; and it's more nat'ral for the little cuss to sleep on the brown needles than in feathers. Ther's no tamin' her. It's instinc', end like foul weeds in a fair pasture, durn her, there's no gettin' it out of her. Leave her alone, sir and she'll come in when she's hungry, and then I will larn her the inquity of ongratitude!"

In the afternoon we went in a brake to Southampton, driving slowly through the woods, with the possibility of being seen by Lola, who would certainly then have followed us; but we saw nothing of her. At Southampton we bought decent clothes, and spent some time in the hairdresser's. I had my beard shaved off; and we returned to the Abbey, very much altered for the better in appearance.

Miss Lascelles was much distressed about Lola, who was still absent. Brace's explanation of her leaving the Abbey seemed a reasonable one; but her antipathy to Miss Lascelles, which led her to destroy the things she had given her, was to me a mystery,—to Miss Lascelles also, I believe, and a very painful one. She seemed to feel herself in some inscrutable way responsible for the girl's action.

Sir Edmund returned in the evening from London.

"Now, indeed; you look yourself,—a gentleman," he said, shaking my hand cordially. He had made inquiries respecting a lapidary, and learned that the most expert known to the trade, was a man named Carvalho, then occupied at Madrid. With our sanction he wrote at once offering this man his own terms to come to the Abbey and cut the Great Hesper.

At night, the door by which Lola was supposed to have escaped from the Abbey was left open, and a night light was placed in her bedroom.

The next morning the dairymaid said that some one had been at her milk pans in the night; there was no other evidence of Lola having entered the house. After breakfast, I determined to go through the woods myself in search of her. Miss Lascelles wished to accompany me. I ought to have pointed out to her that her company lessened the chances of Lola suffering me to approach her, but I could not deprive myself the pleasure of having such a sweet companion. We saw Lola at the edge of a clearing on the hillside. She watched us as we drew near. I called to her; but she shook her head, and, turning her back upon us, quickly disappeared amongst the pines. The forlorn condition of the girl; her gesture, which seemed full of sadness; the silent fall of leaves; the tristness of the autumn woods,—overcame Miss Lascelles; and, as she walked silently beside me, with her head bent, I saw that she was crying. This episode made a deep impression upon me; yet, while my heart ached with sympathy for the poor little savage wandering alone in those silent, still woods, an indescribable happiness stole over my senses. It was the awakening of love.

Sir Edmund had a basket of food placed in the dairy, and the doors again left open.

On the 17th we learned that some bread and fruit had been taken from the dairy in the night. Sir Edmund and I walked through the woods: we saw nothing of Lola. Our conversation turned upon his daughter, and he told me how she had consoled him for the loss of his wife. He spoke with natural pride of her sweet and loyal disposition. Later on, falling upon the subject of the great diamond, he asked how I came to be a miner. I told him of my loss by the failure of the Imperial, of the impossibility of my getting my living as a clerk, etc. Incidentally I referred to my mother's family, and, the name leading him to make further inquiries, he discovered the curious fact that my mother must have been his wife's cousin. How often do we find wide circles of friends linked together in this way! I thought that Miss Lascelles was greatly pleased with the discovery of the distant relationship existing between us; we seemed less remote from each other.

During our absence Miss Lascelles had devoted herself entirely to Van Hoeck; her sympathy had a remarkable effect upon this strange man. When I took him up to his room to dress for dinner, he asked me to open the windows, and place him where he might feel the air. He sat before the open window; the setting sun was reflected upon his sightless eyes. I believe he became unconscious of my presence, and I stood there watching the play of his features. His nostrils dilated, his brows creased together, his lips parted, showing his teeth closely set, the whole expression of the face indicating extreme dread; then the muscles relaxed, for a moment his cadaverous cheeks were tinged with color, the eyes closed, and the lips trembled as if in ecstasy. Again his lids rose, and the look of dread returned to his face. He shrank back in his chair, and blinked his eyes as though to give them light; then suddenly he flung out his arms wildly, and, with a smothered cry of impotent rage, buried his face in his hands, his long, thin fingers pressing the throbbing veins which stood out knotted and hard upon his temples.

"What is the matter, old man?" I asked, putting my hand on his shoulder.

He started, and answered impatiently:

"Nothing, nothing,—a dream!" And then he asked savagely, "Who watches you in the night?"

"This is not the night," I replied, fancying he was yet but half awake.

"Isn't it?" he asked, turning his eyes from one side to the other; then stretching out his hands, as if to Heaven, he cried, "Then what is night?"

Poor wretch, all was indeed night to him. I tried to engage him in conversation, but he waved his hand impatiently, and, getting up, felt his way to the washstand.

"Go down," he said; "Miss Lascelles is more pleasing to the eye than I am; she must be beautiful, for her voice is music, her touch is like the petal of a rose. Where do you keep the diamond? Is it safe?"

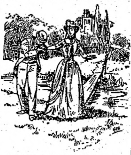
I told him that I now kept it in a belt buckled to my waist.

"Strap it to your wrist again; it is safer," he said; and then, bending his head aside, he listened attentively for a moment, and continued in a lower voice, "They are talking together down there. Creep down and listen. I tell you we are not safe here,—I see that through my blindness. I have faculties in place of that I have lost. Do you hear them? Come closer Thorne; there is a conspiracy in this house,—a plot to rob us of our treasure, and turn us beggars again upon the street. If I could trust you, I'd tell you more. But every one is a thief who has the power to steal."

It was not the first time I had heard him talk in this vein. At Natal, on the ship, he had been in constant dread of being robbed. I was glad to get away from him. As I passed the head of the stairs in going to my room, I distinguished the sound—too distant before to tell upon my dull ear—of Sir Edmund's voice and the Judge's; they were in the library below. After dressing, I joined them, and found Sir Edmund greatly interested in Brace's description of gold mining in California,—a subject upon which he could be eloquent by the hour together.

On the 18th Sir Edmund, Miss Lascelles, and I rode over to Southampton. Miss Lascelles was in her gayest, happiest mood, and in her riding-habit looked more charming than ever.

In returning, we met a friend of Sir Edmund's; he accepted the invitation to take lunch at the Abbey, and rode beside the baronet, ahead of us. We two took the hill so slowly that, coming to the cross-roads, we could not see Sir Edmund and his friend. There were two ways to the Abbey. After a little deliberation, Miss Lascelles laughingly consented to take the longer one.



I FORCED HER HAND TO MY LIPS.

The morning was superb; the woods were glorious. The rich, warm tints of the reddening foliage were reflected on my beautiful companion's cheek; her eyes seemed to catch the glitter of the dew that still hung on the gossamers. I forget what we talked about; but she was full of mirth, and now and then the still woods rang with the musical cadence of her laugh. But suddenly the smile died from her face, and she said,—

"We forget poor little Lola."

And then, as if the words had conjured up her presence, the girl appeared, swiftly speeding between the red boles of the fir trees. We stopped, and I called,—

"Lola, dear, come and speak to me."

She stood still, and looked as if irresolute whether or not to respond to my appeal.

"I will stay here. Go to her," said Miss Lascelles softly.

But, as if she had divined my intention, Lola shook her head mournfully as she had done before, and, going her way, was presently hid by the tall brake. As we crossed the opening where we had previously seen her, I looked back, and perceived her standing in the same place, gazing after us. It was easy to conceive her misery, and the bitter feelings of her heart. She was unaltered, but I was no longer the rough toiler, grateful for a tin of water fetched from the stream. All that was past. I was no longer her companion. I should never, never more, share her hard fate, and look to her to lessen the hardships of existence.

On the 19th we went again into the woods, but on foot, Miss Lascelles and I, straying thither without purpose from the garden where we met. We came to a stream bridged by a single plank supported in the middle. There had been a hand-rail, but it had fallen away in decay. I gave her my hand; the fear of falling made her clasp my fingers tightly. She seemed to enjoy the little danger; it animated her face and eyes with the prettiest, most bewitching expression imaginable. Her hand seemed to communicate the quickened pulsation of her heart. But it was not fear,—it was intoxication, that agitated me; and when she put her foot in safety on the bank, and looked up into my face with bright laughter, I kept her hand in mine, and, when she tried to withdraw it, I forced it to my lips, and pressed a kiss upon it. The color left her cheek, and in a tone of reproach she exclaimed,—"Oh, Mr. Thorne!" and I was ashamed. We walked home, and were very silent on the way. I sought Sir Edmund at once, and, finding him alone, told him that I wished to make his daughter my wife. He was thunderstruck by this sudden and unexpected announcement.

"I love your daughter," I said, "and I can not stay in this house keeping my passion a secret."

"Well," said he, with rather rueful pleasantry, "you have lost no time, Mr. Thorne; but it would have been a poor compliment to my daughter had you failed to percieve her charms."

"I should be dull indeed had they failed to impress me," I replied.

We talked for some time, and finally he said, with emotion:

"I must give up my dear child, sooner or later. Her happiness is dearer to me than anything; and I can wish her no greater blessing than to find a good and worthy husband."

At that moment Edith opened the door, but, seeing us, she stopped in the entrance.

"Come here, Edith," said Sir Edmund; and, taking her hand, he continued, "Mr. Thorne wishes you to be his wife: is that your wish also?"

She buried her burning face in her father's shoulder; she could neither say yes or no.

"It is a question that should not be decided hastily," the Baronet continued; "take time, my dear. Meanwhile, I see no reason for your leaving the house," he added, addressing me.

"Unless—" I faltered.

"Unless Edith wishes it," the Baronet said, helping me out. "True. Shall you feel more at ease, dear, if Mr. Thorne goes away—for a certain time, say? Shall he go?"

Still screening her face Edith shook her head, and then I knew that I had won a treasure greater than the Hesper diamond.

In the afternoon of the 20th Sir Edmund said:

"I have been looking at your engagement, Bernard, from a practical point of view, and a fact occurs to me that, at such a time as this, would probably escape you. That agreement of yours must be altered. You will see that, for Edith's sake, what I call the tontine clause, a clause conferring upon the survivor a deceased partner's share in the Great Hesper should be abrogated. It entails a risk which she must not be exposed to; you understand me?"

I understood what he said perfectly, and agreed with him that the clause must be altered.

"Consult with your partners," he said, "as to what change is advisable. I expect my lawyer here on the 24th, and he can then draw up a legal agreement in accordance with our general wish."

I took the Judge into Van Hoeck's room that night, and there told him of my engagement to Miss Lascelles. Van Hoeck was visibly alarmed when he heard this; and when I went on to say that Sir Edmund wished the clause altered by his lawyer on the 24th, he said quickly, in a low voice,

"The crafty old fox! What does he mean by that?"

"His meaning is obvious enough," I replied; "if I marry Miss Lascelles, and die, she will be dispossessed of my share in the diamond. I can leave her only a legacy of debt."

"Yes, end thet ain't all on it," said the Judge, drawing his wiry chin-tuft through his hand and bending his brow. "Thet ain't all by a lump. We're playing with a marked card in the pack,—a card as might tempt e'er a one on us to foul play,"

"What on earth do you mean? Speak plainly if you can," said Van Hoeck, in angry impatience.

"Well, I mean this 'ere," answered the Judge, with slow impressiveness, "thet, if one of my pardners wasn't a gentleman, and t'other wasn't helpless blind, I'm durned if I'd go to bed without a six-shooter under my piller, and my finger on the trigger. I don't allude to one any more'n another; but we'll just take Israel's word for gospel, that every one is a thief if you give him a chance of thieuin'; end, at that rate, I'm just as likely as not to murder my two pardners, end git the whole of thet diamond to myself. Consequently, you will allow thet the Squire has a double reason fur wantin' thet agreement altered; fur it aint only the money he's got to secure on to his daughter, but her husbin's life likewise. Time enough for the young lady to be a widder in the nat'ral order of things in gen'al."

TO BE CONTINUED.

He Had Been There Before.

The snow lay soft and noiseless over the housetops and on the trees, while the streets were as smooth and white as a lady's hand. The air was sharp and clear, and the jingle of the sleigh bells made merry music everywhere. Mr. Plaquemine of Louisiana was calling on a pretty Woodward avenue girl.

"I presume, Mr. Plaquemine," she said to him, daintily, as the Southerner looked out upon the winter scene, "that you hardly know in Louisiana what sleighing means."

"Um-er-ah-yes," he hesitated, "it means $10 an hour in Louisiana, but I presume it means considerably less up here."

And the merry sleigh bells on the street all jingled out of tune.—Detroit Free Press.

Managing a Boy Baby.

Tired Woman (in a railway car)—"Please, sir, will you please hold my baby a while? He's crying so I can do nothing with him."

Male Passenger—"Um—what is he crying for?"

"Nothing at all, sir."

"Well—er—what good will it do for me to take him?"

"Then he will have something to cry about."

"Oh, he will?"

"Yes, sir. He'll be crying for me then, and the longer you hold him the louder he'll yell."

"I presume so."

"Yes, sir. Then, when he is real sure it is only me he is crying for, I'll take him and he'll stop."—Street & Smith's Good News.

Aunty Couldn't Guess.

Aunty—"What became of that kitten you had when I was here before?"

Little Niece (in surprise)—"Why, don't you know?"

"I haven't heard a word. Was she poisoned?"

"No'm."

"Drowned?"

"Oh, no."

"Stolen?"

"No, indeed."

"Hurt in any way?"

"No'm."

"Well, I can't guess. What became of her?"

"She growed into a cat."—Street & Smith's Good News.

A SARATOGA CO. MIRACLE.

HELPLESS FOR YEARS AND EXCLUDED FROM HOSPITALS AS INCURABLE.

The Remarkable Experience of Chas. Quant as Investigated by an Albany, N. Y., Journal Reporter—A Story of Surpassing Interest.

Albany, N. Y. Journal, March 4th.

SARATOGA, March 4th.—For some time past there have been reports here and elsewhere in Saratoga county of a most remarkable—indeed, so remarkable as to be miraculous—cure of a most severe case of locomotor ataxia, or creeping paralysis, simply by the use of a popular remedy known as "Pink Pills for Pale People," prepared and put up by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Morristown, N. Y., and Brockville, Ont. The story was to the effect that Mr. Chas. A. Quant, of Galway, who for the last six or eight years has been a great sufferer from creeping paralysis and its attendant ills, and who had become utterly powerless of all self-help, had, by the use of a few boxes of the Pink Pills for Pale People, been so fully restored to health as to be able to walk about the street without the aid of crutches. The fame of this wonderful, miraculous cure was so great that the Evening Journal reporter thought it worth his while to go to Galway to call on Mr. Quant, to learn from his lips, and from the observation and testimony of his neighbors, if his alleged cure was a fact or only an unfounded rumor. And so, he drove to Galway and spent a day and a night there in visiting Mr. Quant, getting his story and interviewing his neighbors and fellow-townsmen. It may be proper to say that Galway is a pretty little village of about 400 people, delightfully located near the centre of the town of Galway, in Saratoga county and about 17 miles from Saratoga Springs. Upon inquiry, the residence of Mr. Charles A. Quant was easily found, for everybody seemed to know him, speak well of him and to be overflowing with surprise and satisfaction at his wonderful cure and restoration to the activities of enterprising citizenship, for Mr. Quant was born in Galway and had spent most of his life there. Mr. Quant was found at his pretty home, on a pleasant street nearly opposite the academy. In response to a knock at the door it was opened by a man who, in reply to an inquiry if Mr. Quant lived there and was at home, said: "I am Mr. Quant. Will you come in?" After a little general and preliminary conversation, and after he had been apprised of the object for which the Journal reporter had called upon him, he, at request, told the story of himself and of his sickness and terrible sufferings, and of the ineffectual treatment he had had, and of his final cure by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and cheerfully gave assent to its use for publication. He said: "My name is Charles A. Quant. I am 37 years old. I was born in the village of Galway, and, excepting while traveling on business and a little while in Amsterdam, have spent my whole life here. My wife is a native of Ontario. Up to about eight years ago I had never been sick and was then in perfect health. I was fully six feet tall, weighed 180 pounds and was very strong. For 12 years I was a traveling salesman for a piano and organ company and had to do, or at least did do, a great deal of heavy lifting, got my meals very irregularly and slept in enough 'spare beds' in country houses to freeze any ordinary man to death, or at least give him the rheumatism. About eight years ago I began to feel distress in my stomach and consulted several doctors about it. They all said it was dyspepsia, and for dyspepsia I was treated by various doctors in different places, and took all the patent medicines I could hear of that claimed to be a cure for dyspepsia. But I continued to grow gradually worse for four years. Then I began to have pain in my back and legs and became conscious that my legs were getting weak and my step unsteady, and then I staggered when I walked. Having received no benefit from the use of patent medicines, and feeling that I was constantly growing worse, I then, upon advice, began the use of electric belts, pads and all the many different kinds of electric appliances I could hear of, and spent hundreds of dollars for them, but they did me no good. (Here Mr. Quant showed the Journal reporter an electric suit of underwear for which he paid $124). In the fall of 1888 the doctors advised a change of climate, so I went to Atlanta, Ga., and acted as agent for the Estey Organ Company. While there I took a thorough electric treatment, but it only seemed to aggravate my disease, and the only relief I could get from the sharp and distressing pains was to take morphine. The pain was so intense at times that it seemed as though I could not stand it, and I almost longed for death as the only certain relief. In September of 1888 my legs gave out entirely, and my left eye was drawn to one side, so that I had double sight and was dizzy. My trouble so effected my whole nervous system that I had to give up business. Then I returned to New York and went to the Roosevelt hospital, where for four months I was treated by specialists and they pronounced my case locomotor ataxia and incurable. After I had been under treatment by Prof. Starr and Dr. Ware for four months, they told me they had done all they could for me. Then I went to the New York hospital on Fifteenth street, where, upon examination, they said I was incurable and would not take me in. At the Presbyterian hospital they examined me and told me the same thing. In March, 1890, I was taken to St. Peter's hospital in Albany, where Prof. H. H. Hun frankly told my wife my case was hopeless; that he could do nothing for me and that she had better take me back home and save my money. But I wanted to make a trial of Prof. Hun's famous skill and I remained under his treatment for nine weeks, but secured no benefit. All this time I had been growing worse. I had become entirely paralyzed from my waist down and had partly lost control of my hands. The pain was terrible, my legs felt as though they were freezing and my stomach would not retain food, and I fell away to 120 pounds. In the Albany hospital they put 17 big burns on my back one day with red hot irons and after a few days they put 14 more burns on and treated me with electricity, but I got worse rather than better; lost control of my bowels and water, and upon advice of the doctor, who said there was no hope for me, I was brought home, where it was thought that death would soon come to relieve me of my sufferings. Last September, while in this helpless and suffering condition, a friend of mine in Hamilton, Ont., called my attention to the statement of one John Marshall, whose case had been similiar to my own, and who had been cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

In this case Mr. Marshall, who is a prominent member of the Royal Templars of Temperance, had after four years of constant treatment by the most eminent Canadian physicians been pronounced incurable, and was paid the $1000 total dissability claim allowed by the order in such cases. Some months after Mr. Marshall began a course of treatment with Dr. Williams's Pink Pills; and after taking some 15 boxes was fully restored to health.

I thought I would try them and my wife sent for two boxes of the pills and I took them according to the directions given on the wrapper on each box. For the first few days the cold baths were pretty severe, as I was so very weak, but I continued to follow instructions as to taking the pills and treatment, and even before I had used up the two boxes of pills I began to feel beneficial effects from them. My pains were not so bad; I felt warmer; my head felt better; my food began to relish and agree with me; I could straighten up; the feeling began to come back into my limbs; I began to be able to get about on crutches; my eye came back again as good as ever, and now, after the use of eight boxes of the pills—at a cost of only $4,00—see—I can with the help of a cane only, walk all about the house and yard, can saw wood, and on pleasant days I walk down town. My stomach trouble is gone; I have gained 10 pounds; I feel like a new man, and when the spring opens I expect to be able to renew my organ and piano agency. I cannot speak in too high terms of Dr Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, as I know they saved my life after all the doctors had given me up as incurable."

Other citizens of Galway, seeing the wonderful cure of Mr. Quant by the Pink Pills for Pale People, are using them. Frederick Sexton, a sufferer from rheumatism, said he was finding great benefit from their use, and Mr. Schultz, who had suffered from chronic dysentery for years, said he had taken two boxes of the pills and was already cured.

Mr. Quant had also tried Faith cure, with experts of that treatment in Albany and Greenville, S. C., but with no beneficial results.

A number of the more prominent citizens of Galway, as Rev. C. E. Herbert, of the Presbyterian church; Prof. James E. Kelly, principal of the academy; John P. and Harvey Crouch, and Frank and Edward Willard, merchants, and many others to whom Mr. Quant and his so miraculous cure by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, are well known, were pleased to have the opportunity of bearing testimony to the high character of Mr. Quant, and of verifying the story of his recovery from the terrible affliction from which he had for so long a time been a sufferer.

Truly, the duty of the physician is not to save life, but to heal disease.

The remarkable result from the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in the case of Mr. Quant, induced the reporter to make further enquiries concerning them, and he ascertained that they are not a patent medicine in the sense in which that term is generally used, but a highly scientific preparation, the result of years of study and careful experiment. They have no rival as a blood builder and nerve restorer and have met with unparalleled success in the treatment of such diseases as paralysis, rheumatism, sciatica, St. Vitus' dance, palpitation of the heart, that tired feeling which affects so many, and all diseases depending upon a watery condition of the blood or shattered nerves.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood and restore the glow of health to pale or sallow cheeks. In the case of men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of whatever nature.

On further inquiry the writer found that these pills are manufactured by The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and Morristown, N. Y., and are sold in boxes, (never in bulk by the hundred) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., from either addresses. The price at which these pills are sold makes a course of treatment comparatively inexpensive as compared with other remedies, or medical treatment.

A HUMAN FERRET.

He Is an Expressman by Day and Ratcatcher by Night.

"There lives a man in our town" who is responsible for the death of many rats, says the Kansas City Times. By day he follows his humble calling as an expressman, and does not give evidence in actions or appearance of his sanguinary disposition. With the approach of night he becomes a different man. While by day he is Dr. Jekyll to the innumerable colonies of rats, at night he is to them a Mr. Hyde.

Night after night, regardless of the weather, he saunters forth with four assistant terriers, each of whom is a battle-scarred midnight hero of back alleys. From 8 o'clock until after 12 he walks up and down the alleys in the business section of the city and gives up his being to the joyful contemplation of his rat-killers at work.

When he sees four black shadows cut swiftly through the darkness and hears the dying squeak he knows that his self-imposed mission has been forwarded somewhat to success. Inasmuch as he has been killing rats in this fashion for several years, it may readily be seen that his record is up in the thousands. He is a tall, powerfully built man of middle age, and habitually wears a faded black cap, the visor of which he pulls down quite over his blue eyes.

He takes as much pride and enjoyment in his work as his four assistants do in the aggregate, and vows that he will keep it up until he has killed 100,000 of the rodents.

BOSTON METHODS.

He Got His Drink, but the Law Remained Intact.

He was a stranger in Boston, says the Herald. It was Sunday night, after a trip on the "ghost train" from New York. He wanted a drink, but knew not how or where to get it.

He was in a Puritanical city, quartered with some religious and temperance relatives, and he longed for the morrow or a glass of whiskey. His longing was of short duration. Within a stone's throw of Scollay Square he met a metropolitan friend who had been in Boston before.

Together they went to the nearest hotel restaurant.

"I don't want to eat, but drink," said the thirsty man, as he held back.

"Never fear; your want shall be supplied."

The waiter came, and the man who knew Boston looked at him with a knowing smile, and said: "Bring me one hard-boiled egg and a bottle of Bass's ale."

"Add a good bumper of whisky to that order for me," said the other.

"I can comply with the other for an egg and a bottle of beer, but"—turning to the late arrival—"I cannot serve you."

"And why?"

"Because you should have ordered something to eat. Furthermore, you should have ordered it before ordering the drink. That's the law."

"True," said the man acquainted with Boston: "the waiter has no alternative. If he should serve you now he would be discharged."

The new comer had to sit while his friend drank Bass and put the boiled egg into his pocket, to be thrown away when he had departed.

As soon as the thirsty traveler got out of the dining room he bolted for another hotel near by. He ordered a cracker, and then added, "and a glass of whisky." His thirst was satisfied. The law remained intact.

GULLS AS LOG-ROLLERS.

How They Secured a Scant Meal Composed of Barnacles.

In the water off the site of the old Hatch mill at the railroad wharves, says the Tacoma Herald, a bunch of logs has lain for a long time. The other day a lot of sea gulls alighted on them. Among the flock was a monster gull who seemed to be the captain, and who, as subsequent events revealed, possessed an intelligence not commonly attributed to sea gulls.

He walked alone to a particular log, stood over on one side of it close to the water, and then uttered peculiar cries. The other gulls followed him, and all stood over on one side of the log. The submerged side of the log was thick with barnacles. Under the combined weight of the gulls the log rolled to one side. Then following the lead of the big white captain, the gulls ran from side to side of the log as it rolled. Before long as they had the log rolling to the apparently desired pitch. The barnacles showed above the water, and the gulls would reach over and pick them as they came above the surface, all the time keeping the log rolling. It was a pretty hungry flock of gulls to pick at barnacles, but they wanted something to eat, and evidently they knew how to get it.

NEW RELIGIOUS PROPOSITION.

The Spire of the Church Doesn't Always Point to Heaven.

Andrew Wallace is one of the oldest and best-known residents of this city. Many years ago he was president of the state benevolent boards. It was while he was occupying that position that the late Dr. McIntire, superintendent of the Institution for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, asked the board to furnish a telescope and some other scientific instruments for the use of that school. The doctor was a strict member of the Presbyterian church, and orthodox all the way through. Mr. Wallace was a Universalist. "Doctor," said the latter, "you are an educated man and I am not. I want to ask you a question or two. Do you really think this world we inhabit is round and revolves on its axis once in every twenty-four hours?"

"Certainly," replied the doctor.

"And you believe there is a heaven and—and another place?"

"Assuredly."

"And that heaven is above us?"

"Yes."

"And the other place below us?"

"Yes."

"And the world turns over once every twenty-four hours?"

"Yes."

"Well, doctor, if that's the case doesn't it occur to you that the spire of your meeting house points to hades about half the time?"

The good doctor had no reply. Mr. Wallace was so well pleased with having vanquished him that the order for the desired instruments was given without delay.—Indianapolis Journal.

THE KHEDIVE STOPPED.

Tewfik, in His Haroun Alraschid Rambles, is Talked to.

The Khedive, oddly enough for an Oriental, did not smoke, with the result that the palace cigarette—invariably handed round with coffee—were notoriously the worst in Cairo, and except in the case of absolute strangers it was ludicrous to see how tobacco was avoided in his presence. He always carried a cigarette case, however, and delighted in offering it and little presents of money to the English sentries placed on guard around his palace when first Cairo was occupied by British troops. He loyed to tell stories of his experience with these guards.

An early riser, he was in the habit of either beginning his reading of official reports or walking in his garden in the cool sunrise hour. One morning, returning to the palace from a walk in the gardens of Ghizireh, he was stopped by a sentry.

"Yer can't go in 'ere you know," said the man of war, with the Briton's amiable contempt for the fat little "furiner."

"But I belong to the palace," faltered the Khedive, delighted.

"Oh. do yer? Got a good place?"

"Very good," said Tewfik, diffidently.

"Ah, yer look like it. Bustin' times, I suppose. Nothing to do and plenty to eat. I wouldn't mind serving your master. Would he stand six shillings a day? What sort of feller is he?

And then, alas! the sergeant coming round recognized and saluted the Khedive, to the vast discomfort of Thomas Atkins and to the chagrin of his Highness, who would fain have heard more about himself, and who probably had never received a more sincere offer of service.

DR. TILDEN, formerly chemist at the National Medical Museum, speaking of Guiteau, President Garfield's assassin, said that the assassin went to the scaffold in a semi-drunken condition.

The report says the accounts of the mayor's office, market clerk, superintendent of water works and health office have been audited and a deficiency discovered of $350,197.20.

REASONS WHY

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder Is The Best.

FIRSTLY.—It is the oldest Cream of Tartar Baking Powder in the world, and has stood the test of 40 years.

SECONDLY.—Its makers have never succumbed to the temptation to introduce ammonia or alum in their goods, for the purpose of cheapening the cost.

THIRDLY.—It is made from the purest Cream of Tartar, refined in the immense plant at Jersey City controlled by this company, by patented processes used by no other refiner.

FOURTHLY.—The governments of the United States and Canada have endorsed Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder after thorough examination, as have also the heads of our great universities, prominent physicians, boards of health and the public. It is used in the United States Army and Navy and in the cuisines of the most select clubs, hotels and private families.

FIFTHLY.—It is just what it is represented to be, viz: a pure Cream of Tartar powder and can stand on its record without any bolstering up by means of fraudulent certificates, or resorting to any other tricks practised—sometimes successfully—by other makers of so-called "absolutely pure" powders.

SUED BY A GIRL.

An Extraordinary Bit of Litigation in Progress at Oskaloosa, Iowa.

A Girl Charges Relatives With an Attempt to Make Her an Outcast.

OTTUMWA, IOWA, Special Telegram, March 28.—A case is on trial at Oskaloosa which has elicited the attention of the state generally because of the prominence of the parties involved and the unnatural state of family affairs it brings to light. Sometime since T. A. White and his father-in-law, J. L. Roberts, caused the latter's daughter Nannie, a young lady held in high esteem and prominent in a social way, to be brought before the commissioners of insanity for commitment to the state asylum. The young lady was released and pronounced perfectly sane. The case created an immense sensation.

Shortly after the trial the young woman's mother died, and then the father sent his daughter adrift, absolutely refusing to provide for her. None of the rest of her relatives would harbor her, and she was compelled to seek asylum with friends. She has now instituted a suit against her brother-in-law, White, and the case has been on trial for several days before a packed court. Ex-Judge Blanchard and ex-Congressman Lacey represent the plaintiff, while ex-Senator McCoy and G. W. Lafferty appear for the defense. The defendants stick to the insanity charge, and accuse the young woman of extreme brutality to her father, with beating him over the head and calling him vile names. She denies this, and makes countercharges of a most startling character, and avers that a systematic conspiracy has been entered into to defraud and make an outcast of her.

CLAIM-JUMPING.

A New System Successfully Adopted on the Sisseton Reserve.

BROWN'S VALLEY, Minn., Special, March 28.—It is beginning to leak out that large numbers of white men have driven onto the reservation quietly at points distant from the border towns, and through native agents have leased land from Indians who live near or adjoining certain favorable sections. By leasing these lands, or pretending to do so, they calculate to be near their claims on the reservation, and on the day of opening they will have a ready-built shack to move over onto the lands which they desire. The scheme was first suspected from the fact that the Indians are buying large quantities of lumber, tar paper, nails, etc. They have been buying so liberally that it was noticed, in a number of instances, the purchases were out of all proportion to the means of the persons, and suspicion was at once aroused. In some cases, it is said, that the claim-jumpers do not lease the land, but hire out to the Indians and furnish them the ready cash to buy the lumber, etc. When discovered on the reservation they are then entitled to reside there from the fact that they are proprietors of leased land, or hired hands to the Indian farmer.

The extent to which this is being carried on is not known at present. As the lands can be leased from the Indians at from $10 to $16 per quarter section per annum, however, it seems quite likely that this scheme may have been, or may be, extensively adopted to dodge Commissioner Morgan's order. There is no doubt that some of the leases which have been made from the Indians are bona fide, as large tracts of land are known to be leased to responsible parties, for range purposes, at from 5 to 25 cents per acre. The leases in some cases have been obtained from the Indians at less per quarter section than the taxes on deeded property. What will be the ultimate effect of this system of claim jumping can be but vaguely conjectured, as it will probably be very difficult to establish the line of demarcation between bona fide leases and leases for claim getting purposes.

NOT TO BE PAID.

The Forged Paper in Connection With the Painesville Bank Failure.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, March 28.—A gentleman intimately acquainted and associated in business with John Huntington of this city, who is now in Europe, in speaking of the Painesville bank failure, said:

No paper has been signed by either Mr. or Mrs. John Huntington since April, 1891, except a small amount now held by the State National bank. The entire amount never exceeded $150,000, and as this became due Mr. Huntington refused to renew the paper. These forged papers were given when the original genuine paper was taken up and sent to Mr. Huntington's business managers here, who supposed the notes were paid, being marked as customary when notes are taken up. This of course released Mr. Huntington, as the renewals were forgeries. The total amount of genuine paper was thus reduced to $75,000, for which Mr. Huntington is secured. Not one of the forged notes has or ever will be paid by Mr. Huntington or his representatives.

This is understood to be a notice from Huntington's representatives that no paper bearing his name will be paid.

ISN'T SAYING MUCH.

Gen. Greely Declares That the Rule Which He Violated Is a Dead Letter.

WASHINGTON, March 28.—Gen. Greely, the head of the signal service, was interviewed regarding the published statement that a court martial would probably be ordered to try charges of insubordination against him, based on his recent correspondence with Secretary Elkins and members of the committee on appropriations in opposition to placing the new military bureau of information under the immediate jurisdiction and control of the adjutant general's office.

"I have nothing to say about it," said Gen. Greely. "I addressed a letter to the secretary of war and failed to get what I wanted. That was an end of the matter. The Congressional Record will show my letter to the members of congress. As for the law which it is alleged I have violated, it is an old rule and one I think which has not been observed for twenty years. I have received no letter from any superior officer. I know nothing more about the matter."

A Well Known Editor Dies.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., March 28.—Dr. Morrison Munford, for twenty years editor of the Kansas City Times, died to-day. The cause of death was pleuro-pneumonia, which he contracted five weeks ago. He was fifty years old and had been actively engaged in the newspaper business since 1867, when he established a weekly paper in Tennessee. Dr. Munford's connection with the Times of this city terminated four months ago, when the syndicate which had obtained control of the stock voted him out. He at once made arrangements to start an evening paper, and a few days before it appeared he was taken ill. Dr. Munford was at one time wealthy, but died a bankrupt.

Get at It Again.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram.—The Democratic members of the committee on rules will report a special order shutting off filibustering upon the silver bill. This order will be either laid on the table or will be defeated on a direct vote, which will allow the silver bill to stand on the calendar with little or no prospect of being considered during the present session, or at least until after the presidential nomination and perhaps after the election.

BORROWE WAS BOOTED.

Not by Cuckold Drayton, but by Newcombe, the Financier.

NEW YORK, March 28.—It is said that Hallett Alsop Borrowe, the young man who would not fight J. Coleman Drayton, was in serious trouble once before through his attentions to a lady. He was not challenged this time, but was kicked out of the house and was hauled in by the police for being kicked. The complainant against Borrowe upon this former occasion was H. Victor Newcombe, the well known financier. Borrowe at some social function met Miss Newcombe Malcomb, the millionaire's daughter and presumably the inheritor of his wealth. That is supposed to have been the verdict most deeply impressed upon Borrowe's mind, for it was said that he at once set about devising plans to marry her, although Miss Newcombe at that time was barely more than a girl. She was flattered by the attentions which Borrowe began to pay her. Mr. Newcombe came to the conclusion that he was getting altogether too fresh, and although they had mutual friends in society he dropped him a gentle hint to be somewhat less frequent in his calls. To this, however, Borrowe paid but little attention. Then Mr. Newcombe warned him again, and Borrowe said he wanted to marry his daughter. Borrowe, as was learned, continued to visit Mr. Newcombe's house in his absence. Then it was that Mr. Newcombe went to the police, and two detectives were put on the case. That night while one of them was watching Mr. Newcombe's house, the door opened and Borrowe, who had been inside, was kicked out.

Coleman Drayton's friend, B. L. Upshur, who on the arrival of the Majestic last Wednesday, met Mr. Drayton at quarantine, and in anticipation of the much-talked of duel tendered Mr. Drayton his services as second, was arrested early this morning, on a charge of being drunk and disorderly, by the detective of the Hotel Brunswick. He was taken from the hotel and locked up in a station house. Later in the morning he was arraigned before Justice Grady and discharged.

STRICT CLOTURE.

It Will Be Resorted to on Behalf of the Bland Bill.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 28.—The rule for a strict cloture on the free silver bill will be reported to-morrow in all probability. It will provide for an immediate vote, no dilatory motions to be allowed. The Republicans will support this because they want a direct vote upon the Bland bill. The Republicans will not assist the anti-free coinage Democrats to defeat the bill by an indirect vote, nor will they assist in recommitting the bill or in substituting a provision for a monetary conference. The policy of the Republicans is to have a square issue on the bill as it stands in order to have it before the people in this presidential and congressional year for their decision. As matters stand now the Southern Democrats can say they did their best to pass the bill, and the Northern Democrats can say they prevented its passage and prevented their party from committing itself to the free coinage heresy.

Mr. Catchings returned to Washington from Mississippi to-night and to-morrow the committee on rules will meet and agree on the phraseology and intent of the special order. Speaker Crisp says it will be called up for action in the house Tuesday morning.

It is understood that it will provide for a vote on the silver bill and pending amendments immediately after the special order is adopted, certainly not later than Wednesday. The friends of the bill and its opponents recognize that

North Dakota to Be Heard From.

WASHINGTON, Special, March 28.—It is stated that the wool growers of North Dakota are taking some interest in the free wool bill which is now pending in the house and that it will not be long before the North Dakota delegation in both houses will receive emphatic instructions to vote against this bill, which would strike a blow at a large industry recently inaugurated in that state.

Bayonet vs. Squatter.

CHICAGO, March 28.—The Thirteenth infantry and the Fifth and a part of the Seventh cavalry will soon be ordered to the Cheyenne and Arapahoe reservations to clear the squatters off the land before the throwing open of the reservations for settlement. GOD OF THE STARS.

"Seek Him That Maketh the Seven Stars and Orion" the Command of Amos, the Peasant.

Dr. Talmage Takes This for His Text, Which He Says Is as Appropriate Now as Then

BROOKLYN, N. Y.,—[Special.]—In this sermon Dr. Talmage traverses wide realms of thought to teach useful every-day lessons, based on the text, Amos v:8: "Seek him that maketh the seven stars and Orion."

A country farmer wrote this text—Amos of Tekoa. He plowed the earth and thrashed the grain by a new thrashing machine just invented, as formerly the cattle trod out the grain. He gathered the fruit of the sycamore tree, and sacrificed it with an iron comb just before it was getting ripe, as it was necessary and customary in that way to take from it the bitterness. He was the son of a poor shepherd, and stuttered; but before the stammering rustic Philistines and Syrians and Phœnicians and Mobites and Ammonites and Edomites and Israelites trembled.

Moses was a law-giver, Daniel was a prince, Isaiah a courtier, and David a king; but Amos, the author of my text, was a peasant, and, as might be supposed, nearly all his parallelisms are pastoral, his prophecy full of the odor of new-mown hay, and the rattle of locust, and the rumble of carts with sheaves, and the roar of wild beasts devouring the flock while the shepherd came out in their defense. He watched the herd by day, and by night inhabited a booth made out of bushes, so that through these branches he could see the stars all night long, and was more familiar with them than we who have tight roofs to our houses, and hardly ever see the stars except of the great towns. But at seasons of the year when the herds were in special danger, he would stay out in the open field all through the darkness, his only shelter the curtain of the night-heaven, with the stellar embroideries and silvered tassels of lunar light.

What a life of solitude, all alone with his herds! Poor Amos! and at 12 o'clock at night, hark to the wolf's bark, and the lion's roar, and the bear's growl, and the owl's te-whit-te-who, and the serpent's hiss, as he unwittingly steps too near while moving through the thickets! So Amos, like other herdsmen, got the habit of studying the map of the heavens, because it was so much of the time spread out before him. He noticed some stars advancing and others receding. He associated their dawn and setting with certain seasons of the year. He had poetic nature, and he read night by night, and month by month, and year by year, the poem of the constellations, divinely rythmic. But two rosettes of stars especially attracted his attention while seated on the ground, or lying on his back under the open scroll of the midnight heavens—the Pleiades, or Seven Stars, and—Orion. The former group this rustic, prophet associated with the spring, as it rises about the first of May. The latter he associated with the winter, as it comes to the meridian in January. The Pleiades or Seven Stars, connected with all sweetness and joy; Orion, the herald of the tempest. The ancients were the more apt to study the physiognomy and juxtaposition of the heavenly bodies, because they thought they had a special influence upon the earth; and perhaps they were right. If the moon every few hours lifts and lets down the tides of the Atlantic Ocean, and the electric storms of the sun, by all scientific admission, effect the earth, why not the stars have proportionate effect.

And there are some things which make me think that it may not have been all superstition which connected the movements and appearance of the heavenly bodies with GREAT MORAL EVENTS ON EARTH.

Did not a meteor run on evangelistic errand on the first Christmas night, and designate the rough cradle of our Lord? Did not the stars in their course fight against Sisera? Was it merely coincidental that before the destruction of Jerusalem the moon was eclipsed for twelve consecutive nights? Did it merely happen so that a new star appeared in constellation Cassiopeia, and then disappeared just before King Charles IX. of France, who was responsible for St. Bartholomew massacre, died? Was it without significance that in the days of the Roman Emperor Justinian war and famine were preceded by the dimness of the sun, which for nearly a year gave no more light than the moon, although there were no clouds to obscure it?

Astrology, after all, may have been something more than a brilliant heathenism. No wonder that Amos of the text, having heard these two anthems of the stars, put down the stout, rough staff of the herdsman and took into his brown hand, and cut and knotted fingers the pen of a prophet, and advised the recreant people of his time to return to God, saying: "Seek Him that maketh the Seven Stars and Orion." This command which Amos gave 785 years B. C., is just as appropriate for us, 1892 A. D.

In the first place, Amos saw, as we must see, that the God who made the Pleiades and Orion must be

THE GOD OF ORDER.

It was not so much a star here and a star there that impressed the inspired herdsman, but seven in one group, and seven in the other group. He saw that night after night and season after season and decade after decade, they had kept step of light, each one in its own place, a sisterhood never clashing and never contesting precedence. From the time Hesoid called the Pleiades the "seven daughters of Atlas," and Virgil wrote in his Æneid of "Stormy Orion" until now, they have observed the order established for their coming and going: order written not in manuscript that may be pigeon-holed, but with the hand of the Almighty on the dome of the sky, so that all nations may read it. Order. Persistent order. Sublime order. Omnipotent order.

What a sedative to you and me, to whom communities and nations sometimes seem going pell-mell, and world ruled by some fiend at hap-hazard, and in all directions maladministration! The God who keeps seven worlds in right circuit for six thousand years can certainly keep all the affairs of individuals and nations and continents in adjustment. Oh, be at peace with the God who made all that and controls all that—the wheel of the constellations turning in the wheel of galaxies for thousands of years without the breaking of a cog or the slipping of a hand or the snap of an axel. For your placidity and comfort through the Lord Jesus Christ I charge you, "Seek him that maketh the Seven Stars and Orion."

Again, Amos saw, as we must see, that the God who made these two archipelagoes of stars

MUST BE AN UNCHANGING GOD.

"There has been no change in the stellar appearance in this herdman's life-time, and his father, a shepherd, reported to him that there had been no change in his life-time. And these two clusters hang over the celestial arbor now just as they were the first night that they shone on the Edenic bowers, the same as when the Egyptians build the Pyramids from the top of which to watch them, the same as when the Chaldeans calculated the eclipse, the same as when Elihu, according to the Book of Job, went out to study the aurora borealis, the same under Ptolemaic system and Copernichn system, the same from Calisthenes to Pythagoras and from Pythagoras to Herschel. Surely, a changeless God must have fashioned the Pleiades and Orion! Oh, what an anodyne amid the ups and downs of life, and the flux and reflux of the tides of prosperity, to know that we have a changeless God, the same yesterday, today and forever."

Again, Amos saw, as we must see, that the God who made these two beacons of the Oriental night sky must be a God of love and kindly warning. The Pleiades rising in mid-sky said to all the herdsmen and shepherds and husbandmen: "Come out and enjoy the mild weather, and cultivate your gardens and fields." Orion, coming in winter, warned them to prepare for tempest. All navigation was regulated by these two constellations. The one said to shipmaster and crew: "Hoist sail for the sea and gather merchandise from other lands." But Orion was the storm-signal, and said: "Reef sail, make things snug, or put into harbor, for the hurricanes are getting their wings out." As the Pleiades were the sweet evangels of the spring, Orion was the warning prophet of the winter.

Oh, now I get the best view of God I ever had! There are two kinds of sermons I never want to preach—the one that presents God so kind, so indulgent, so lenient, so imbecile that men may do what they will against him, and fracture his every law, and put the pry of their impertinence and rebellion under his throne, and while they are spitting in his face and stabbing at his heart, he takes them up in his arms and kisses their infuriated brow and cheek, saying, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." The other kind of sermon I never want to preach is the one that represents God as all and with red hot pitch forks tossing the humun race into paroxysms of infinite agony. The sermon that I am now preaching believes in a God of loving, kindly warning, the God of spring and winter, the God of the Pleiades and Orion.

You must remember that the winter is just as important as the spring. Let one winter pass without frost to kill vegetation and ice to bind the rivers and snow to enrich our fields, and then you will have to enlarge your hospitals and your cemeteries. "A green Christmas makes a fat graveyard," was the old proverb. Storms to purify the air. Thermometer at 10 degrees above zero to tone up the system. December and January just as important as May and June. I tell you we need the storms of life as much as we do the sunshine. There are more men ruined by prosperity than by adversity. If we had our way in life, before this we would have been impersonations of selfishness and worldliness and disgusting sin, and puffed up until we would have been the like of Julius Cæsar, who was made by sycophants to believe that he was divine, and that the freckles on his face were as the stars of the firmament.

One of the swiftest trans-atlantic voyages made last summer by our swiftest steamer was because she had a stormy wind abaft, chasing her from New York to Liverpool. But to those going in the opposite direction the storm was a buffeting and a hindrance. It is a bad thing to have a storm ahead, pushing us back, but and aiming toward heaven, the storms of life will only chase us the sooner into the harbor.

And I am glad that so many texts call us to look off to other worlds, many of them larger and grander and more resplendent. "Look there," says Job, "at Mazaroth and Arcturus and his sons!" "Look there," says St. John, "at the moon under Christ's feet!" "Look there," says Joshua, "at the sun standing still above Gibeon!" "Look there," says Moses, "at the sparkling firmament!" "Look there," says Amos, the herdsman, "at the Seven Stars and Orion!" Don't let us be so sad about those who shove off from this world under Christly pilotage. Don't let us be so agitated about our own going off this little barge or sloop or canal-boat of a world to get on some "Great Eastern" of the heavens. Don't let us persist in wanting to stay in this barn, this shed, this outhouse of a world, when all the King's palaces already occupied by many of our best friends are swinging wide open their gates to let us in.

Oh, how this widens and lifts and stimulates our expectation! How little it makes the present, and how stupendous it makes the future! How it consoles us about our pious dead, who instead of being boxed up and under the ground have the range of as many rooms as there are worlds, and welcome everywhere, for it is the Father's house, in which there are many mansions! Oh, Lord God of the Seven Stars and Orion, how can I endure the transport, the ecstasy, of such a vision! I must obey my text and seek him. I will seek him. I seek him now, for I call to mind that it is not the material universe that is most valuable, but the spiritual, and that each of us has a soul worth more than all the worlds which the inspired herdsman saw from his booth on the hills of Tekoa.

Brownie.

Once upon a time, oh, ever so many years, ago, there was a little boy who was so dark that everyone called him Brownie. He looked just like those little fellows whose pictures we all love so much, and who do ever so many funny things to make us laugh.

Brownie went out shopping one day with his mamma, and was very much pleased with the cash-boys he saw in the stores, and he thought how lovely it would be if he could go and be a cash-boy himself and get all the money they got.

So he asked his papa when he got home that night if he couldn't be a cash-boy in a big store, and run around and do errands and earn lots and lots of dollars the way they did, and of course his papa said he could if he wanted to. Brownie's papa used to let him do almost anything he wished.

Dear me, how happy Brownie was when his papa said this! He went down stairs and told his friend the cook about it. He whispered his great joy to his little pug-dog, and even went so far as to make up his mind what he should buy with his first dollar.

"When do you want to begin?" asked papa.

"Right off," said Brownie.

"All right," said papa. "You may begin to-morrow morning. You must tell Mary to wake you up at six o'clock and have your breakfast ready at half-past six, so that you may start down to the store in time to be there by eight o'clock."

"And John can bring the carriage for me, can't he?" asked Brownie.

"Oh no, indeed!" replied papa. "You will have to go down in the horse-cars. It would never do for a cash-boy to go down town in a carriage. And, then mamma, you needn't have dinner until seven after this instead of half-past six, because Brownie won't get home much before seven."

"I'll be home before that, papa," said Brownie. "I'll hurry up and get through by three o'clock."

"They wouldn't let you do that," papa said. "You'll have to stay until six o'clock until the holiday-times, and then they'll keep you down there until nine or ten o'clock. Of course it will make you very sleepy to do that, but after awhile you won't mind it so much."

"Can I take my rocking-chair with me?" asked Brownie.

"Oh, dear me, no!" said papa. "You won't have time to use your rocking-chair. Why, you will be on your feet all the time."

Brownie thought a minute, and then his face brightened up, and he said, "Papa, I know what."

"What," asked papa.

"I guess I'll stay a little boy, with nothing to do but play, a little while longer."

"That is a good idea," said papa, with a smile, and so Brownie didn't become a cash-boy.—Harper's Young People.

Enemies in the Air.

If our eyes were microscopes, what a world of wonders, and even of terrors, the atmosphere would appear to be? Even air that is apparently pure contains a great number of microscopic floating particles. There is dust that has risen from the ground, and been transplanted from afar by the winds; there is powderly matter that has been ejected from the interior of the earth by volcanoes; there are minute particles of meteoritic matter that come floating down out of interstellar space, and there is a great variety of living germs and organisms, some of which produce diseases and death.

The investigations that are going on concerning the origin of the influenza now afflicting mankind in various quarters of the globe have led some men of science to conclude that a micro-organism, or bacillus, of some kind, which lives and is diffused through the air, is the cause of this most troublesome disease.

But even a bacillus, so small that the utmost powers of the microscope are taxed to make it visible, must have something to live on, or it will perish.

In absolutely pure air it could not survive, but Doctor Symes Thompson makes the interesting suggestion that minute particles of organic dust floating in the air may serve as rafts for it to live on.

What a strange picture this forms in the imagination! Particles of matter, too small to be discerned with the naked eye, floating through the atmosphere, and bearing like a microscopic fleet, uncountable millions of organisms, whose combined attack suffices to render a large fraction of the human race miserable!

But knowledge is power, and the more we learn about our microscopic enemies in the air, the better prepared are we to resist their assaults.

Hereditary Knowledge.

A three-year-old, whose father, two grandfathers and a great-grandfather are physicians, was entertaining herself one day by playing doctor to her dolls. The nurse kept the young physician going on a round of calls from doll to doll, and writing prescriptions in her bayish hieroglyphics.

At last the weary little body climbed into an arm-chair, and lay back for a moment's rest. The nurse, fearing lest the slighest diversion should turn the active little brain toward something that would demand more of her attention sought to reawaken interest in the dolls by a very urgent telephonic summons.

The little doctor straightened up at the tling-tling of the imaginary bell, and resting her elbow on the arm of the chair and making a receiver of her dimpled hand, asked what was wanted.

She was informed that Jenny Purdy needed her services at once. With a sigh of impatience, she gathered her little body together as if for a plunge out of the big chair; and then a look of intelligence passed over her face, and she settled back with this pithy message.

"Tell Miss Purdy de doctor tan't tome; he's busy sittin in his office."

Exact.

John Ericsson had not only genius, but "immense capacity for taking pains." All his work was so exactly done that he could demand from workmen the most rigid observance of details in the drawings furnished for their guidance, without fear that they might go astray.

"When the steamer "Columbia" was built, its engines were put in according to his designs. It was customary at that time to get the length of the piston-rod from the engine itself, and as a man was one day engaged in measuring it with a long baton, Captain Ericsson chanced to go on board at that moment, and, going up to the workman, he called out,—

"What are you doing there, sir?"

"Getting the length of the piston-rod, sir."

"Is it not on the drawing?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then why do you come here with sticks? Go and get the length from the drawing. I do not want you to bring sticks when the drawing gives the size."

At another time a workman was endeavoring to put in the engines of a steamship, and found great difficulty with a small connection which he described as being "crooked as a dog's hind leg." Finally, he went to Ericsson and informed him that the rod could not be put in place.

"Is it right in the drawing?" was the query.

"Yes, sir."

"Then it will go in."

And on another trial it did. The masterbrain had left nothing to be supplied by the ingenuity of others.—Sel.

Seeing Her Diamonds Again.

A beautiful incident is told of the Princess Eugenie, sister of the king of Sweden, which strikingly illustrates the pleasure and satisfaction to be gained from earnestly seeking to help others. We give it as told by the Christian Weekly, together with the words of praise that are well-merited by the noble Swedish princess:

The princess is most devout and enthusiastic in her benevolence, and has consecrated her time and wealth and personal efforts to the direction of hospitals, and to the spread of religious truth among her destitute countrymen. She spends her summers at a villa called "Friedheim," or the Home of Peace. Around it she has reared asylums for orphan children and beautified the grounds with trees, walks, and flowers. She is the directress of several societies for providing employment for poor women; she has opened schools for destitute girls. On the Sabbath she has an evangelical service at her villa for her many guests and neighbors.

When the Princess Eugenie built her hospital, she found her ready funds inadequate; so she sold her jewels to finish and furnish the building.

One day she visited the hospital, and the tears of gratitude rolled down the cheeks of a poor invalid as she came to his bedside.

The happy princess was so melted by his tears that she exclaimed,—

"Ah, now I see my diamonds again!"

Letting Kindness Rule.

It is not every one who can put aside at the same time both the selfish hope of personal advancement and the inherent respect of humanity for the influential, and let only kindly benevolence rule in their place. The great English surgeon, John Abernethy, could do this, and this fact, while it proved the nobility of the man, also explained the cause of the universal esteem in which he was held by people of all classes.

The great physician was so benevolent that he would almost always attend a poor patient before he would a rich one. On one occasion he was just stepping into his carriage to visit a rich duke, when a pressing request came to see a sufferer who was without means to tender a fee.

"I cannot go to him at present," said Abernethy.

"If you cannot go at once, it will be needless to go at all," said the messenger.

The surgeon stopped the carriage and inquired the poor man's address. The street and number were given.

"Drive there immediately, coachman," ordered the surgeon, "the duke must wait. Besides, he can command the services of twenty physicians."

It was a small thing to do, perhaps, but would every man have done it?

The Bells of Japan.

The bells of Japan are among its loveliest posessions. One of the sweetest of them rang out many times every day into the waiting air in this faraway little city. Its tone was intensely thrilling and pathetic. The bells are not sounded by a clapper within, but are struck from the outside by a sort of wooden arm or battering-ram. Being withdrawn to the proper distance and released, it strikes the bell once; and the strokes are allowed to succeed one another only with a dignified and stately regularity. Tradition says the finest bells have silver in their composition, which may account for their deep and wonderful sweetness. Whether this be so or not, the bells make a profound impression upon all sensitive or musical organizations heretofore accustomed to the more discordant church bells of a newer civilization.—St Nicholas.

Three Important Things.

Three things to love: courage, gentleness, affection. Three things to admire: intellectual power, dignity and gracefulness. Three things to hate: cruelty, arrogance and ingratitude. Three things to delight in: beauty, frankness and freedom. Three things to wish for: health, friends and a cheerful spirit. Three things to like: cordiality, good-humor and mirthfulness. Three things to avoid: idleness, loquacity and flippant jesting. Three things to cultivate: good books, good friends and good humor. Three things to contend for: honor, country and friends. Three things to govern: temper, tongue and conduct. Three things to think about: life, death and eternity.—Ex.

The Sarcastic Giraffe.

KILLING IN AUSTRALIA.

How Vile White Men Poisoned the Black Natives.

The aborigines of Australia were exterminated by poison as well as by bullets. I can well remember when a child listening to an old Moreton bay settler giving an account to a number of admiring auditors of the manner in which he had "dosed" a number of the savages. They had been the cause of a good deal of trouble among his sheep and cattle and of constant alarm to the whites residing on his station. So he determined to teach them a lesson, says a New York Recorder writer.

Under pretense of a desire to renew friendly relations he sent a message to the tribe that he required a number of able-bodied men from among them to come and strip bark to roof some new huts he was about to build. He promised to feed them well, and they were to have unlimited supply of damper and beef. The place of meeting was appointed in the neighborhood of a stringy bark mountain. He would himself take out the flour and bake the damper.

The time had come, the blacks arrived, and the good white man as they now thought had brought a sack of flour with other provisions.

In anticipation of the feast the blacks scattered about and commenced the work of stripping bark, while their good white man baked. Not the slightest suspicion of poison entered into the minds of the blacks. They gathered up for the great feast, after putting in a morning's work, commenced to eat ravenously, and the white man, anxious that they should eat so much that they would never want to eat again, urged them to eat more and more. Soon the effects told. One jumped up with a spasm, then another, and soon the word went round. "The white man has poisoned the damper."

Maddened with agony and rage, they rushed for their enemy, who had already mounted his horse, but only barely escaped by galloping full speed away. I heard this white man describe how, a few days after, upon coming back to the spot, the scene all around was like a chamber of horrors. The damper had only too well done its work.

In traveling about the bush I have often seen skeletons, skulls and the scattered bones of dead blacks who had fallen victims to the anger of the white man.

LOUIS CYR'S ENORMOUS LIFT.

How the Modern Hercules Raised Nearly Three Hundred Pounds Above His Head.

Louis Cyr attempted to beat Eugene Sandow's record of lifting a 269-pound dumb bell at the Royal Aquarium, London, recently. Cyr secured the largest bell that could be obtained and loaded it up until the beam tipped 273¼ pounds. Archie Sinclair, the noted heel-and-toe walker, was the clerk of the scales. Cyr grasped the bell and lifted it on to his thigh, then with a mighty effort he raised the immense piece of iron to his left shoulder. It was quickly shifted to the right shoulder, and then the big bell was gradually raised in the air, and the athlete's body followed the weight. Before the body could be got perfectly straight the bell turned in Cyr's hand, and the big piece had to be dropped to the floor. He tried it again and again, but failed.

A few days afterward Cyr again attempted the feat and was successful. He put up the bell at the first trial. Grasping the 273¼ pounds of iron with the right hand alone, he raised it to his thigh and then got it to his shoulder. Then, getting a good grip on the bell, he slowly pressed it in the air until the arm was perfectly straight and the athlete's body was erect. It was a splendid and clean performance, and beat his American feat of putting up 265 pounds. Cyr was not content with this performance, but he assayed another one, namely, that of elevating a bar bell weighing 301 pounds, using two hands in the achievement of this new record. The bell was raised from the floor to the chest with one motion, and then slowly pressed to arm's stretch above the head. After Cyr had taken a little rest he tried two more records. With one sweep from the ground he raised to arm's stretch above his head a dumb bell weighing 174½ pounds. The right hand only was used. Then the same feat was successfully tried with the left hand, making two more world's records.

NO LAW IN PERSIA.

Rich People Are Imprisoned and Tortured

An Englishman who has just returned from an extended sojourn in Persia, gives the following picture of life in that country:

"The shah is nearly played out. He drinks a bottle of brandy a day. He consumes hasheesh and opium freely. No weight can be attached to any rumors of reform proceeding from his majesty or his present ministers. The mask is finally off. Europe has been fooled. The shah's butler, the son of his cook, the grandson of a slave bought for £10 in the open market, is now sole and irresponsible Grand Vizier. In Persia there is no law and not a single court of justice. No enterprise is possible. No one dare own that he is rich. The rich bury their wealth. They are seized, tortured, imprisoned; in many cases they die without revealing their treasure.

"All that is respectable in persia stands aloof, goes into exile, or hides away to escape the intolerable degradation and misery of the times. A Persian gentleman the other day, not so much smarting under personal injuries as rendered desperate by the hopeless misery of the times, forced himself before the shah, and committed suicide in his presence. There is a noble element left in Persia. The people are sound, but, up to within the last year or two, hopeless, and without organization. Most of their princes and nobles—the men of letters, and above all the great Moolahs, including the most learned of them all, Sheik Djemla-ed-din, now in England along with the shah's own cousin, His Serenity Fakh-ol-molk—are in open opposition."—Pall Mall Gazette.

CROOKSTON, MINN

Easter Bonnets and bock beer are coming blessings which make life full of anticipatory pleasures.

Prince George of Wales has an allowance of $75,000 a year, the death of his brother having placed an extra income of $50,000 at his disposal.

Some years ago a small Jewish colony was founded on the Gulf of Akaba by a German. It proved a complete failure, and the colonists have been requested to leave.

Professor Whitcomb, pastor of a Universalist church in Washington, has resigned, and rumors are current that he means to enter the Episcopal priesthood. Already he has been baptized by Bishop Paret.

The late Dr. Junker, the African explorer, put more faith in Livingstone's than in Stanley's way of advancing through the Dark Continent. He never killed a native, and for the most part traveled without a weapon, but still achieved what he wanted.

Shakespeare has no more steady reader and apt quoter than Prince Bismarck, but the old man does not allow his admiration for the "divine William" to interfere with his duty to keep his weather eye open for that other William.

An eccentric French woman has left a bequest of $100,000 to be given to the man who with five hundred companions will penetrate further into the interior of Africa than any other explorers have done. What an opening for the third party.

The Duchess of Connaught and her daughter Patricia are under medical treatment for the prevailing influenza which has its grip upon princess just as mercilessly as it has upon peasants.

There should be considerable charity toward the Emperor of Germany. He is certainly suffering from a diseased ear and as certainly his reason is affected by it. What Germany now needs is a law which will permit it to superannuate afflicted monarchs.

Carlyle Harris, condemned wife murderer, is writing poetry in the Tombs. Can't his electrocution be expedited somewhat? There's no telling when a lot of the stuff may run out through a keyhole or otherwise find its way abroad to add to the perils and inconvenience of street travel in the metropolis.

Rudyard Kipling's first impressions of the United States, received mainly in San Francisco, made a great stir in the critical world. They did not help people who live in the United States to form a very favorable impression of Mr. Kipling. He is now writing a new series of impressions, received mainly in New York.

It is a common saying that a woman's most relentless enemy is one of her own sex. The pathetic appeal made by Mrs. Hargreaves, however, in behalf of Mrs. Osborne would seem to disprove all that. Had Mrs. Osborne been successful in her original design she would have cast the stigma upon the Hargreaves family which she herself is now obliged to bear.

Tennessee has six surviving ex-Governors, and they all reside within the borders of the state. The oldest of them all is Senator Isham G. Harris, who has been in politics longer than any other man in the State, and whose career links the ante-bellum days with the present. He has passed nearly sixty years in office, and for thirty years he has sat in the Senate.

It is maintained by a distinguished physician that the young girl of this generation is more robust and plump than she of any previous generation for two hundred years. This is largely due, no doubt, to the fact that she does not squander any of her vitality in thanking gentlemen for small courtesies, as was the custom of old, and evinces a disposition to take the advantage of all her privileges.

It is rare, and as edifying as it is rare, that we see such a striking instance of personal piety as that exhibited in New Orleans recently by one of the gentlemen engaged in the slugging duel in that city. He protested from the start that it was not well to enter on the fight on Ash Wednesday, and now he is convinced that he was beaten because he forgot to go to church in the morning.

The birth of a son a few days ago to Madame Leon Daudet brought great joy to her father-in-law, Alphonse Daudet, the celebrated French author. The young woman, it will be remembered, was Mlle. Jeanne Hugo, the granddaughter and favorite of Victor Hugo. The young heir is to bear the name of Charles, after Madame Daudet's father, the first husband of the present Madame Lockroy.

WASHINGTON.

Mr. Mills is elected senator by the Texas legislature.

The Bering sea difficulty becomes graver yet. There is danger of a naval engagement if Lord Salisbury does not see his mistake.

Uncle Sam has everything to gain and nothing to lose in the determination of the boundary between the United States and Mexico. Southern California, Arizona and New Mexico will remain intact, and it is possible that many thousand acres of valuable land will have to be ceded by Mexico.

The house committee on foreign affairs ordered a favorable report on the bill introduced by Mr. Blount, of Georgia, providing for the appointment of three representatives of the United States to the Columbian historical exposition at Madrid in 1892.

PERSONAL MENTION.

George M. Pettis, the famous authority on whist is dead in Boston.

Mrs. Leslie Carter, the actress, who before her marriage with the wealthy Chicago attorney was one of the belles of Dayton, Ohio, has been granted a rehearing by the Illinois supreme court in the divorce case in which she was defeated.

George Shepard Page, one of the most conspicuous figures on Wall street, and known as the "millionaire chemist," has been committed to an asylum for the insane. His mind is broken down by worriment, superinduced by a severe attack of grip.

UNFORTUNATE EVENTS.

A deadly epidemic among horses in Montana is reported.

Another severe storm prevails in New York State and trains are blockaded.

The custom house at St. Johns N. B., has been destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $300,000.

In a church near Fuller, Ark., Sunday, Robert Doss and Jefferson Jones fought with Winchesters, and both were mortally wounded.

Five children of John Lahey are burned to death in their house near Springfield, Minn., and Lahey is thought to be fatally burned.

William Beach, Simon Carney, Peter Sheldon, John Brown, Bert Cook and Emanuel Hunt were killed and several others injured by a boiler explosion in East Jordon, Mich., recently.

By an explosion in the Laclede fire brick works in St. Louis, Joseph Beckley, John Dubuchy, Reinold Deidecke and Larry Hussy were killed, Frank Seger and George Inman fatally injured and two others badly hurt.

Judge Van Brunt has signed an order directing that Edward M. Field, indicted for forgery, be committed to an insane asylum, where he will be watched to see if he is shamming.

Burt Smith, cashier, and Robert Whittaker, bookkeeper for Lamson Bros. & Co., a Chicago board of trade firm, are accused of losing $60,000 for their firm by buying wheat on their own account and putting it down to the firm.

The fire which started in the Anderlnis colliery near Brussels has at last been extinguished. The efforts to rescue the bodies of those who lost their lives in the mines, which was frustrated by the breaking out of the fire, have been resumed. There are yet 122 bodies in the pit.

The general store of Mrs. Susan Stonehouse at Escanaba, Mich., was completely destroyed by fire. Fire also destroyed Justice Stonehouse's office, burning all the records. The Sutherland Shoe Company, of Milwaukee, had just placed a large stock of boots and shoes in the store, all of which were destroyed. It is rumored that the fire was of incendiary origin.

SINS AND SINNERS.

Capt H. H. Williams, of the American ship Frederick Billings, was on trial before the United States commissioners at San Francisco for cruelty at sea.

At Hot Springs, Ark., H. E. Parksdale, a leading Danville, La., lawyer and prosecuting attorney committed sucide by shooting himself. No cause is assigned for the deed.

The Pennsylvania board of pardons, recommended a pardon in the cases of John A. Mellon, and William H. Porter, the Beaver Star publishers, who were convicted of libeling Senator Quay.

Hannah Collins, aged forty-one years, committed suicide at Brooklyn by taking paris green. She was married only seven weeks, but her married life has been filled with a series of quarrels which culminated in her husband deserting her.

D. E. Gudell, the confidential bookkeeper of the large pork packing house of Coffin & Fletcher, of Indianapolis, has disappeared. There is a shortage in his accounts of about $7,000. His property has been turned over to Coffin & Fletcher, and this will almost secure them against actual loss.

Frederick Hengel, aged 40, residing at Forty-eighth and Brown streets, Philadelphia, committed suicide by placing his head under a steam hammer at the establishment of Pearce, Kirsch & Co., manufacturers of jewelry, Thirty-seventh and Market streets, where deceased was employed as a gold beater.

FOREIGN NUGGETS.

A formidable rebellion breaks out in Venezuela.

An avelanche is reported in Berlin on the Reutte, by which five persons lost their lives.

The porters at the graneries in Berlin have struck for an increase of 50 per cent in their wages.

A bill is introduced in parliament for the creation of a legislative body for Scotland.

Mme Clemenceau's divorce from her husband, the well known Radical deputy, is publicly announced.

The anti-foreign spirit has been suppressed in Chang-ha, China, but it is still rampant in other Human towns.

A paris bank fails because of unfortunate speculation. One director commits suicide, two decamp and another is under arrest.

A semi-official dispatch from St. Petersburg denies that there have been fresh bank failures there or any embarrassment requiring treasury help.

Three young Englishmen were badly maltreated by policemen in Rio Janeiro, and trouble between Brazil and Great Britain is likely to result.

The friends of Mrs. Florence Ethel Osborne have good grounds for the fear that she will not live to serve out her sentence. She is reported in a comatose condition.

Arthur Goring Thomas, the well known writer of operas, committed suicide in London recently by throwing himself in front of a train.

Marc Juneau, a French demimondaine living in Guayaquil, Ecuador, has given birth to seven children; all perfect and healthy.

Joseph Joyce, a supporter of the Parnellite section of the Irish parliamentary party, was sentenced at Cork to be hanged for the murder of Patrick O'Leary, an anti-Parnellite.

The British naval estimates provide for commencing three new battle ships and ten torpedo vessels, besides an appropriation of £2,000,000 for completing ships now being built.

The Russian government has sanctioned the demand of Geo. Gourko, the governor of Russian Poland, for a large credit wherewith to strengthen the fortresses of Warsaw, Modlin and Kowal.

Despite vigorous protests from British Columbia against the prohibition of the importation of American live cattle into that province, an order in council enforcing prohibition has been issued.

The British steamer West Indian, from Chilean ports for San Francisco with a cargo of coffee valued at $500,000, has been wrecked off the coast of San Salvador. An earthquake is said to have caused the disaster.

The Abercarne Tin Plate works, in Monmouth, have been closed. At the Abertillery works the operatives have received a month's notice of the close of contracts. Three thousand hands will thus be thrown out of employment.

Advices from Massowah, the Italian colony on the African coast of the Red sea, state that Capt. Bettinai, an Indian officer, was killed by bandits while returning to Fort Arjobannes. An Italian force from the fort pursued and dispersed the bandits and killed the chief.

The report of the Reichsbank for 1891 shows the total stock of coin held by that institution to be 893,700,000 marks. The separate totals of the gold and silver are not given, but the amount of silver is estimated at 200,000,000 marks. Experts have estimated that the gold held in Austria-Hungary amounts to 450,000,000 marks.

T. P. O'Connor's Sunday Sun says editorially that the events in the house of commons during the past week seem to indicate that the Tories are a little penitent for having treated their leader, Mr. Balfour, so indifferently, and are likely to give him a conservative support in the future. This being so, it is still possible for the Irish small holdings bill to be carried.

RAILROAD RUMBLINGS.

The directors of the Great Northern Railway company have declared the regular quarterly dividend of 1½ per cent, payable May.

The next meeting of the advisory board of the Western Traffic association will be held in Chicago April 12. This is expected to be by far the most important meeting that has been held since the organization began, and there are some people who think it will be the last.

LABOR CIRCLE.

The strike on the Canadian Pacific may be followed by strikes on railroads in the United States. Several deeds of violence are charged against the strikers.

There is a prospect of a lively row in the United Carpenters' Council of Chicago which may result in the total disorganization of that central body.

The Butterley colliery, England has locked out 4,000 strikers. The Durham miners held numerous meetings at which they declared that they would continue the strike.

In accordance with the decision of the Miners' Federation of Great Britian nearly all the miners who quit work on the 12th inst., with the exception of the Durham miners, who are not members of the federation, have resumed work.

The Milwaukee folks are making ready to extend the Whetstone branch from Wilmont up into and probably through the Sisseton reservation. There is also a survey now being made for the road contemplated from Sioux Falls to Watertown and on through the reserve.

Indian Inspector Cissney has been investigating charges of irregularities and fraud against the Indian agent at Crow Creek agency and his son who is issue clerk. The charges are important and if substantiated will certainly result in several vacancies at least.

The election of Prof. Clark M. Young, of Tyndall, to the chair of history and political economy at the university is announced. It is rumored that the trustees have elected a man to fill the chair of geology, but the name cannot be obtained until the election is confirmed by the regents.

Harry Pratt and George Robinson, the St. Peter and Minneapolis crooks, were each sentenced at Huron to the penitentiary at Sioux Falls for four years and three months for the robbery of Levy's jewelry store last fall. Robinson was released from Stillwater only a few month's ago.

James Cavanaugh, shift boss; Dick Nankervis and James Stevens, miners, met with an accident in the Deadwood terra mine. Cavanaugh had his leg broken, Nankervis his left thigh broken and Stevens his face burned and badly bruised. The men went to a hole where the cap failed to explode. In drilling out they struck the powder.

NORTH DAKOTA.

The Amsden elevator at Argusville, was burned. It contained some 24,000 bushels of wheat. Mr. Amsden took the morning train to look after the grain.

Mother Superior Kristie and Sisters Mathilda and Lund, Luthern deaconesses from Minneapolis, have assumed the management of the St. Luke's hospital recently opened in Grand Forks. The capacity will be enlarged.

Prisoner James Kennedy, who skipped out suddenly the other day at Fargo returned the next morning of his own accord and went to the court house to satisfy his sentence. It is not known what Judge McConnell will do about the bonds, amounting to $1,000, which he declared forfeited after Kennedy had fled.

Young Guss, of Edgely, has turned up on a farm in Iowa. He writes that he took the wrong train at Aberdeen and was put off at Mellette, S. D. From there he got to Sioux City, but knows not how, nor does he remember anything until he "came to" in the hospital after having had a run of typhoid fever. When able to leave he went to some friends at or near Portland, Iowa.

Notwithstanding the continuously cold weather since the storm of the 9th the steam threshers have started, and it is now certain that a large part of the grain in stack will be threshed before seeding time. The published report that grain left in stack through the winter is unfit for seed will be disregarded by a large portion of our farmers. Many claim to know by personal experience that such grain makes good seed.

Madame Massey's coon dive in the "Hollow" was burned at Fargo. A colored man named Will Williams was smothered to death, and the body badly charred by the fire before it could be removed. All the other inmates escaped, but most of their clothing and personal effects were destroyed. Williams apparently made an effort to escape, but was too stupefied by liquor and smoke to succeed.

WISCONSIN.

T. A. Chapman, Milwaukee's leading dry goods merchant, died of pneumonia after an illness of three days.

Fire caused a loss of about $12,000 in the factory of the Union Furniture Company, 62 and 64 Third street Milwaukee. The loss is partially covered by insurance.

The large residence of H. B. Varnum, a wealthy and prominent farmer, a mile southwest of Marshalltown, burned to the ground with part of its contents. Loss, probably $5,000, partly covered by insurance.

The body of Robert E. Hogg was found underneath the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern bridge across Mill creek at Clinton. It was frozen in the ice. It is supposed Hogg started to walk to Comanche, five miles distant where his wife was visiting and in some way fell through the bridge, unless he was foully dealt with, as is suspected by some.

At Radcliffe, while returning home at night, Thomas Hollis, a wealthy banker, was assaulted on the street by robbers and shot. Mr. Hollis had on a heavy cap which deadened the effect of the assassin's bullet, otherwise he would have been instantly killed. No clue as yet of the robbers. Mr. Hollis is one of the wealthiest men in Northern Iowa. He will recover.

The state board of health has received notification from New York that thirty passengers on the steamer Gellert, on which were a number of people sick with fever, and some suspected of having typhus, had come to various parts of the state. Word has been sent to the local boards of health in the places where the immigrants went, and they will be closely watched.

FRENCH ANARCHY.

The House of a Public Prosecutor Wrecked by Eight Pounds of Dynamite.

The Anarchists Inaugurate a War of Magisterial Extermination.

Paris, March 28.—There was a terrific explosion of dynamite this morning at 39 Rue Clichy, the home of M. Roulet, the public prosecutor. The attempt was against his life, which has been threatened repeatedly lately by anarchists. The police say that at least eight pounds of dynamite must have been used.

The effect of the explosion was indescribable. Houses for an eighth of a mile on every side of No. 39 were rocked as it by an earthquake. All windows were shattered in the neighborhood and walls of the strongest buildings in the immediate vicinity were cracked and bulged. No. 39 is a wreck. The explosion, which is thought to have taken place in the ground hallway, blew the stairway to splinters, so that the panic stricken inmates had to be helped down from the upper floors with ladders. The furniture throughout the house was thrown into heaps and against the walls so that not a whole chair or table remained. The windows and frames and all were blown out completely, the bricks were driven from place and dropped to the street. The plastering was stripped clean from all walls and ceilings.

Seven persons were injured by the explosion—four by being thrown from chairs on which they were sitting and three from falling debris. Mr. Boulot, who lived on the fifth floor, escaped without injury.

A WAR OF EXTERMINATION.

The theory that anarchists have been preparing the internal machines and dynamite bombs already discovered for May 1, has been abandoned. The police are convinced that they have begun a war of extermination of all persons in office who have antagonized them, so as to frighten magistrates out of convicting their comrades apprehended in crime.

A leading anarchist outlines the programme of his comrades thus:

> The anarchists, as they are showing, have in their hands the means of securing immunity from the courts and public officials. These means consist in holding personally responsible every individual who assists in convicting them. Magistrates are mortal and amenable to fear. To give them the necessary lessons, as in the case of M. Boulot, it will be indispensable to blow up the house of every judge or public prosecutor who has assisted recently in sending anarchists to prison. After we have treated a few magistrates and prosecutors in this way, not a judge or lawyer will dare to risk the conviction of anarchists, as he will know that such conviction is his own death warrant and perhaps the death warrant of his family. The method is easy and not dangerous, as we have allies in every neighborhood who are ready to facilitate the escape of the perpetrators of such an act of justice. The police have not caught any of the men who are responsible for the two last explosions, although they think they have. We do not intend to make the innocent suffer with the guilty, and so we warn people not to live in houses with persons who are active in the prosecution of us. We wish to make it so that the judges and lawyers who prosecute us will be obliged to live alone, and landlords will refuse to rent property to them for fear of our vengeance. When we can make our persecutors the pariahs of society in this way we shall have taken a long step towards the revolution.

M. Goron, chief detective, is convinced that Ravachol is the culprit. Late to-night a gen'darme found an infernal machine at the Ivery barracks and pulled out its lighted fuse. Sixteen persons were more or less shocked by the explosion.

FATAL STORM.

A Tremendous Blow in Ohio Attended by Loss of Life.

Norwalk, Ohio, March 28.—A severe storm and one of long duration occurred last night. The storm was accompanied by a high wind, thunder and lightning, with heavy hail. The lightning struck in several places. Andy Clock's barn at Monroeville was struck and burned. It is reported that a house at Wakeman was struck and three persons killed.

Asbury Park, N. J., March 28.—A heavy wind and rain storm with snowsqualls prevailed all day long along the coast. The beach is badly cut out, and telegraph and telephone wires are working badly. No wrecks are reported.

Hardware Ruined.

Omaha, March 28.—The five-story building occupied by the Omaha Hardware company was burned early this morning, entailing a loss of $225,000. The company had only recently put in its spring stock of hardware. It is thought the fire was the work of burglars who resorted to incendiarism to hide their work. The loss on stock is $175,000; insured for $140,000; on building, $50,000; insurance full.

With All on Board.

Blaine, Wash., Special Telegram, March 28.—The schooner Sam, just arrived from the Mud Bar oyster beds, had a rough time, only obtaining two sacks. Capt. Hunt, while there, met Capt. Myers, of the steamer Brunett, who reports that the iron tug Tippic, of Vancouver, B. C., sank off the English bank during a gale on Thursday with all on board.

Killed by a Train.

Waverly, Minn., Special Telegram, March 25.—Ferdinand Shultz, was found dead under the railroad culvert this morning. His skull was fractured, his left arm was cut off and there were two cuts on his head. He was killed by the 11 o'clock west-bound freight train last night. An inquest will be held to-morrow.

Died of Apoplexy.

Washington, March 28.—Dr. W. I. Walfley, examining surgeon of the pension office, died suddenly yesterday of apoplexy on a Baltimore & Ohio railroad train. He was a cousin of Mrs. Gen. Sherman and Secretary Blaine, being related to the Gillespie family. Dr. Walfley was fifty-six years of age.

A Wrecked Steamer.

West Port, Cal., March 28.—The steamer Benture was wrecked early this morning at Rockport. Both engineers, steward, one fireman and one sailor were drowned.

The Life Insurance Business.

Hartford, Conn., March 28.—Insurance Commissioner Fyler issued his report on life companies Saturday afternoon. Seven companies of Connecticut and twenty-one of the other states report to him. They have $789,143,909 of assets, $91,590,629 of surplus. Total income in 1890 was $193,181,492; total outgo, $131,679,769. The report commends those companies that are calculating on a reserve of 3 per cent instead of 4 per cent basis. Commissioner Fyler condemns the short term endowment scheme that came into the state with the sanction of Massachusetts by which thousands of poor people in Connecticut have lost money.

Want Olcott to Vacate.

London, Special.—The majority of the members of the Theosophic society want Col. Olcott to vacate the presidency on May 1, and W. O. Judge, the secretary of the American section, to succeed him. Voting papers have been distributed among the branches of Europe. Mrs. Besant and other members of Blavatsky lodge are enthusiastic for Judge. The result of the voting will be known April 25, and will be announced at the American convention.

Shot by an Unknown Man.

Milwaukee, Special:—To-night a woman named Jessie Osgood was shot at her home on Fifth street by an unknown man. After firing at the woman the would-be murderer committed suicide. It is probable that the woman will die.

CONGRESS

Proceedings of the House and Senate.

Thursday, March 17.

SENATE.

Senator Platt introduced a joint resolution for the appointment of a commissioner from the District of Columbia to act with commissioners appointed by the several states to secure uniformity by the laws of marriage and divorce, insolvency, etc. This course was recommended by the American Bar Association.

Mr. Peffer introduced a bill to establish an electrical station for the purpose of investigating and determining whether electricity can be profitably used and applied as a motive power in the propulsion of farm machinery. Referred to the committee on agriculture.

Mr. Hawley, from the military affairs committee, presented a bill to amend the statute relative to certificates of merit to enlisted men of the army (the amendment being to change the word "privates" to "enlisted men"), and it was passed.

A large number of appointments were confirmed, among them being that of Walter H. Sanborn of Minnesota as judge of the eighth circuit.

HOUSE.

The entire time of the house was occupied in a discussion of the tariff.

Friday, March 18.

SENATE.

Senator George, reported to the senate a substitute for Mr. Mitchell's bill for the encouragement of silk culture. The substitute provides for the establishment in different parts of the United States experiment stations, to be a part of the agriculture experiment stations now established.

A bill now appropriating $50,000 for the purchase of a site and the erection of a pedestal in Washington for a statue of Gen. Sherman to be presented by the Society of Tennessee, was introduced into the senate today by Mr. Hawley.

The bill establishing a port of delivery at Des Moines, Iowa, passed the senate.

HOUSE.

The house adopted a resolution calling on the secretary of war and the attorney general for information regarding the destruction of government dams in the Mississippi river between the mouth of the Chippewa river in Wisconsin and the West Newton slough in Minnesota.

The consular and diplomatic appropriation bill was reported to the house. It carries an appropriation of about $1,115,000 against $1,656,925 appropriated for the current year.

Monday, March 21.

SENATE.

Among the bills introduced and referred in the senate were the following: By Mr. Kyle, for an investigation of the cause and results of the recent mine disaster in the Indian Territory: by Mr. Vilas, for the purchase of Sturgeon Bay ship canal: by Mr. George, to refund to the producers of cotton the internal revenue tax collected.

Senate bill to amend the statutes so as to prohibit the introduction and sale of intoxicating liquors into the Indian country was passed by the senate.

The senate passed a bill today to regulate the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin, (at Milwaukee on the first Mondays of January and October, and at Oshkosh on the second Tuesday of June.)

HOUSE.

After brief consideration in committee of the whole the appropriation bill was reported to the house and passed.

The house then went into committee of the whole on the free wool bill, Mr. Goodnight, of Kentucky, addressing the house in favor of the measure. He was followed by Mr. Warner of New York, and Mr. Wheeler of Alabama, favoring the bill. The latter had the floor when adjournment was agreed to.

Tuesday, March 22.

SENATE.

The senate yesterday passed the bill for the relief of settlers on public lands.

Senator Turpie made a personal explanation to the effect that Judge Wood's was mistaken in thinking he (Turpie) had played the hypocrite in opposing Wood's nomination.

The senate passed the bill appropriating $1,745,816 for the purpose of securing the early completion of the canal and for the locks at the cascades of the Columbia river. Also that appropriating $2,360,356 for the construction of a boat railway and of the necessary marine apparatus and appliances at the Dalles and Celilo Falls and Ten mile rapids on the Columbia river, and in the improvement of the Three Mile rapids.

Mr. Davis introduced a memorial of 1,000 citizens of St. Paul favoring a proposed 16th amendment to the constitution; also from the citizens of Minnesota protesting against the passage of the bill to remove the Southern Utes; also from bricklayers favoring an eight-hour day; also from the Minneapolis Board of Trade favoring a single term for president.

HOUSE.

Representative Butler, of Iowa, reported to the house from the committee of invalid pensions, a bill granting a pension of $12 per month to women who served in the war as army nurses.

Representative Parrett, of Indiana, introduced in the house a bill providing for the appointment of an Ohio river commission of five persons, to consider plans for the improvement of the river from Pitsburg to Cairo.

The Bland bill which was made the regular order for to-day, was taken up and Mr. Bland addressed the house in support of the measure.

Wednesday, March 23.

SENATE.

The senate to-day entered upon the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. The principal changes made in the bill by the senate committee was striking out the house provision transferring the care of the Indians from Indian agents to army officers. This provoked considerable debate.

HOUSE.

The discussion on the free coinage bill was continued to-day.

In the house to-day Mr. Patterson of Tennessee reported senate bills for the construction of two revenue cutters for use on the Pacific coast and for two revenue cutters for use on the great lakes.

No Economy, No Means.

Stinginess is a curse to the individual ruled by it; but thoughtless prodigality is no virtue. The individual who does not and will not practice economy, is pretty liable to find, at length, that he has nothing either to prodigal with, or to practice economy upon. That eccentric but wise-headed old philosopher, Diogenes, once taught this lesson to another in a way peculiarly his own.

Diogenes, begging, as was the custom among many philosophers of ancient times, asked a prodigal man for more than any one else. A bystander, seeing this, said to him,—

"I see your business, that when you find a liberal mind, you make the most of him."

"No," said the philosopher, "but I mean to beg of the rest again,"—meaning that the prodigal man would soon have nothing to give.

Dissatisfied Citizens Heard From.

Anoka, Minn., Special Telegram, —A second ticket was put into the field to-day in opposition to the straight Republican nominations by several soreheads styling themselves the citizens' convention. This was brought about by Page's nomination for mayor on the straight ticket because he favored cheap labor. Two or three strong names appear on the ticket. The balance will be unmercifully cut. It stands as follows: Mayor, G. A. McCauley; treasurer, A. E. Nourse; assessor, E. L. Curial; constable, John McFeters; Aldermen, First ward, J. C. Broadbent; Second, A. A. Stevens; Third, F. F. Orr.

Euclid Items.

Mr. Easby was in town Thursday to attend to his interests here.

Paul Oseldinger lost an ox in our big blizzard. Paul is about to move out on his claim.

J. Zimmerman lost five cows in the late blizzard.

It seems that even a dog knows when he is unfit to be seen around horses. Wm. Brandt went down to Crookston and bought a span of Brown's famous mares and returned home only to find his dog dead in the well.

E. Taylor & Co. received the brick foundation for their new building last Thursday morning. They will begin operations as soon as the weather will permit.

Dr. Chapin took a flying trip to Warren last week.

Mr. Robert Shultz gave a dance Thursday evening. Good time.

Henry Tiedt will leave for Montana about the 1st.

Every body is yanking their seed wheat over the plains to be ready for the breakup.

Casper Mosiei, an old settler of 73 summers is rustling cattle trades in this vicinity.

In Euclid lives one of the most wonderful freaks of nature ever known, in the form of a gentleman who can throw his under jaw out of joint and pass his under lip over his nose within a half inch of his eyes. It is well worth going hundreds of miles to see.

The children of the city gave a delightful entertainment Tuesday evening and kept a big house in a roar of applause for more than an hour. A good deal is due to the excellent training given them by Mrs. H. C. Misner.

Robert Casmey has been out west but came back saying this country was best of all.

E. Murney has worked up all the iron in the city and is now trying to put tin shoes on horses. That won't do Ed.

There are some pretty good jumpers around the neighborhood, but they can't come up to Henry Stuhr and myself. E. J. Duntley is undoubtedly the best boxer in the vicinity.

Everybody seems to be talking about M. R. Brown's horses. Good thing to talk about, gentlemen.

Go into E. Taylor & Co's. and let H. Stuhr sell you a good hat.

Fred Tiedt Senior is very slowly recovering from a long and severe illness.

Miss Lillian Losey appeared on the stage Tuesday evening.

In the entertainment Tuesday evening a trio was given by Miss Ollie Tiedt and Miss Nellie Chapman, sopranos, and Miss Ida Teal alto, which brought down the house.

Charley Teal is very sick with pneumonia.

Mack McCracken is in the city again but is undecided whether to take the depot agency again or not.

Ole Nilson began threshing barley Wednesday.

Several wild ducks were reported to have been flying northward. If this be true spring is really at hand.

One of the most enjoyable events of the season was the company of ladies and gentlemen at W. C. Misner's Friday evening. Mr. Leman of Angus brought down the famous apron which was given to Gen. Washington by Gen. Lafayette and exhibited it to the masons of Euclid. Among the masons present were W. Leman and W. L. Davies, of Angus, H. C. Misner, Dr. J. S. Chapin, F. Tiedt, F. G. Fargo and other friends who were invited in and who felt well repaid for their trouble by looking at such a famous relic so closely connected with the two greatest generals of the revolutionary war. The apron is now the property of Mont Nebo Lodge No. 91 of Shepardsville, West Virginia. The new case presented to the above lodge by the grand lodge of Minnesota has one of the finest specimens of the engraver's art ever seen by those present. It was of solid cherry with many of the emblems and working tools of the fraternity handsomely wrought.

After all present had viewed the masonic treasures and listened to the lectures on the same by Mr. Leman, the ladies and gentlemen entertained the company with a selection of readings and songs after which refreshments were served. H. C. Misner as master of ceremonies then called on the following to respond to toasts, which they did very pleasantly. F. Tiedt, Sr., the toast, welcome; W. Leman, Mount Nebo lodge; W. L. Davies, Washington and Lafayette. A general good time was enjoyed. The program was interspersed by instrumental music by Miss Lillian Losey and songs by others in the company up to half past twelve o'clock, when all bade their their host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. I. W. C. Misner, good night and went home feeling well repaid for having lost a part of their night's rest.

Mr. Fargo and Mr. O. Stuhr went to Red Lake Falls on business Wednesday.

Ole Tonson, barn boss on the Buffington farm, had his arm badly lacerated by a vicious stallion but is rapidly recovering under the skillful treatment of Dr. Chapin.

Mrs. W. P. and Norwood Davies of Angus were in the city Thursday.

Joseph Heard, representing H. W. Hackett of St. Paul, was in the city Thursday doing business with E. Taylor & Company. FRED.

Mentor Items.

Our snow is mostly gone and the roads are in bad condition.

Seeding here we think will soon commence. We hear D. Overholt means to start on Monday 27th.

We are informed the lumber will be on the ground this week for the erection of a new Congregational church at Mentor, and the Ladies' Aid has given $40.00 towards the new building. We think our ladies are doing remarkably well for the cause.

The entertainment which took place at D. Fulton's on Friday night of last week was well attended.

Our Mentor string band gave some very fine selections which were well rendered.

We see by the McIntosh Times that "Free Grist" is much concerned in the alcohol and beer business. Some say he is a real snipe. Some say he is a near relation, while others say he is no man at all. Will "Free Grist" explain himself how eggs can be shipped without being first packed, or has he some new way of shipping? MICK.

A California "big tree" has been selected in Tulare county to be shown at the Exposition. A committee of the board of trade, after an extended tour of inspection, picked out a tree measuring 87 feet 9 inches in circumference at the base, 85 feet five feet above the ground and 65 feet at a height if sixteen feet.

More than 180 exhibitors are chronicled from Philadelphia alone.

The "San Francisco Women's California Book Exhibit for the World's Fair," is the name of a society recently.

[Last publication May 12th, 1892.]

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Jennie Kelly and Alfred D. Kelly, her husband, Mortgagors, to Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, mortgagee, bearing date the 25th day of October, A. D. 1886, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 29th day of October, A. D. 1886, at 4:15 o'clock p. m., in book 26 of mortgages, on pages 389 to 392; and

Whereas, such default consists of the failure to pay the following installments of interest, to-wit: $25.50 that became due October 25th, 1889; $25.50 that became due April 25th 1890; $25.50 that became due October 25th, 1890; $35.50 that became due April 25th, 1891, and $25.50 that became due October 25th, 1891;

And whereas the said Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, holder of said mortgage, has elected to declare and hereby does declare, the whole principal sum in said mortgage set forth due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained,

And whereas there is actually due and payable at the date hereof upon the premises in said mortgage described upon which there is default the following sum, to-wit: Ten hundred Nine and 60-100 ($1009.60) Dollars, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise, has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The north-east quarter (ne¼) of section nineteen (19) Township one hundred forty-nine (149) Range forty-two (42), containing 160 acres more or less according to the government survey thereof, all of said premises situated and being in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty ($50) dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on

MONDAY, THE SIXTEENTH DAY OF MAY, A. D. 1892,

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

Crookston, March 31, 1892.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

A Republican County Convention for the County of Polk will be held on Tuesday, April 5th, 1892, in the Court House in the City of Crookston, at one o'clock p. m., for the purpose of electing nine delegates to the Republican State Convention, to be held in the city of St. Paul on Thursday, May 5th, 1892, and also for the purpose of electing nine delegates to the Republican Congressional Convention to be held at Morris on the 12th day of May, 1892, and for the transaction of such other business as may come before the Convention.

The several election precincts are entitled to the following number of delegates, the basis of representation being one delegate for each organized town or precinct, and one additional delegate for each forty votes, or major fraction thereof, cast for the Republican candidate for President in 1888, viz.:

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, that no delegate will be admitted to a seat in the Convention unless such delegate resides in the town or precinct which he represents.

The foregoing call was agreed upon by the Republican County Committee at a meeting held in the City of Crookston, March 11th, 1892.

A. A. MILLER, Secretary.
A. D. STEPHENS, Chairman.

The citizens party met at the city hall on Thursday evening of last week and adopted the following platform:

We, the Citizen's party of the city of Crookston assembled in mass convention, this 23d day of March, 1892, hereby resolve and set forth the following declaration of principles, which we believe most conducive to the general welfare and prosperity of the city of Crookston.

First, in making this declaration of principles we respectfully call the attention of the electors of the city of Crookston to the present and previous administrations of our municipal affairs by representatives of our citizens' party; with confidence that all who are cognizant of the past history of our city will agree with us that the policy of the Citizens' party wisely administered, is by far the most conducive to the good government of the city.

1st.—We insist that national and state politics and party lines should be entirely foreign to the election of officers in city elections, as we believe that in such cases the election of officers should be controlled solely and entirely by the citizens irrespective of party affiliations, thus assuring the selection of representative men of the best ability, and not the tools of wire-pullers and professional politicians.

2d—That in view of an increasing demand in that respect and our natural resources and rapidly increasing population, we advocate the purchase by the city of suitable grounds in which to establish and maintain under the care and control of the city government, a public park.

3d—We advocate the rigid enforcement of any and all ordinances, now in force in the city, so far as the same are not opposed to public sentiment and we further advocate the immediate repeal of all ordinances so opposed and which are merely dead letters upon our book of ordinances.

4th—We demand a thorough and complete revision of our city charter and the ordinances passed thereunder, to the end that the same shall meet the demands of the city and have the force and validity of law.

5th—We recommend that all cases where public work is to be performed for the city of Crookston preference shall be given to resident laborers and contractors so far as the same may be.

6th—We further recommend the passage and enforcement of an ordinance prohibiting the dumping in Red Lake River, within the city limits and above the water works, of any garbage or refuse whatsoever, and the prohibition of the location or operation of any slaughter houses within said limits and that all rules and regulations now in force and relating to the public health be rigidly enforced.

7th—We would advise that the city council take immediate action to the end that a more just and equitable contract be obtained from the Crookston Water Works Power & Light Company, for the water and light furnished to the city.

We believing that they are competent, willing and will use their best efforts to carry out the principles of the Citizens' party as above set forth. We hereby ratify and confirm the nominations made at a convention of delegates of said party held at the city hall in Crookston, Minnesota, March 22d 1892, as follows:

For Mayor, William Anglim; for Alderman at Large, A. K. Austin; clerk, E. C. Carruth; treasurer, L. C. Couvrette; assessor W. F. Arnold; constables, H. N. Tweten and Henry Shepard. Dated at Crookston, Minnesota this 24rd day of March, 1892.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

[First publication March 31st, 1892]
[Last publication May 12th, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of Eight and 25-100 dollars ($8.25) which became due on the first day of December, A. D. 1889, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Edward L. Haven, an unmarried man, to John Milton Oliver, bearing date the 11th day of July, A. D. 1888, which mortgage, together with the power of sale therein contained was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the 16th day of July A. D. 1888, at 11 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m., in Book 36 of Mortgages on pages 329 and 330.

It is provided in said mortgage that if said mortgagor shall fail to pay any part of the sum of money thereby secured at the time and in the manner specified in said mortgage, then upon such default, the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage, may at the option of the mortgagee be declared due and payable; and the said John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, who is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured, has elected and does hereby elect and declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage to be due, and there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of thirty-five and 84-100 dollars ($35.84) and no action or proceeding has been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section number ten (10) in Township number one hundred and forty-nine (149) north; of Range forty-three (43) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the county of Polk and, State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

Dated at Minneapolis, Minn., this 22d day of March, A. D. 1892.

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of ten and 50-100 dollars ($10.50) which became due on the first day of October A. D. 1890, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Isaie Normandin and Philomene Normandin, his wife to John Milton Oliver, bearing date the first day of October A. D. 1888, which mortgage together with the power of sale therein contained was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the first day of October A. D. 1888, at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m., in book 40 of mortgages on pages 112 and 113.

It is provided in said mortgage that if said mortgagors shall fail to pay any part of the sum of money thereby secured at the time and in the manner specified in said mortgage, then upon such default, the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage, may at the option of the mortgagee be declared due and payable; and the said John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, who is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured, has elected and does hereby elect and declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage to be due, and there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of forty-one and 70-100 dollars ($41.70) and no action or proceeding has been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section twenty-five (25) in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court, Special Term, March 21st, 1892.

In the matter of the estate of Lars. J. Hagen, deceased.

Letters of Administration on the estate of said deceased being this day granted unto Ludvig Olson and Ole Nelson of said County,

It is ordered, that all claims and demands of all persons against said estate be presented to this Court, for examination and allowance, at the Probate Office in the City of Crookston on Monday the twenty-sixth day of September, A. D. 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m.

It is further ordered, that six months from the date hereof be allowed to creditors to present their claims against said estate, at the expiration of which time all claims not presented to said Court, or not proven to its satisfaction, shall be forever barred, unless for cause shown, further time be allowed.

Ordered further, that notice of the time and place of the hearing and examination of said claims and demand shall be given by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to the day appointed for such examination, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said county.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

[First publication March 31st, 1892.]
[Last publication May 12th, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of Twelve and 50-100 dollars ($12.50), which became due on the first day of December, 1890, and in the payment of a like and final sum, which became due on the first day of December 1891, upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by John H. Lien and Ragnhild Lien, his wife, to John Milton Oliver, bearing date the 8th day of November, 1888, which mortgage, together with a power of sale contained therein was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the 16th day of November A. D. 1888, at 8 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m., in Book 40 of mortgages, on pages 497, 498, and 499; which said sums with interest thereon respectively at ten per cent. per annum from the first day of December, 1890, and the 1st day of December 1891 are the whole sum secured by said mortgage and remaining unpaid.

John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured; and the amount claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice is twenty-seven dollars ($27.00); and no action or proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof:

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section number twenty-two (22) in Township one hundred and forty-eight (148) north, of Range number forty-five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one Hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston, in said County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on

SATURDAY, THE FOURTEENTH DAY OF MAY, A. D. 1892,

at 11 o'clock of the forenoon of that day, at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars Attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated at Minneapolis, Minn., this 22d day of March A. D. 1892.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

[First publication March 31st, 1892.]
[Last publication May 12th, 1892.]

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Nils S. Nilson and Cecilia S. Nilson, his wife, mortgagors, to Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, mortgagee, bearing date the 24th day of December, A. D. 1888, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 9th day of January, A. D. 1889, at 10:45 o'clock a. m., in book 43 of mortgages, on page 455; and

Whereas, such default consists of the failure to pay the following installments of interest, to-wit: $22.75 that became due June 24th, 1889, $22.75 that became due December 24th, 1889, $22.75 that became due June 24th, 1890, and $22.75 that became due December 24th, 1890, $22.75 that became due June 24th, 1891, and $22.75 that became due December 24th, 1891. And whereas the said Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, the holder of said mortgage, has elected to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole principal sum in said mortgage set forth due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained.

And whereas there is actually due and payable at the date hereof upon the premises in said mortgage described upon which there is default the following sum, to-wit: eight hundred twenty-one and 71-100 ($821.71) Dollars, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The south half (s½) of the north-east quarter (ne¼) and the west half (w½) of south-east quarter (se¼) of Section two (2) Township one hundred and forty-seven (147) Range forty (40), containing 160 acres more or less according to the government survey thereof. All of said premises situated and being in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty (50) dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston in said County and State, on the 16th day of May, A. D. 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated March 17th, A. D. 1892,

NEWSPAPER LAW.

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office, whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for the payment.
2. If any person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.
3. In suits for subscriptions, the suit may be instituted where the paper is published.
4. The Courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the post office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, while unpaid for, is prima facie evidence of intention to defraud.

Entered at the Post Office in Crookston as Second Class matter.

Moorhead Weekly News:—Mr. A. A. White returned from Duluth this morning to which city he went to investigate the mining boom. Mr. White has secured 16 leases covering about 1800 acres in the Messabi range. The leases run for one year, at the expiration of which the lessee can secure a 50-year contract on payment of $100 and 25 cents per ton for the ore that is mined from each tract. The point of richest development in the range is about 50 miles almost due north of Duluth. Parties going there take the railroad going to Tower and go by wagon from Messabi station. The country is in a bad condition to travel over of course. Mr. White states that some of the companies that have been organized have merit and others havn't much. Money will be lost as well as made in this mineral boom, but the state will reap rich revenues.

FARMERS ARE IN IT

Cass County Tillers of the Soil Join the Farmers' Protective Elevator Company.

THEY WILL HANDLE THEIR OWN WHEAT BY MEANS OF COMPANY ELEVATORS AND AGENTS.

Fargo Weekly Argus.

Last year a number of farmers about Grand Forks organized themselves into a body known as the Red River Valley anti-monopoly protective association and from that body has grown the Northwestern Farmers Protective Elevator company, a meeting for the organization of which in Cass county was held in the rooms of the Gimle society on Front steet yesterday afternoon with the Hon. Henry Peterson in the chair.

It was a crowded room which Thomas Ulven of Grand Forks, general secretary and organizer of the company, rose to address on the aims and objects of the company. In brief his remarks are as follows:

The purpose for which this association is formed is by its own selected agents at Duluth, to look after the interest of the farmers by sale, shipping and storage of thear wheat and other farm products.

To be elgible to membership a person must own or run a farm and pay a membership fee of three dollars.

The members of the association are divided into five districts, each represented by a delegate, who has to look after the business of the association in his respective district and meet with the directors at the semi-annual meeting of the association, at which a general business manager will be elected. The manager has to sell the wheat at the best posible advantage, carefully inspect weight and grade, order cars if asked to do so by a member and if the railroad companies do not furnish cars acordsng to law, he will notify the board of directors of such refusal or neglect. He has the right to hire the necessary help and together with the president he must try to protect the individual members.

The association shall not buy wheat or other produce, but only sell under instruction owner and the order for payment must be made out in the name of the owner himself.

To cover expenses of the association, 1 cent per bushel of grain, sold goes into its treasury.

At every general meeting, commitees are appointed to formulate the different questions that will come up for action, nominate officers and also discuss the plan for building an elevator at Duluth at some time in the near future.

The officers of the association must not create debt without such action having been taken at the previous general meeting.

Postal cards giving the market price must be sent to the different stations as often as thought necessary.

The agents at Duluth or any other place must not handle the wheat or farm product of others than members; a penalty shall be prescribed for the violation this rule. Members are also subject to penalty for sending other than their own products.

The members tributaty to the different railroad stations may take such action as they find necessary among themselves, elect their own district officers, fix a place for displaying their quotation card and see that representatives attend the general meeting, without any expense to the association.

When elevators are erected the surrounding members are themselves responsible for such agents as they may employ to receive and ship their products.

It is the duty of every member to work for the prosperity and progress of the association, and every member has at any time the right to inspect the books of the officers. When a member ships wheat to the agents of the association he must notify such agent of the quality of such wheat.

One leading object to be secured by the association will be to secure the shipment of the pure No. 1 hard wheat, without any opportunity of mixing it, directly to the English market and by thus establishing their grades there secure the highest market prices, amounting in many instances to quite a percentage over that of the mixed wheat usually shipped there. Many of the members of the association have large farms with extensive tracts of grain, and it is claimed that the association will probably be able to control three to five million bushels a year. The association has one receiving elevator at Ada, Minn., and is building another at Perley. It is probable several more will be erected this year at leading shipping points'

A lengthy discussion in which all of those present took part then ensued. When each had had his say Hon. Smith Stimmel moved that it was the sense of the meeting to approve of the scheme for the organization of Farmer's Protective Elevator association, which motion was unanimously carred. Secretary Ulven here produced the stock subscription sheets and obtained signatures for fifty-eight shares of stock amounting to $1,450- Chairman Peterson will appoint a committee of one in each township to solicit subscription to the stock.

The Cordage Trust's Rival.

The Belfast Cordage Company Preparing to Enter the Field.

Minneapolis Journal.

New York, March 25.—It will not be the fault of the Belfast Cordage Company, a concern that introduced itself into this country less that two months ago, if the back of the cordage trust is not broken before many months, and the farmers of the country enabled to indulge in a jubilee. It is currently reported in circles that are supposed to know, that the Irish concern, which is one of the biggest cordage houses in the world, is making arrangements to bring to this country several entire steamer loads of binding twine, and that negotiations have been all but completed for the lease of several "trans" steamers for this purpose. If this intention is carried out there will be fun in binding twine circles, and the Belfast house is not likely to get the worst of it.

The intentions of the cordage trust toward the trade continue to be a mystery. A month ago it was given out that prices would be fixed this week, but it is now stated that nothing will be done in that diretion for at least another month. Meanwhile the warehouses of jobbers and dealers throughout the country are empty, and are absolutely unable to make any contracts or sales for future delivery, and a small army of traveling salesman employed by the trust is drawing its salary and taking life easy, while the farmers are on the ragged edge of uncertainty and unable to make even a guess of what a day may bring forth. It is said that this dilatory tactics of the trust are due to the fact that they are about completing negotiations for taking in the only three houses of any account that are still outside their ropes, and that when this is accomplished a price will be fixed for binding twine for the coming season that will make the hair of the farmers stand on end and disturb their sleep.

Pope Leo XIII has written a letter strongly commending the Exposition, which it is believed will have a most favorable effect in stimulating interest in the Fair on the part of all Catholic countries and communities.

CAPITAL GOSSIP.

(Special Correspondence).

WASHINGTON, D. C. March 26th 1892.

The Democratic majority in this congress avowedly set out with the intention of making a record of so-called economy for political effect, and with the prince of Cheese-parers, Holman, at the head of the appropriations committee it was reasonable to suppose that some success in that direction would be attained. But it is now apparent that the only reduction accomplished will be at the expense of the public service, and of our Naval growth. In the Sundry Civil Bill as reported to the house, Mr. Holman has lessened the aggregate over that of last year by cutting off a few clarks, and scrubwomen here and there, and by striking out most of the appropriations for public buildings. But this narrow policy is not real economy. In all places where public buildings are projected the Government is renting more or less unsuitable quarters at a very high price. Right here in Washington Government bureaus are distributed arounc in various private buildings and parts of buildings at an annual rental which is mighty big interest on the amount required to erect suitable quarters for all those growing department. But this is the democratic idea of economy and good business management It has the outward appearance of saving a few dollars and expected to do service for campaign effect.

The only other place in which the appropriations are likely to be perceptibly reduced is in the provisions for continuing work on our new Navy and and coast defenses. It may not be many months before democratic shortsightedness in this respect is brought home to the conntry with terrible effect. If war with Great Britain should result from the present differences over the tendency of Canadian poachers to steal our seals, our commerce and seaport cities would be almost entirely at the mercy of English gunboats. During the past six years we have made a fair beginning towards the building up of a navy corresponding with our importance among the nations of the earth, but it is only a beginning. Our navy is still much weaker than that of any other great power, and wolud have barely overtopped; that of little Chili had a conflict occurred. As against the British Navy ours is "not in it,'. Under such circumstances it requires a good deal of courage to twist the lion's tail in the manner President Harrison has done. Had we such Coast Defenses and such a navy as we ought to have, Lord Salisbury and all the rest of them would be exceedingly cautious how they tread on our coat tail. One or two hundred millions expended in such equipment would be well invested if they saved the country from a single war. It is much easier to spunk up and show your spirit when you are conscious of abundant strength, and the other big boys are less likely to interfere with you when they know they are pretty sure to get the worst of it.

Speaking of war, great prepartions are being made for the Grand Army of the Republic Encampment here next September. It will undoubtedly, be the greatest reunion in the history of that organization. President Harrison in a message to congress recommending an appropriation of one hundred thousand dollars towards the expenses of entertainment, etc.. says, "The event is one of nationel interest, and the attendance of surviving Union soldiers will probably be larger than at any encampment that has ever been held. The parade of the survivors of our great armies on Pensylvania Avenue will bring vividly back those joyful and momentous days when the great armies of the East and West marched through the streets of Washington in high parade, and were received by our citizens with joyful acclaim". General Palmer, Commander in Chief, said recently that he fonnd on a tour through several states great enthusiasm and other indications of an outpouring of the masses such as has never taken place since the grand review of 1865. The correspondence of the committee of Arrangements is exceedingly voluminous, and their headquarters a busy plece..

The Board of Lady Managers is making arrangments for an extensive exhibit showing woman's share in the illustration of books, in engraivng and other forms of picture production. During her recent visit to New York Mrs. Palmer consulted with a number of publishers and received considerable assistance from them. A list of distinguished woman illustrataors was secured and plans set on foot to obtain old volume, and manuscripts illustrated by woman, together with historical data concerning woman's share in this line of work from ancient time down to the present.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

Crookston, April 7, 1892.

'Round Home.

Wheat—1 Hard 64.
1 Northern 63.
2 Northern 57.
3 Northern 53.

Wheat is up one cent this week.

A. A. Miller has gone to Chicago.

See Charlie Vine for choice meats of all kinds.

Knute Opheim was up from Fertile on Tuesday.

Dave Hatlestad has returned from his Iowa trip.

O. J. Barnes has gone east for business and pleasure.

Miss Celeste Cronkhite goes to Marshall County to teach.

Quite a snow-storm on Sunday night and Monday morning.

A. G. Gallasch was up from St. Paul on business on Monday.

The Red River is reported to be banks full and slopping over at Grand Forks.

Charley Vine is kept as busy as a bee cutting up meats to supply his increasing trade.

E, M. Stanton returned from Wisconsin on Wednesday morning to find that he is the father of a fine boy.

Dr. Watson and Frank E. Hunt came down from Red Lake Falls to attend the Republican convention on Tuesday.

Last Sunday Rev. H. F. McDonald, the new Baptist pastor, was greeted with large audiences. Hereafter there will be morning and evening service each Sunday.

"Do you know" that J. W. Wheeler has money to loan at reasonable rates and no long waits for the money to come from some place? He has it on hand ready for delivery as soon as the papers are made out.

Mrs. E. E. Bangs has secured the services of an accomplished and artistic trimmer from Chicago, and invites our lady readers to call. Opening day tomorrow, from 2 till 10 p. m.

We go to press too early to give the figures in Tuesday,s election. The ticket, made in the good old-fashioned way, where everybody had an equal voice in making it, won by good majorities.

R. A, Wilkinson came down from Hallock on Tuesday evening and went down to Fertile, on route for Red Lake Falls to arrange for right of way through that city. He says that the Pelican Rapids branch will be completed to Red Lake Falls this summer.

Will Carr, whose illness was noted in these columns last week, died on Monday afternoon and his remains were sent to St. Catherines, his birthplace, for burial. He was 19 years old and a general favorite with all who knew him. He leaves a father, mother and one sister (Mrs. Charles Vine) to mourn his death.

Mr. E. Winslow, of Liberty, gave THE JOURNAL a pleasant call on Monday. Says he has plowed about 12 acres this spring. He left with us a notice in relation to the disappearance of two ponies from his place last week. One of the ponies, the one marked like a circus pony, used to be owned by John Baumann of this city.

A week or so since the Norman County Herald thought it had a huge joke on THE JOURNAL, but in its last issue perpetrates one on itself that might be serious if followed up. We would advise the Herald man to read the postal laws more carefully in relation to what constitutes a supplement to a newspaper.

The services at the Congregational church next Sabbath on time at 11 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. Mr. Battey will speak in the morning on "After the Election—What?" and in the evening the subject will be "Do You Mean It?" A cordial invitation to the city officers and all citizens to attend the morning service All strangers welcome. Young people come to the evening service.

A meeting of the women of Polk County will be held at the Reading Room in Crookston, Friday, April 15th 1892, at 7:30 p.m., for the purpose of forming an organization to be called The Polk County Woman's Auxiliary to the World's Fair. All its women are urgently invited to attend. By order of the 7th District committee—(Signed) CHRISSIE C. STEPHENS, Crookston, March 31st 1892.

M. R. Brown supposed when he arrived with that last lot of horses that he had the demand pretty well supplied, but such did not prove to be the case for they were all sold off in a few days and back he went to Iowa for another load which will be here this week. One secret of it is that Brown will not bring up anything that does not suit his fancy and Brown is a good judge of horse-flesh. Be sure to see what Brown has before you buy.

MRS. E. E. BANGS

Will have her millinery opening on Friday, April 8th, from 2 p. m. to 10 p.m. She will have all the novelties in millinery on exhibition. The ladies of Crookston and vicinity are cordially invited to call.

MRS. E. E. BANGS.
No. 9. Second street, Crookston, Minn.

Crookston Honored.

The Democratic convention at St. Paul last week paid Crookston the compliment of selecting her mayor, Alexander McKinnon, as a delegate to the Chicago convention.

The millinery firm of Veronneau & Adams, on Second street, advertise their opening days on Thursday and Friday of this week. Miss Veronneau has recently returned from Chicago where she selected an entirely new stock of all the latest styles and oh, such elegant ribbons and flowers as she did get sets the average female heart in a flutter of delight. She also spent some time posting up on the latest styles and our lady readers may rest assured of securing as neat and complete a hat as she could in Chicago. Call and see.

The Republican convention met purpursuant to call on Tuesday at 1 o'clock. Owing to the storm none of the delegates from the west side were present and few from the east.

The following delegates were elected to attend the congressional convention at Morris on Wednesday, May 4th: Hugh Thompson, E. O. Flanders, S. S. Stadsvold, Frank E. Hunt, Ole Dahl, A. N. Hixon, T. G. Thompson, Geo. H. Palmer and E. P. Pierce; and to the State convention on May 5th: R. J. Montague, H. L. Falk, O. Osmondson, Norman Hanson, J. D. Marshall, Ole Lukkasson, Frank Hawkins, A. A. Miller and I. C. Hillestad. The following resolution was reported by the committee on resolutions:

We, the Republican Party of Polk County, Minnesota, in convention assembled at Crookston this 5th day of April, 1892, do hereby affirm our faith in the principles of the Republican Party, as enunciated by its National Platform.

We heartily endorse the able, patriotic and conservative administration of President Harrison and firmly believe that the interests of the Republic as also the interests of the Republican Party would be well subserved by his re-election.

We especially commend the department of state for its dignified, able and thoroughly American management of our foreign affairs.

We believe in using silver as a medium of exchange to the limit of financial safty, but oppose its free and unlimited coinage.

We favor the election of United States senators by direct vote of the people.

We deprecate all class legislation as dangerous in precedent and contrary to the spirit of our Republican institutions and believe that the best interests of the agricultural as of all other classes will be best subserved by the Republican party.

R. J. MONTAGUE, Chairman.
E. D. CHILDS, Secretary.

C. O. Christianson attended a meeting of the Republican League in Minneapolis last week and reports a big attendance. One evening while sitting in the rotunda at the West his attention was attracted to a group of gentlemen who were discussing the McKinley bill and the remarks of one in particular struck him, as the gentleman appeared to be a foreigner and he was telling the others the good effects the bill would have in compelling capital from the old country to seek American shores for investment. Said he: "Our company will make an exhibit at the World's Fair and will then put in a plant here at a cost of at least a half million and this may result in the establishment of half a dozen more. I tell you, you Americans do not seem to half appreciate the full significance of that bill, but I firmly believe that ere long you will see it." Speaking of cigarette making a gentleman asked him how he could figure out that cigarettes could be manufactured here, where labor is high, to compete with those made in the old country when labor is cheap? "well," said he, "you know that girls are employed in that business and in our country a girl gets very little wages and is not expected to do very much and she does not. Why, it is a fact that I have noticed frequently that one girl in a factory here will actually accomplish as much work in a day as ten girls will in the old country factories and the wages of the girl in your factory is only about double that of the old country factory girl and there is a proportionate difference in other branches of the business in your favor." After the conversation broke up and the gentlemen moved off Christianson asked one of them who that gentleman was who spoke so highly of the McKinley bill and was told that he was a Turk, a representative of large manufacturing interests in his country. So it would seem that if the average American can see no good to him in the McKinley bill that foreigners can. Besides discussing the McKinley bill the gentlemen also spoke of the probable nominee for president, when the gentleman from Turkey said: "I was talking not long since with one of the most noted men in Paris and he said: 'There are living to-day only five great statesmen and at their head stands James G. Blaine, of Maine, U. S. A.', and, gentlemen, I believe the old Parisian was right about that."

Charlie Vine is not doing any bragging but he is just simply selling the choicest cuts in the market. Try him.

Mentor Items.

Church building and school remonstrance have been the main topic the past week.

Strong talk at present of a new store at Mentor.

Mr. & Mrs. D. Robinson here adopted another son about 34 years of age.

Mr. E. E. Abbott, Jr., is allowed to be the best violinist in this part of the country.

"Swing 'em around" was well called on Friday night at Herman Kemp's.

The glee club gave their weekly entertainment at Mr. W. Marston's on Saturday evening. A chairman with a good programme was appointed. The leading speech on "Cousin John with his Bay Horse and White Hat" was given by Mr. Dalrymple to a laughing audience. A grand supper was given by the ladies. The music was good and sweet, but an explosion of one of the instruments caused a silence. Proceeds, $10.

MICK.

Spring work will be put back by the bad storm we have been having lately, yet it did not stop the weddings that were on hand. On Thursday, March 31st, at the residence of the bride's parents by the Rev. A. G. Washington, James J. Tice to Miss Lilly Robinson. We wish the young couple all kinds of luck with plenty of this world's goods and eternal happiness in the world to come.

PATSY.

Mr. Edgar Drinkwine and Miss Rose Ford were united in wedlock April 3d, 1892, at the residence of Mr. Marshall Magee, where a number of friends were assembled in honor of the event. The ceremony was performed by G. M. Swift, J. P. All present enjoyed the good things provided by the hostess. Mr. Drinkwine is one of our town boys and Miss Ford one of Crookston's ladies, engaged to teach our school for nine months, but as she has only taught six and a-half months Mrs. Edgar Drinkwine will finish the term while Mr. Drinkwine is preparing their future home upon the reservation which will be opened for settlers the 15th of this month. May peace, prosperity and happiness be theirs to enjoy all their life.

G. M. S.

The parties who wrote the articles in the McIntosh Times, signed "Free Grist," don't need to talk about sound judgment, although it seems to have taken those "free grists" a long time to make up their minds what to write about. We wonder where their judgment was. In the first place they say the party signed "Mentor Grip" and "Mick." We would like "Free Grist" to understand that the "Grippe" does not need any help to say what he wants to say, as is the case with "Free Grist. But we suppose you have heard the old saying, "two heads are better than one even if one of them is a sheep's head." Secondly, he says "Grippe" said he didn't know who was the biggest fool. He didn't say "fool," but if the fool's hat fits him better let him wear it. In the third place, those parties speak of strong insinuations, but if they want any names mentioned Grippe is just the boy that can do it, and that without bribing anyone. But we should think Free Grist might find a better partner for the firm than one who would tell all he knows for a cigar, as was the case not long ago. Then they talk about beer. There won't be much beer unloaded at Mentor but what Free Grist or one of the firm knows it, but Grippe would defy Free Grist or any other person to say that he ever ordered a keg of beer since he came to this part of the country, nor has he ever experienced any loss by swiping. But Free Grist seems to know more about beer than the man who makes it. When Grippe wants a drink of beer he can get it and pay for it too; he don't have to swipe it—he is not whiskey sucker enough for that yet. Would Free Grist just think whether he helped to swipe that keg of beer he spoke of last summer or was it winter they got it. The beer must have been rather stale if they kept it till summer.

A Noted Battlefield.

Take up your atlas and find Paducah Kentucky. At this point the Ohio is joined by the Tennessee River. Follow this stream southward—and it is directly south—across the state of Kentucky and Tennessee. You note on the way, instead of towns the names of numerous "landing." Hardin is the last county before you reach the southern boundary of Tennessee. In the western part of this county you note "Pittsburg landing." A little further southwest "Shilohville." Both places are now in country solitude, but thirty years ago day before yesterday there were more than two hundred thousand men there engaged in a desperate battle that raged for two days with varying fortunes. You pass men on the street who had for reveille the rebel yell, as the confeds charged down in the morning; men who lay that night under the river bank at the "landing," and men who marched with Buell to reinforce Grant's army. Get them to tell you the story, and then go on a trip to the field, taking The Burlington from St. Paul or Minneapolis. For tickets, rates and information, address W. J. C. Kenyon, St. Paul, Minn., Gen. Pass. Agent.

Next week THE JOURNAL completes the 15th year. It is one of the few papers in the State, and the only paper in Northern Minnesota that has continued from the initial number until the completion of its 15th year under the same management. The past is passed and we cannot improve on that and while we have striven to make THE JOURNAL an ever welcome visitor to your homes we have not always had the facilities at hand to make it all we could wish, still, as we close the book on volume 15 it is with a feeling of pride that we look at the list of names of those who are constant readers of THE JOURNAL, and it is with a feeling of satisfaction that we review the year's business when we note the fact that that business has placed in our hands almost enough to pay for the contemplated improvements. As an earnest of what these improvements will be we mention the fact that we have negotiated for one of the latest improved styles of the Potter press, costing $1700, a gasoline engine costing $350, a power cutter, $180, and type and material enough to bring the whole amount up pretty close to $3,000. We have not taken in all that money yet, but if all who have promised to do so pay us when they agreed we shall come pretty near starting up the new outfit out of debt. We have also under contemplation other changes that will be to the benefit of our patrons of which we will speak later. Meanwhile we are putting in every minute there is in getting the new outfit ready for business. Though we have been delayed by the weather we still hope to be able to start the new volume on the new press and with the new type.

A Card.

Readers of THE JOURNAL and all others who read The Message for March saw a 12-page paper full of live thoughts for thinking people. The April number of The Message was mailed on April 2d. Here is a little "bill of fare" which we will in the April number present to our kind friends and hungry readers:

1ST PAGE.

Editorial paragraphs on Our Aim, Ruling Children, the Christian Spirit, Country Sunday Schools, Class Exhibition on Sunday, Drones in Churches, Words to Young Women, etc., etc.; also an original poem by a young lady of Crookston, and a life lesson on Going Across Lots.

2ND PAGE.

Under The School Workers, words of the editor about System, How to Measure Pupils' Attainments, Aim in Teaching, Power of the Teacher's Example, Thoroughness, Gentleness, That Bad Boy, etc. Also, If I Were a Boy Again, Woman's Dangerous Age, and, Hope for the Indian.

3RD PAGE.

Poem, How Long, O Lord! by Dr. McArthur. In prose—Samples Demanded, Why Do You Do It? Speckled Chickens, The Higher Criticism as Explained by Itself, and numerous other things full of best thought and entertainment.

4TH PAGE.

Devoted to The Home, a poem on I Will Not Doubt Thee. Prose articles on 12 thrilling short subjects, among which is one by Canon Farrar on Woman.

5TH PAGE.

Sorrow's soliloquy, a poem; I Am vs. I Have Been, by an aged minister, and Gems of Thought, being single sentences by eminent authors.

6TH PAGE.

Editorial, and a quiver full of local arrows gaming for advertisers.

7TH PAGE.

Church page—Calendars of about 20 churches of 8 different creeds. Also items of last month and plans for April in these various churches.

8TH PAGE.

More personal responsibility, by a layman of the Baptist church, Crookston; A Girl's Sphere—the first of a series of articles about young people by the editor; and how the Ladies' Home Journal educates girls free at Vassar college.

9TH PAGE.

Young People's page, very aptly opens with Questions, in poem.

"Can you put the spider's web back in its place, that once has been swept away?
Can you put the apple again on the bough, which fell at your feet to-day?" Etc.

10TH PAGE.

The Deacon's Sermon, Does Alcohol Warm Us, and other practical articles on temperance. Real weapons these are for earnest temperance thinkers and workers.

11TH PAGE.

Christian Endeavor, a perfect drama of the good works and vigorous labors of these Endeavorers and Epworth League workers all over the city and country.

12TH PAGE.

Contains some new advertisements which help to make it attractive to The Message for April.

Please do not put the sample copy sent you back in the post office. Read it and subscribe before April 10th for 50 cts. a year. After April 10th, 75 cts. to all except in clubs.

All over—your sufferings from Catarrh. That is, if you go about it in the right way.

There are plenty of wrong ways, that perhaps you've found out. They may relieve for a time, but they don't cure.

Worse yet, they may drive the disease to the lungs. You can't afford to experiment.

But there is a right way, and a sure way, that does cure. Thousands of otherwise hopeless cases have proved it. It's with Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. By its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties, it permanently cures the worst chronic cases. Catarrhal Headache, "Cold in the Head"—everything catarrhal in its nature, is cured as if by magic.

It's a way so sure that the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Remedy offer, in good faith, $500 for a case of Catarrh which they cannot cure.

If it's sure enough for them to make the offer, it's sure enough for you to make the trial.

They risk $500. What do you risk?

TALKED WITH LONGFELLOW.

Experience of a Green Irish Lad Soon After Arriving.

"When I came to this country," said a merchant recently to a Boston Herald reporter. "I was a lad fresh from old Ireland. My first home was with friends in Cambridge. In one of my walks, before I had been here a week, I came across a queer, old-fashioned house that interested me immensely. I described it to my friends, and learned that it was the home of the poet Longfellow. That increased my interest.

"The next day I went again to the queer house and stood gawkily looking at it and at an old gentleman sitting in the yard. I stared so long that the old gentleman noticed it and, coming up to the fence, asked me what I was looking at. I told him that I wanted to see the man who lived there because I had read his works in the schools of Ireland.

"The old gentleman asked me what I knew about Longfellow's writings and I told him that I knew enough about one poem to repeat every word of it.

"When he heard that he asked me to come into the house and recite the poem to him. I went in and repeated 'The Village Blacksmith' without making a mistake. That pleased my listener, and, putting on his hat, he asked me to walk with him. He said that I should have something that many people had asked for and tried in vain to get.

"He stopped under a big tree and said: 'This is the tree under which that poem you repeated was written. The village smithy was under this tree.'

"Then the aged poet marched up and with his own hands broke off a branch and gave it to me."

A Noted Battlefield.

Take up your atlas and find Paducah, Kentucky. At this point the Ohio is joined by the Tennessee River. Follow this stream southward—and it is directly south—across the states of Kentucky and Tennessee. You note on the way, instead of towns the names of numerous "landings." Hardin is the last county be ore you reach the southern boundary of Tennessee. In the western part of this county you note "Pittsburg Landing." A little further southwest "Shilohville." Both places are now in country solitude, but thirty years ago day before yesterday, there were more than two hundred thousand men there engaged in a desperate battle that raged for two days with varying fortunes. You pass men on the street who had for reveille the rebel yell, as the contestants charged in the dawn of the morning; men who lay that night under the river bank at the "landing," and men who marched with Buell to reinforce Grant's army. Get them to tell you the story, and then go on a trip to the field, taking the Burlington from St. Paul or Minneapolis. For tickets, rates and information address W. J. C. BELLE AND I.

As I watch the waves of the glittering sea
Sweet memories come of Belle Gurnee;
How we used to wonder, hand in hand,
By the waters, on the yielding sand.

There we'd watch the tiny craft sail away,
To the very gates of the outer bay,
Which in imagination we filled with gold
Or of treasures of value untold.

And as time passes on at a rapid pace
She and I still stand on the very same place
Where in childhood our fancies would soar
Far beyond the ocean's roar.

But now nothing remains
Of those fond childish games,
Save memories oft and sweet,
Where we hope again to meet.

—LYDIA G. ESLER.

THROUGH JEALOUSY.

A Woman's Device.

THE first thing Arthur Denning asked his cousin on his return from Europe on taking a stroll with her in the woods, was "Where is Elsie?" Florence Troyo was piqued that he should cut her welcome short by asking for his uncle's ward. She had never quite given up hope of winning Arthur's love herself and had done her best to turn his mind against Miss Newton. "Elsie has gone to visit her friend Lucy Mapleton," she said in answer to his question; "but she will be back tomorrow."

"You might as well say the year after next," he growled. "I wonder if the time has passed as slowly to her since we parted as it has with me?"

"She showed admirable patience," said Florence carelessly. "I used to wonder how she could keep so cheerful. I'm sure I could never have done so."

He smiled good-naturedly.

"The time might have hung heavier," continued Florence, whose look of innocence was fairly childlike now, "but for the kind attentions of your friend Orton Barche. He was here nearly every day, and his presence seemed to cheer Elsie up greatly. I'm sure you ought to feel ever so much obliged to him."

Arthur's smile became a laugh.

"Come, come, Florence," he interrupted, "you always were a bit of a mischief-maker, but you can't make me the least jealous."

"How can you talk so, Cousin Arthur?" pouted Florence. "I never meant any such a thing. There was nothing in the conduct of Elsie and Mr. Barche that any one could criticize. They only sang, and played, and walked, and read poetry together, and"—

"In plain English flirted to their hearts' content," said Arthur, finishing the sentence and breaking into another laugh.

"Oh! Cousin Arthur"—

"I tell you it's no use," broke in Arthur, sauntering off to look after his luggage, which had just arrived.

Florence went out the next morning, and it was nearly noon when she and Arthur met.

"See," she said, on coming down from taking off her things, "something I've just found that Elsie forgot when she was leaving. How vexed she'll be when she misses it! She has worn it constantly of late."

"Why, it's the locket I gave her with my picture in it," said Arthur, taking the trinket in his hand.

"You say she has kept it constantly about her?" he asked, with manifest delight.

"Night and day lately," Florence answered.

Arthur touched the spring mechanically and the case opened. An electric shock could not have started him more suddenly. Instead of his own likeness it was that of Orton Barche that met his eyes! It was true, then, that in his absence another had supplanted him in the heart which he had fondly believed all his own.

He stood for a moment pale and silent. Then flinging aside the telltale bauble, he hurried to his room and made hasty preparations for an immediate journey. These finished, he penned a letter to Elsie filled with bitter and upbraiding words, and in terms of withering scorn giving her back her promise.

Instructing the servant to deliver his luggage to the messenger who would call for it, and leaving the letter to be delivered to Elsie, he hastened from the house, brushing past Florence with a hurried farewell.

An hour later Arthur Denning was a passenger on the "Lightning Express," experiencing a sort of undefined relief in the thought that every minute was carrying him further and further from the scene of his betrayal. There was, moreover, something in the noise and rapid motion in harmony with the turmoil of his feelings.

A shock—a crash—cries of men and shrieks of women—that was all Arthur could remember when, days afterward, he returned to consciousness, to find his head swathed in bandages and his arm cased in splints. Bending over him was a sweet, gentle face, full of tenderest sympathy. The parted lips breathed his name, and he looked up with a glad expression, which quickly faded away as if extinguished by some painful memory.

"Oh! Elsie, Elsie!" he murmured, "that you, of all the world, should have proved false?"

"How came you to doubt me, Arthur?"

As he gazed into her loving, truthful eyes he asked himself the same question. How, indeed, could he?

"But the locket"——

"The one you gave me with your picture?" she asked. "Here it is. I have guarded it most carefully;" and she held it open before his eyes, revealing his own likeness!

The truth flashed upon him. He understood now why Florence had gone out that morning. She had taken the locket from Elsie's room and had the picture replaced with one of Orton Barche, taking care, of course, after Arthur's departure and before Elsie's return, to have the original likeness restored.

"Forgive me, darling!" said Arthur, reaching out his hand, which Elsie took and pressed tenderly.

And then he told her all, and Elsie promised to give Florence a piece of her mind when they met, and we have no doubt she kept her word.

POISON IN TEA.

"Strength" in Tea Sometimes Merely a Chemical Ingredient.

Frequently one encounters such advertisements as these: "Drink Indian Tea. It is twice as strong and thrice as cheap as Chinese!" "Use Ballyhoo tea; four times stronger than Chinese, and therefore four times cheaper!" What truth is there to these assertions? As a matter of chemistry, physiology and gastronomic taste, China tea has the largest amount of theine and essential oils, and of the Chinese varieties, the foremost place is occupied by the Formosa. It is for the benignant effect upon the nerves of the former and the pleasure of the perfume of the latter that we drink the cup that cheers but does not inebriate, writes the American consul at Amoy in the New York Advertiser.

As a matter of fact, all teas contain an astringent principle. We call it tannin, for convenience, but in reality it consists of tannic acid. Chinese teas contain the least. Indian the most. The other lands lie between these extremes. A very little tannin does but little if any harm. In fact, physicians frequently prescribe tea for its astringency. An appreciable quantity of tannic acid injures stomach, intestines and nerves. The statement, therefore, that one tea is four times stronger than another means four times stronger in tannin, and therefore 16 times more pernicious to human health. Such advertisements as those quoted are really badges of inferiority. If true, the things they recommend as good are good to be avoided.

Would it not be well for the public to have a law passed similar to those in force in many European nations, requiring manufacturers, dealers and tradesmen to print and post a notice upon the goods, stating whether these are pure or mixed; and if the latter, mixed with what ingredients; a second law, prohibiting the mixing of a second-hand, chemically-prepared rubbish with tea of any sort; a third, whereby the chemists employed in the appraiser's department of the custom house should regularly analyze and publish the composition of all the teas entered the market with a special reference to the theine, essential oils, tannin and impurities? Something of this nature should be done and done immediately.

HIRAM AND THE BULL.

It Was an Undecided Question Which Was the Greatest Coward.

Ten years ago the hunter, ambitious to secure the buffalo, could still go to a region where he could kill hundreds of them. Then there was a western "town" into which the buffalo often came down at night, says Forest and Stream, and it was not unusual for the residents when they arose in the morning to see a bunch within rifle range of the houses. Among the dwellers in this town was one who, although he had lived on the frontier since the early sixties, had never killed a buffalo. One morning when Hiram looked out of his door he saw, not far away, a great buffalo bull rubbing his ragged sides against the bole of an old cottonwood tree. Here was a chance such as had never before presented itself. "Such an opportunity might not occur again," and he was filled with a great longing to kill this bull.

Seizing a gun, he crept out, and, stealing through the sage-brush and among the trees, was soon quite near the bull. Its immense size—for he had never before been close to a buffalo—somewhat startled the hunter, but he had gone too far to retreat now. Feeling a little nervous, he leveled his gun and fired. At the report the bull jumped a little and then glared slowly about with an air of the utmost ferocity, as if eager to pulverize whoever had fired the shot. This slow, searching gaze and the brute's fierce aspect were too much for Hi's nerves. They gave way, and dropping his gun he ran nimbly to the nearest tree and climbed into it with the activity of a boy. The bull meantime was thundering off in the opposite direction, while some of Hiram's companions, who had been looking on, were shouting with laughter.

Milk a Microbe Killer.

Dr. Freudenreich (Germany) has found by experiments that the cholera bacillus, if put into milk drawn fresh from the cow, dies in an hour, and in five hours if put into fresh goat's milk. The bacillus of typhoid fever takes twenty-four hours to die in cow's milk, and five hours in goat's milk. Other microbes suffer a like fate in varying periods. But he has also found that milk maintained for an hour at a temperature of 131° Fahrenheit, loses its power to kill microbes—a statement which is of interest in face of the teaching which makes the purification of milk depend upon its being boiled. Again, the bactericidal properties of milk become weaker the older it gets, for cow's milk after four days, and goat's milk after five days, cease to have any effect upon micro-organisms.—Medical Record.

Cunning of a Dog.

Hunting dogs, when they grow old, become rheumatic, or are at least debilitated with pains. We know, too, that they crave heat, and get as near the fire as possible—a craving which increases as they grow old. One such dog, older than the others and slower in getting into the lodge on returning from the hunt, was often crowded away from the fire by other dogs getting all the best places before him. Finding himself thus turned out in the cold, he would dash toward the door barking, when the others, supposing it was an alarm, would rush away too, while the old rheumatic went to the fire and selected a place to suit him.—Revue Scientifique.

SOME FARMING TOPICS.

USEFUL INFORMATION FOR INDUSTRIOUS FARMERS.

How Twenty-four Acres Were Made to Pay—Poultry as a Farm Specialty—When to Water Horses.

Irrigating Farm Lands.

We do not think it would be a wise thing for the general government to undertake, the expense of the whole country, the irrigation of the arid regions of the West. That is what interested parties would like to have it do; but it would be a costly affair, and not in the strict line of government business.

But irrigation of these great arid districts, embracing about one-third of the entire area of the United States leaving out Alaska, would add immensely to the cultivatable land within our national limits. They are now of no value whatever for agricultural purposes. The rainfall is so slight, if any, that nothing will grow there.

But with an efficient system of irrigation these wilderness regions could be made "to bud and blossom as the rose." It is estimated that an area equal to the States of Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio and Iowa could be reclaimed by irrigation, and brought to yield crops 100 per cent. greater than where the rainfall is depended upon for the supply of water for the growing crops.

But this is for private enterprise to undertake. A private corporation, operated on business principles, could and would do the work much more economically and quickly than it could be done by the general government. Those who, on a comparatively small scale, have already begun operations, have done well, we understand the irrigated lands yielding average crops twice as large as those grown on naturally irrigated soils, and paying a handsome profit to the company and the farmer. Such success has stimulated enterprise, and it is reported that irrigation works are now in process of construction in Arizona and New Mexico, which will, when completed, bring under cultivation at least a million acres of land.

As the necessity for new fields to conquer arises, these private works will multiply to supply the need. There will be a healthy increase, based on actual need, much more desirable than the forced and vastly more expensive method of public enterprise.

But it is not alone on these arid lands that irrigation may be profitably employed. As has already been stated, the crops raised on the irrigation soils is twice as great as in localities dependent on the natural water supply. This suggests an inquiry.

Why would it not pay to employ irrigation more generally in the older regions of the United States? As is well known the dependence of the farmer upon the "showers that water the earth" is becoming a less and less safe one. The summer rainfall is "mighty onsartin." It is very apt to fail just when it is most needed—when the crops, deprived of the necessary supply of water, become stunted and yield only a scanty harvest. If means were provided whereby the necessary water could be supplied at moderate cost the crops could be kept growing steadily, and the yield could be correspondingly large.

In New England and the Middle States it would not be difficult in many localities, to provide reservoirs, either for single farms or groups of farms, in which could be stored up the needed supply for distribution when required. Or, by means of windmills or force-pumps, water could be lifted from rivers or ponds, and either stored in distributing reservoirs or sent directly on the land.

It might at first thought seem somewhat absurd to talk of irrigation on New England farms.

But, as above intimated, the summer rain-fall has become so uncertain that crops are not infrequently damaged beyond recovery by a few days' drought, occurring just when a supply of moisture is most needed. And this is true in all our agricultural territory. If judiciously undertaken a system of irrigation would amply repay the cost, and impart to the growing of crops a far more stable character than now exists.

The subject is one of great and widespread interest. It should be more generally discussed.

How Twentyfour Acres Were Made to Pay.

I commenced to haul manure in the fall and spread it on the land until about February, for corn. Then hauled into my barnyard till it was about two feet deep all over. The cattle tramping over it made excellent manure for crops of any kind. This was hauled out about the first of May on ground plowed for corn, harrowed in, then corn planted. I also hauled into my young orchard, plowed under, and planted sweet corn, cabbage, tomatoes beans, horseradishes and strawberries. In January, when it was so cold we could not haul manure, we did a good deal of thinking and planning. My wife would get discouraged and say "let us move to town; we are not making a living here." I would say, "no let us worry it through for a year or two and do our best, and then if no better we will sell out."

I found we had to buy our flour and groceries, and could not raise enough to sell to buy them with, and our clothes were getting the worse of wear. Our family consisted of wife, two girls and one boy six years old. I hadn't much help and not a cent of income outside of the place. There were three things most essential to bring up the fertility of the soil—tile draining, manure, and clover. I could, by the hardest effort, manage to buy clover seed and a few fruit trees every spring. I knew the fruit trees would in a few years bring in something. And as to tile, I went in debt for most of them and could trade such things as I had for sale for the digging of the trenches.

Another thing we must do, and that is to manage to have something to sell every month in the year. No special farming for me. I never did believe in it unless it was dairying on a large scale, or raising horses, cattle, hogs, or sheep, for sale. This spring I put down two rods of tile drain where most needed; bought and planted a few more fruit trees and fifty Russian mulberry trees for shade and for the birds. These I planted alternately with soft and hard maple, along the pike and up the driveway; set out blackberries, raspberries, currants, gooseberries, and two hundred grapevines. These I bought from one of our nurseries, to be paid for when I could. I bought another cow, a brood sow and a pure-bred male hog, and am raising pure Poland-China hogs. Have my two sows farrow twice a year, save the spring pigs for my own use and sell the fall pigs at good prices to any person who wants them, I can sell my surplus at paying prices.

I built some more fence, kept the fence rows clean. Sold our property in town, paid off part of the mortgage; left three hundred dollars; paid off some pressing debts. We converted everything into cash that we could spare, and saved the money to apply on debts and such things as we actually needed. We sold all the small fruits and vegetables we could spare. Sold the best and kept the balance for our own use. We grated horseradish and sold it to eating-houses and groceries at one dollar per gallon. During any of my spare time, or when I made a trip to town, took my wagon and brought home a load of manure. The only thing (as I said before) that we could depend upon to a certainty to make the poor farm pay was the manure and clover, and how well we succeeded time will tell.—J. H. Fishnell, in Ohio Farmer.

Poultry as a Farm Specialty.

Some farmers find good markets for both eggs and broilers at their town, but this is not usually the case, neither is it possible to obtain prices that would pay them a profit worth while raising in large numbers. It is therefore best to breed for one or the other—eggs or broilers. For broilers of course the Brahma, Langshan, Plymouth Rock, Wyandotte, Indian Game and Cochins are the best kinds, that produce the larger and better dressed fowl at an early age, this being the point to be observed in broiler raising. Of course a cross of two or more of the above-mentioned breeds is frequently made by broiler raisers to improve them in flesh and form, and in many cases they answer the purpose just as well as separate varieties, and as you should sell them dressed for the markets no advantage can be taken of the blooded stock by unscrupulous dealers who would sell them at fancy prices and clear a neat profit by doing so.

Flocks can be greatly improved by weeding out every season all small birds selecting only such large, well formed and that will bring forth progeny of the same type, rapid maturing, capable of being placed on the markets at twelve weeks, and will command top prices. These are birds that are the best as broilers, and any farmer can produce them if he half tries. Without ample capital and accommodations for a dozen helpers, the farmer of today cannot expect to become wealthy from the production of his land, for all he will get or expect is hard work, a good quiet life, good health, plenty to eat and a tired body each day during the spring and summer season. A speciality such as poultry keeping, will bring him more returns for the labor and capital than farm labor ever can.

When to Water Horses.

Suppose the horse is just brought into the stable, from work or driving. In this case, only a few swallows of water should be given until he gets cool. If he is then to be fed at once, he should have not more than two or three quarts of water; but if he is to stand an hour before feeding, he may have a pailful, and it will largely be absorbed, or pass through the small intestines into the cæcum, or large intestines. This is a reservoir holding about twice as much as the stomach. It will here do no harm, but if this amount of water were given just before feeding, it would weaken the digestive power of the stomach, dilute the gastric juice, and be apt to cause indigestion. And if much water is taken immediately after eating, it is liable to wash the contents of the stomach into the intestines, where digestion of albuminoids cannot properly take place, and is liable to cause fermentation and liberation of gases, which may produce distension, colic and inflammation.

It will be seen by this that when just a little water is given immediately before feeding, and the food is masticated and moistened with saliva, it goes into the stomach and receives the full power of the gastric juice, dissolving out all the albuminoids, and then passes into the intestines and undergoes further digestion for carbo-hydrates. If the horse is to return to work very soon after eating, only a few quarts of water should be allowed.

The above remarks are made upon general principles. But if the horse is fed on hay or other coarse fodder, moistened and mixed with grain food, which must be thoroughly masticated before being swallowed, causing a proper flow of saliva, which becomes a sufficient moisture of the stomach for the proper action of the gastric juice, there is less liability to injury by modification in watering.

THE GREAT HESPER.

TALE OF A BIG DIAMOND.

How an Immense Gem Was Lost, Recovered, and Lost Again.

CHAPTER V.

When I met Sir Edmund in the morning, I told him that my partners had agreed with me to alter the clause in the agreement, though we had not yet decided in what manner.

"I am glad to hear it," he said; "anything will be better than that agreement as it stands."

Edith came down late to breakfast. She looked pale, and said she had overslept herself.

"For the first time in your life, I believe," said Sir Edmund. "You did not fall asleep quite so readily as usual,—hey?" he asked, smilingly.

"I could not sleep," she answerd, but so gravely that it was not from the cause the Baronet implied,—the love that had kept me awake; and then she added, "I have been terribly frightened."

We looked at her in astonishment and anxiety.

"I will tell you all about it," she continued, "because you may be able to explain what preplexes me, and that will be a great relief."

She paused, as if to collect her thoughts.

"I was nearly asleep, when I noticed a sound coming from the window. It was as if some one were rapping upon the glass,—not loudly or quickly, but softly as though with the tip of the finger, at intervals. I might have counted twenty or thirty between one tap and the next. I took little notice of it at first, thinking that, as I had left the windows partly open, it might be the wind moving the Venetian blind; but after a while the persistent tap,—tap,—tap irritated me. I rose and lit a candle; then I went to the window. The lattice was just as I had left it. The blind hung perfectly motionless. I drew it up and looked out. There was a gray mist everywhere. Not a breath of air stirred; the flame of the candle burned as steadily as though the window had been closed. I let down the blind, and listened; there was not the slightest sound."

"A moth on the ceiling," said Sir Edmund; "they have worried me in the same manner. Then you get a light and the thing stops."

"Hold on, we ain't heered the last on it, I kin see," said the Judge, looking at Miss Lascelles intently, his shaggy brows bent over his quick eyes.

"I explained it as you do, papa. I put out the light and tried to sleep. I heard no sound for quite ten minutes, I think, and then again that soft, slow tap—tap,—tap came from the window, —same sound, with same long interval between them. It was not like the beat of a moth's wing. It was like nothing but the touch of a human finger. But I tried to think it was an insect in the wall,—the insect that is called the 'death watch.' And I did my best to take no notice of it, but I could not help hearing it; and after a time I grew frightened, and the sound grew dreadful in my ears. It became unendurable; I could not lie there listening passively. I got up again, and struck a match. The wick of the candle was slow to light, and during those moments I noticed that the sound had ceased. As I say, I was frightened,—very frightened. And the unbroken silence seemed more terrible than the sound. There was something ghostly and supernatural about it, that brought back the old terror I used to feel, as a child, in passing the room that is said to be haunted at night. And just then the clock in the belfry struck, I dared not go to the window. My hand trembled so that I could not take up the candle, but I looked towards the window. The first thing that struck me was that the laths of the blinds, instead of lying flat, as they generally do, when down, and as I had left them, were opened and turned edge-ways,—do you know how I mean?"

She held her hands, that trembled with recollection of her terror, one above the other horizontally.

"But the next thing," she continued, and then stopped, with a little shudder, while we who listened held our breath,—"the next thing I saw was two great black eyes that caught the light from my candle as they glared in between the lower laths of the blind."

She paused, and then continued, with more firmness:

"I think I fainted,—I must have done so, for I was conscious of nothing after that, until I found myself upon the floor. The light was still burning upon the table. As recollection returned to me, I looked toward the window. The laths were no longer opened, but turned flat. Then it occurred to me that all I had seen was merely a realistic dream,—that I had gone through these experiences in my sleep. My great terror was gone. I went without fear to the window to ascertain if the night was as I had seen it. There was the gray mist; the flame of the candle did not flicker. Nevertheless, when I looked down and saw how impossible it was for any one to have stood outside the window, I felt convinced than at least the vision of the two eyes was imaginary,—an outcome of the fear I felt when I looked toward the window. I lay down again, and, though I could not sleep for some time, I heard no further sound whatever, save the chiming of the clock."

"Is it not very probable, my dear," said the Baronet, "that the sound you speak of was also the outcome of fear?"

"I had no fear when I went first to the window. The sound was a reality. It is that I wish explained."

"Do you know what time it was when the tapping first began, Miss Lascelles?" Van Hoeck asked.

"It was a quarter to one by my watch when I recovered from the fit."

"May I ask, miss, without offense, if a thing o' this kind has ever happened to you afore?" asked the Judge.

"As a child I was timid; but I can not remember ever being so frightened."

"You don't look as if a trifle would skeer you, I will allow;" and rising from his chair, the Judge added, "if you'll excuse me, I'll go and prospect the place straight off, for I'm lorth to say it looks to me like as if the Kid had been taking a hand in this game."

"By all means," said the Baronet; "the sooner the truth is discovered the better."

We all went out onto the lawn which faced that part of the building in which Edith's room was situated.

On the way Van Hoeck who had taken my arm for guidance, gripped it tightly, and whispered;

"What did I tell you? This is the beginning of the end!"

CHAPTER VI.

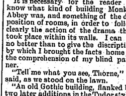
It is necessary for the reader to know what kind of building Monken Abbey was, and something of the disposition of rooms, in order to follow clearly the action of the drama that took place within its walls. I can do no better than to give the discription by which I brought the facts home to the comprehension of my blind partner.

"Tell me what you see, Thorne," he said, as we stood on the lawn.

"An old Gothic building, flanked by two later additions in the Tudor style, that project beyond it."

"I don't understand," he said, impatiently; "can't you make it clearer to me?"

I had a note-book in my pocket; pressing the metallic pencil hard upon the paper, I drew this rough diagram:



He passed his sensitive fingers over the impression.

"The two end blocks are the additions you speak of, the space between them the old part. I understand. Go on," he said.

"The great door is in the centre of the old part, the dining-room is on one side, the library on the other. The floor above is occupied by the picture gallery. It has a gable roof, and the belfry rises from the middle. The block on the right and that on the left are alike. The ground floor is divided into drawing-rooms, sitting-rooms, kitchens, etc."

"Where is the dairy, and the door that is left open at night for the Kid?"

"At the back of the house; it can not be seen from here."

"Is that in the right block or the left?"

"In the right; the kitchen is in the left. On the first floor are the principal bedrooms; the servants' are above. Our rooms are in the right block, Sir Edmund's and Miss Lascelles' are in the left."

"What means of communication are there? For instance, how could Sir Edmund get to your room?"

"By simply passing through the picture gallery."

"I understand; go on."

"There are two oriel windows and a bay in the end of the left block facing us as we stand here."

I drew another diagram to explain the windows to Van Hoeck. Here it is:

"The oriel on the left," I continued, "projects from Sir Edmund's room: that on the right from Miss Lascelles'. There are stone mullions at the angles of the oriel, and lattice windows between, hung inside with Venetian blinds. I have marked a cross where Miss Lascelles saw the eyes looking through. The oriels are supported by corbels. They are perfectly inaccessible from the ground except by a ladder."

"But from the story above?"

"There are no windows over the oriel. The only means of descent would be by a rope from the roof."

"Are there any other means of getting at the window?"

"None whatever that any human being could use."

"What is this projection between the oriels?" he asked, feeling the paper.

"A two-sided bay carried up from the ground to the gable, pierced with latticed windows from top to bottom. It gives light to the stairs inside."

"Do the windows open?"

"Yes."

"And what distance is there between the windows in the bay and Miss Lascelles' window?"

"Seven or eight feet at least."

"And the wall between is perfectly flat?"

"There is a stone moulding runs along parallel with the floor of the first story and the base of the oriel."

"Why didn't you tell me that?" he asked sharply.

"Because it is perfectly impossible for any one to walk along it."

"What width has it?"

"A few inches. It seems to be merely a stone gutter to carry off the water from the oriel."

"Is there no ivy on the house,—nothing to catch hold of?"

"There is no ivy, but there is a pipe midway between the bay and oriel; it descends from the gable to the gutter."

"What! and you tell me it is impossible to get from the bay to the window!"

"I still mean what I said. The gutter is so narrow that no one, even facing the wall closely, could stand on it and maintain a centre of gravity."

"But with the aid of the pipe?"

"The pipe is four feet from the bay, and four feet from the oriel. Now, suppose Lola, for I know whom you suspect, got from the window in the bay; she would have to advance holding to the mullion of the window for support, and with one hand only, until the other could catch the pipe, a span of four feet."

"Four feet; that is not impossible, unless the girl is short limbed."

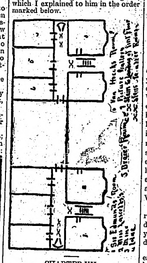
"It is impossible, if in holding to the mullion or the pipe, the girl had to support part of her own weight."

"Let us go and measure the width of the ledge," said Van Hoeck; it may appear from below less than it is."

We went up to my bedroom in the right block, which, as I have said corresponded in every external respect to the block on the left; and from the oriel, I measured the width of the stone ledge outside. Van Hoeck's supposition was just: it was wider than I expected, measuring a trifle less than my span, which is nine inches. Van Hoeck placed himself flat against a wall, and, turning out his toes until he obtained the limit of width upon which he could sustain his equilibrium, bade me measure the distance between his heel and the wall. I found it was fully three inches within my span, and was astonished to perceive upon how narrow a space one may stand with safety. This settled the point. Lola might well have passed along the ledge with safety.

"Now," said Van Hoeck, "draw me a plan of the rooms, roughly and broadly, showing their relative position to the stairs, the bay, and the picture gallery."

I complied with his request, marking the several parts with figures, which I explained to him in the order marked below.



CHAPTER VII.

But I was still incredulous. How was the girl hiding in the woods all day to know of the existence of the ledge? It was true she had access to the house at night; but I doubted if it were possible for her to see the ledge in the dark, even from the bay window. But admitting the possibility would she risk her life for no purpose but to alarm Miss Lascelles? There was too much strength in Lola's character for such a senseless and feeble device to be acceptable to her. It was not the act of a rational being, but of a mischievous or malevolent idiot.

I was inclined to believe that the explanation Miss Lascelles had offered was a just one, and that what she had seen was purely imaginative and the result of fear, inspired by those mysterious sounds which might yet be explained.

This was not Van Hoeck's opinion, nor was it Brace's.

"I will not say the Kid hes not done it," he said; "there's no sayin' what greaser blood will not do. For the sake of argyment, we will say she did; but I ondertake she shall not play the same bower twice, if her father's persuasion counts anythin';" and he went off at once to search for Lola in the wood.

When we were alone, Van Hoeck said:

"Ask Sir Edmund; he will tell you, as he told me, that Brace was in the woods yesterday while you were philandering with Miss Lascelles. What was he there for but to find his daughter and employ her in working out this plot?"

Training Extraordinary.

About ten years ago C—— occupied a foremost position as a long-distance runner, and was noted as possessing an extraordinary amount of endurance.

Unfortunately he was not very quick-witted, which resulted in his discomfiture on more than one occasion. He inherited the quality of placing implicit confidence in the instructions of his trainer, to whose direction he attributed much of his success in the racing path.

About six o'clock one summer evening, prior to a coming race, C—— went to the ground for a practice spin, accompanied by his trainer, and the latter, after fulfilling the duties attached to his office, arranged that C—— should run round until be signalled to him to stop.

Meanwhile, the trainer, being of a somewhat bibulous nature, adjourned to a neighboring public-house for a "refresher." As may be surmised, the warm sultry evening was conducive to accelerating his thirst, and he indulged rather freely. The result was that it overcame him, and he fell into a sound slumber, which lasted until closing time, 11 p. m., when he was rudely awakened by "mine host."

He suddenly remembered the instructions he had given to C——, and he forthwith repaired to the ground, when lo, there was his man plodding like a locomotive round the track. He signalled for C—— to stop, and after explanations, both resolved to keep the matter a secret. The affair, however, got circulated amongst the frequenters of the ground, and many a good laugh is the result when the story is told amongst his associates.

Wonderful Memory of a Horse.

A. R. Hill, a leading lawyer of Danville, Ill., is in this city on a peculiar mission. He came to recover an old family horse that was stolen from him on Dec. 21, 1890, and which he has followed over 1,000 miles. The thief that stole the horse carried it to Indianapolis, and sold it to some horse-dealers. They sold it to some Atlanta stock dealers, who shipped it to this city. A gentleman from Mr. Hill's home, who was visiting in the city, saw the horse and recognized it, and at once notified the owner. Mr. Hill came to see about the much-beloved animal. On his arrival he was informed that his horse was in the stables of Hill and Walker, and that he would have to prove beyond a doubt the identity of it before he could have it. With some other gentlemen Mr. Hill proceeded to the stable. When he walked into the stall the horse neighed and pranced, and when Mr. Hill held out his hand the horse licked it with seemingly as much passion as ever one person kissed another. The gentlemen present were astounded at the instant recognition of the master by the faithful old family horse after a full year's absence. The gentleman, who had possession of the horse told Mr. Hill to take it, remarking: "You need not identify the horse; he has identified you. I would hate to be a murderer and own that horse. I might run on him some day and could never conceal my identity." The horse will be shipped to Danville and Mr. Hill will follow him.—Elberton (Ga.) Star.

THE YOUNG FOLK'S CORNER

INTERESTING TOPICS FOR BRIGHT YOUNG PEOPLE.

Webster's Messenger Boy—The Clock and the Story—The Story of Billiards—A True Dog Story—A Gold Pocket Knife.

Webster's Messenger Boy.

While Daniel Webster was secretary of state under President Fillmore, a young boy named Stephen Wise was employed by him as messenger. Mr. Webster grew very fond of the thin, delicate, dark-eyed lad, and finding him honest and reliable intrusted him with papers and personal effects in a most careless and wholesome manner. But Stephen's sharp eyes saw everything, and his attentive ears heard all that was passing and he gathered up information about everything that came into his hands, and could have supplied any facts Mr. Webster had forgotten.

Mr. Webster said one day: "You read too much. My law books are too dry and old for chaps of 14. While you wait for me run up and down under the trees."

Stephen shook his head. He said eagerly: "No, Mr. Webster, I can't lose such opportunities as I have with you, sir."

"Ambitious, Stephen?" dryly asked Mr. Webster. "Going to be a lawyer or a president?"

"A lawyer, sir, I will study 20 years to—be"—

Stephen's head drooped under the deepset eyes looking him through.

"A great lawyer, of course, Stephen?" Mr. Webster said, with a smile.

"Yes, sir! not great like Mr. Daniel Webster—but as great as I can become."

In all Mr. Webster's public life he rarely asked favors for himself or friends, but that night he spoke about his messenger boy to his friend Judge Marshall, of Virginia. "If I die first I want you to look after Stephen. When a boy of his age starts up the ladder with the persistence and pluck of a middle-aged man of ability he must be helped along. Stephen's in a fair way to get to the top."

For four years Stephen had the advantage of working for Mr. Webster—an advantage he knew how to use. He copied speeches, read criticisms, examined and arranged papers—each and all for his own thought—and into the small hours he studied Mr. Webster's law books.

When Stephen Wise was 25 he was practicing law in Virginia, his native state. Then did the residents of Washington remember his magnetic arguments in the law courts of those early days; remember well the dark, wiry, thin Virginian, who, with his court papers under his arm, was always dropping into the senate chamber at the hour of a great debate, or into the libraries for fresh knowledge to bear on his arguments and opinions.

He argued with the first jurists of the time, and was retained in the same causes with the eminent men of his profession. Fathers were wont to point out Stephen Wise, the celebrated lawyer, and tell their sons the story of the little fellow, hungry for knowledge, who was picked up by Daniel Webster and got the larger part of his learning while acting as the great man's office boy.

Elements of Success.

Mark Holmes was a young man of brilliant parts. He was an indefatigable worker, and his ideas as to quality of work in what he did were of the highest. He wrote a perfectly legible, clear and rapid hand. His shorthand writing was like engraving, his type-writing was faultless. The drawings he made the first year of his scientific course he presented by request of the Professor, to the college in which he was a student, as models for the other students to emulate. His recitations were invariably prepared with care, and his deportment was beyond criticism.

Yet when he saw young men in his classes with talents so much more showy and brilliant than his, he was inclined to despond as to his success in life. He was rather slow of speech, and found his pleasure in literary companionship with authors in their books rather than with the young men about him. He did not smoke cigars, or carry a cane, or take a drink, or sing a comic song. There was no fun in these things to him.

Fortunately he had a friend some years older than himself with whom he discussed his future with perfect frankness. At the conclusion of one of their talks this friend said to him: "You need have no misgivings as to your future. With you character will be as large a factor in your success as education, family or general ability. What the world needs is men who can be trusted, who can be depended on, whose integrity is firm, whose honesty is incorruptible, whose escutcheon is spotless. I am glad you are not brilliant. Many a young man has been wrecked by the possession of shining abilities, unbalanced by sterling virtue and established principle. You have only to go on as you are now doing, and the way will open before you; positions will seek you, and you will perhaps slowly but surely rise to the level you are capable of reaching by the simple force of your character and your manhood."—Ex.

A True Dog Story.

Gyp was a handsome brown spaniel, of the kind known as "bird dogs." When only a little puppy her instinct as a bird setter showed itself in a passion for chasing and killing young chickens, and as she grew older, not even the larger fowls were safe from her sharp teeth. At last, however, by much patience and punishing on the part of her master, Gyp was taught not to chase the fowls, on her master's premises at least.

One of the children of the family had a pet hen, which, being always near the house, annoyed Gyp very much by stealing the food from the plate of scraps set out for the dog upon the back porch. In vain Gyp did chase her away. As long as she forbore giving her a shaking, old Biddy would return on the instant that Gyp went back to her plate and snatch another choice bit under her very nose.

At last the poor dog's patience was worn out, and one morning Gyp resolved to put old Biddy out of the way, and yet not risk the punishment by killing her in the way common to bird dogs. She seized the hen in her teeth, and ran with it to the garden, where, still holding it in her mouth, she scratched a deep hole in the earth and laid the squawking hen in it, holding her down with one paw, while with the other she proceeded to bury her tormentor alive.

So well did she accomplish this task that it is doubtful if the hen could have gotten out without help. When the hen was buried, Gyp trotted back to finish her breakfast in peace.

The hen was released uninjured, and ran cackling to the barn-yard. The lesson proved a good one, however, and if the hen ever came near the plate of food again, a spring at her from Gyp would send her away in great fright.—Harper's Young People.

The Clock and the Story.

This was a queer clock. It looked like a small bird-house, and hung quite high on the wall, out of reach of the cat.

It was a rainy day, and Mabel, Dora, and Fred were tired of their toys, for they had had a long play with them. What should they do next? Just then Aunt Kate came into the room, and the three little folks cried out with one voice: "Aunt Kate, tell us a story! Please do!"

Aunt Kate looked up at the clock, and said: "Well, it must be a short one, for I can only stay with you a few moments. I know you are fond of birds, so I will tell you of one that is too lazy to build a nest for itself. It lays its eggs in the nests of other birds, and leaves them there to be kept warm and hatched out. Is she not a strange kind of a mother, to take no thought or care of her little ones, and see that they are well brought up?"

"What is the bird's name?" asked Fred, "I should think all the other birds would hate her."

"Maybe they do," said Aunt Kate, going toward the door.

"Tell us its name," cried the children.

"The clock will do that," said Aunt Kate.

And then there was a great whir and whiz inside the clock, and out popped a wee mite of a bird, who said, "Cuckoo! cuck-oo! cuck-oo!" at the top of its lungs.

And the clock told the truth, for that was the bird's name.

A Rich Musician.

Generally professional men, and especially musicians, are very poor business men. Rossini was, however, an exception, though he did not prove himself to be an exception until quite late in life. He wrote William Tell, which is one of the greatest of operas. The work insured him fame for all time, and caused him to be buried in Pere la Chaise, a Paris cemetery wherein many great Frenchmen of times have been interred. But while Rossini was at work upon his famous opera he lived in a garret. His room was reached by not even a stairway, but by a ladder which led up to a trap-door in the floor. For his opera the French government paid him $3000. With it he speculated on the Bourse, and, unlike most men, succeeded there. Every venture was fortunate in its results, and a handsome fortune was soon accumulated. Dying, he left this fortne to his successors in music. Part of it went to found at Pesaro, where he was born, a fine school of music. The remainder went to establish in Paris, where he died, a pleasant home for old musicians.

A Gold Pocket Knife.

The costliest pocket-knives manufactured for sale are retailed at a store in New York city, which sells nothing but knives. There are 1500 different kinds on exhibition in the window, ranging in price from 5 cents to $25. The $25 knife is the costliest known. The outside plates of its handle are solid gold, and it contains two small blades only, a nail file and a miniature pair of scissors. There is a little hook in the handle by which it may be attached to the watch chain. The sales of the $25 knife are very slow.

The largest knife in America is supposed to be in Cincinnati. It has fifty-six blades and is a chest of tools in itself, containing almost anything from a tooth-pick to a cigar punch, from a pair of scissors to a handsaw. It is for sale at $500 and weighs thirteen pounds.

The largest knife ever known was made by Jonathan Crookes, a workman for Joseph Rodgers in Sheffield. It had 1821 blades.

The Story of Billiards.

The first billiard player is declared by those who have investigated the subject to have been a London pawnbroker named William Kew. It is his name spelled differently which is applied to the stick universally used in the game of billards and known as a "cue."

A letter in the British Museum says that Kew not only loaned the money but sold cloth, and that the three round balls, which he had hung in front of his shop as a sign, were taken down one day to be cleaned and polished and were laid on the cloth, counter by the yardstick. Picking up the yard-stick carelessly Kew began to punch these balls about on the smooth surface of the cloth spread out before him, and soon acquired a certain sort of skill at making one glance from the other. He got to be quite fond of this amusement, which his friends called "Bill's yard." This was afterwards, the letter says, shortened into "billiards."

Punishment of Wife-Beaters in Germany.

Mr. Labouchere writes:—My attention has been called to a system said to be in force in Germany, by which a man may be imprisoned for an assault on his wife or children without causing the punishment to react to the further disadvantage of his victims. The plan consists in imprisoning him only on his holidays. He is taken every Saturday when he leaves work and locked up till Monday morning, and this process is repeated until he has done his "month," or whatever the term may be. The idea is ingenious, but I do not see how it could be worked effectually except in a country where the whole population are under close police supervision.

CORRECTING AN ITEM.

Alkali Ike Calls for a Retraction, but Fails to Connect.

"Do I look like a dead man?"

This question was shot at the head of the editor of the Bazoo by a man of ferocious aspect, who entered the sanctum in a hurry.

"My friend, I have no time to answer conundrums," replied the editor mildly.

"I want to know if I look like a dead man?" persisted the visitor in a louder tone. "It aint no conundrum either."

"I don't know that I'm bound to answer the questions of every excited individual who happens to come in. If you'll tell me the object of your call I'll give the subject some consideration."

"Well, sir, your paper announced me dead, and I want to know whether I look like a dead man."

"Why didn't you say so? No, you don't look like a dead man."

"Then yer paper lied, didn't it?"

"The paper seems to have been misinformed if you are the man referred to. I allow no man to say it lied."

"Well, I'm the man referred to, I reckon. There ain't but one Alkali Ike in these diggin's. I'm the terror of the Bad Lands. I'm a varmint from the wicked desert and when I'm mad I can lick the entire press of the United States. You hear me?"

"I've never been accused of deafness."

"I could chew you up at one mouthful. See?"

"I'm not blind."

"If you don't make that paragraph right I'll jab yer into yer own press and print an impression of yer paper on yer carcass. Twig?"

The editor twigged.

"Will yer make that item right?"

"I will," replied the editor, rising slowly from his chair, with a seven-shooter in one hand and a bowie knife in the other. "Yes, I'll make the paragraph true. You'll look like a dead man in exactly five seconds. What's your choice, lead or steel?"

But Alkali Ike, the varmint from the Wicked Desert, according to the Brooklyn Life, did not remain long enough to choose, and the item hasn't been corrected yet.

AN ISOLATED RACE.

Dwellers in the Arctic—The People of Upper Greenland.

In 1818 Sir John Ross discovered an isolated race of human beings numbering about two hundred souls, living on the inhospitable shores of North Greenland, says a writer in Scribner's Magazine. To that community he gave the romantic name of "Arctic Highlanders," a name which unfortunately is misleading, for they are littoral people and cannot inhabit arctic highlands, as it is an everlasting ice cap, and moreover they will not even visit it, for this inland ice is to them a region of terror; a land where abide their demons and evil spirits.

At the present day they number, as near as can be estimated, about the same as when the knowledge of them came to the civilized world; nor have they increased their territory, but live on the narrow strip of mountainous coast, which is left bare during the summer months by the retreat of the winter snows. They could not be more cut off from other human beings did they live on some small oceanic island. Practically they do live on an island, for they are surrounded by water; by great expanses of solid water; for they never pass the ice barrier of the great Humboldt Glacier, with its sea face of sixty miles; they never ascend to the summer foot of the "iceblink," some two thousand feet above sea level, nor attempt to wander south over the vast ice-floes of Melville Bay, one hundred miles in extent. At 79 deg. north latitude, near the southern edge of the Humboldt Glacier, is a collection of huts known as Etah, their most northern settlement, while at Cape York, in lattitude 75 deg. 55 min. north probably their encampment, is their southern limit, and which, as near as we could determine by the sign language, they call Pitanito. Their country may be said to be about one hundred and eighty-five miles long and from three to five miles in breadth.

PASSING OF THE WHITEFISH.

The Most Delicate of Fresh Water Fish Disappearing.

"Year after year, and for many years, the fish commission of all the states bordering on the great lakes have freely stocked these waters with whitefish, and yet year by year the catch of whitefish diminishes," said a prominent buyer and shipper of lake fish. "Where do the whitefish go? It isn't a difficult question to answer. There is no doubt that the efforts of the commissions in stocking the lake with whitefish are eminently successful as far as the experiments themselves are concerned. The young fish thrive and grow even beyond the expectations of fish culturists. But the experiments with whitefish are exceptionally tender. They hug closely the shores of the lakes, unlike most of the fishes of the lakes. The water there is shallow and warm. This important fact in the nature of whitefish was known to the native fisherman long before the scientists began to investigate. These shallow reaches of the lakes have been for years unnumbered, and are still level with the trap nets that the observant fisherman uses. These nets, like the eel weirs of the rivers, are no respecters of fish as to size, and the half-grown white-fish are caught by them in as great numbers as the full-grown fish are.

"The half-grown whitefish are not marketable, but that does not deter the fisherman in taking them. They are thrown back into the lake, but being dead, that does not help them any. Every mile of shore between Buffalo and Chicago, one might truly say has its thousands and thousands of young whitefish destroyed in this way every year. That is the reason why the supply of this most delicate of fresh water food fishes is diminishing instead of increasing every year, in spite of the costly annual restocking of the lakes. There is law enough to prevent this wanton destruction of whitefish, but if it is not enforced better in the future than it is now, people will ask in vain at the markets for whitefish when the twentieth century comes in."—N. BOSTON WOMEN OF NERVE.

Two of Them Chase a Pickpocket and Recover a Pocketbook.

It is not one time in a hundred that a woman has the forethought and presence of mind to chase a pickpocket and recover her property instead of screaming for the police, asserts the Boston Journal.

There were two such plucky women on Washington street the other afternoon, however. They were near the crowded corner of Washington and Winter streets, when one of them felt a hand in her pocket. She made a grab for the hand, but it and her pocketbook were missing. With a rush she was after the thief, whom she grabbed right in the midst of team traffic on Washington street, which was for the time delayed. The horses of one car thrust their heads against the woman and her captive. Her friend was an able second and laid a hand on the other shoulder of the pickpocket, a young man some twenty-five years of age. "You fiend," cried the other, "give up that pocketbook!" This was too much for the fellow's nerves, and he quickly pulled it out and handed it over. The woman "let go," and the man disappeared up the street on a dead run, while the teams once more moved along in unbroken procession.

BOGUS "NEWS."

What the Lottery Will Do and Will Not Do.

The new fakirs having tired of setting up imaginary lottery schemes in Nicaragua, changed their field of operation. The following was recently sent over the country, among other papers the Brooklyn Standard Union giving it publication:

HONDURAS REJECTS THE LOTTERY.

NEW ORLEANS, March 8.—The Picayune's City of Mexico special says: Honduras has refused concessions to the Louisiana State Lottery. Gen. Jesus Tolego died here this morning. Forty-seven Mexican generals have died since February 7.

On being shown the above, President Paul Conrad, somewhat indignantly and very emphatically declared: "It is not true that the Louisiana State Lottery Company has made application to Honduras or to any other foreign country, for lottery privileges, nor has any such overture been made on behalf of this company, its shareholders or managers.

"We shall continue to conduct our business here until the present charter of the Louisiana State Lottery Company expires in 1895. Simply that and nothing more.

"Postmaster Eaton's statement in the Globe Democrat, that this company accepts the situation as defined by the courts, in good faith, is absolutely correct.—New Orleans (La.) City Item, March 13.

Lonely Death of a Prospector.

RAT PORTAGE, Ont., Special.—The skeleton of a man supposed to be H. Watson of Duluth, a mining prospector, was found in an abandoned lumber camp near Witch Point, Whitefish bay, seventy miles from here. There was a knapsack found with the body containing letters from George H. Eastman and Dr. Eastman of Minneapolis to H. Watson, Duluth. The contents indicate that Watson was prospecting for those parties. Some rich specimens of gold, native copper and iron were found in the knapsack.

J. C. ADAMS has been convicted of manslaughter at Witcha, Kan., for the murder of Capt. A. C. Couch, the noted Oklahoma boomer.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder

CONTAINS NEITHER AMMONIA, ALUM OR ANY OTHER INJURIOUS DRUG.

The Wisconsin Dairy and Food Commissioner says

In his Annual report for 1890, on page 82:

"The NATIONAL DISPENSATORY says of Carbonate of Ammonia: 'It is irritant, and if long continued, even in doses which the stomach will tolerate, it impairs nutrition; in doses of five to ten grains it increases the fullness and force of the pulse and causes a sense of lightness in the head. It is one of our most powerful medicines and certainly should not be used in the preparation of foods.'"

On page 85 the report further states:

"The result of experiments would indicate that the residues in bread made from Alum Baking Powder, have a decided effect even on a strong and healthy stomach. The weight of testimony is decidedly against the use of ALUM."

The following powders contain either ammonia or alum, or both: Royal, Calumet, Forest City, Pearl, Unrivalled, Echo, Crown, Chicago Yeast, Bon Bon, Star, New Era, Snow Ball, Zipp's Grape Crystal.

A HOSPITAL FIRE.

A Blaze at Ashland Which Is Almost The Funeral Pyre of Many.

Burglars Pick Up Much Boodle in a Leisurely Way at Rice Lake.

ASHLAND, Wis., Special Telegram, March 4.—Shortly after 2 o'clock this afternoon fire was discovered in the basement of the new Rhinehart hospital, and for a time terror reigned supreme. About thirty patients were under treatment at the hospital, and willing hands immediately began to carry out those unable to make their own escape, and they were left at neighboring houses. The patients were kept under control, and but one attempted any overt act. One man jumped from the second story, but, as the ground was very soft, did himself no injury beyond a shaking up.

The building immediately filled with smoke, and it was with the greatest difficulty that all the patients were saved from suffocation. The firemen were compelled to get to the rooms on their hands and knees, and when they returned many were nearly stifled. The shock to a few of the patients may result in a set-back in their condition. The excellent work of the fire department probably averted a serious catastrophe. The fire was confined entirely within the basement and first floor. The damage is considerable, partially covered by insurance.

HORRIBLE DISCOVERY.

The Decomposed Body of a Murdered Child Found in an Attic.

CHICAGO, April 4.—What is believed by the police to have been a murder at 2301 Wabash avenue was unearthed to-day. The house is occupied by Mrs. Paine, who rents furnished rooms. A few days ago she noticed a stench in the attic of the house, and to-day it became so offensive that she reported the matter at the Cottage Grove police station. Two officers went to the house and forced open the attic, which had been nailed up. The stench was so great that it was difficult to enter the room. The officers discovered a bundle lying in one corner. It was wrapped up in a muslin cloth, which was covered with blood stains. The bundle was unwrapped and was found to be the body of a three-months old male child. Decomposition had so far advanced that the fingers of the dead infant were dropping off, and the flesh fell from the bones when the body was moved. Across the abdomen of the child was a gash four inches long, evidently inflicted with a knife. Mrs. Paine said she did not know of any one who had lived in the house during the past three months who had given birth to a child, or who would be interested in putting a child out of the way. The police have no doubt that the child was murdered, and are now looking for the murderer.

NOT CAPTURED YET.

Pennsylvania Moonshiners Very Elusive Individuals.

SOMERSET, Pa., April 4.—Sheriff Good and his posse of twenty-five men, who have been scouring the surrounding country for the past thirty-six hours in search of the moonshiners William C. Miller and William Pritts, who killed old man Herestetter, returned here to-night, being unable to locate their men. Revenue Agent Culbertson is expected to arrive here soon and fit out an expedition peculiarly fitted for their capture. Sheriff Good says it is impossible to capture the moonshiners with a large body of men. The outlaws have many friends in the mountains, and are so familiar with the country that it is no trouble for them to find hiding places within a short distance of their pursuers. It is learned to-night that William C. Miller and Pritts intend to kill young Herestetter, a nephew of Jonathan Herestetter, and the young Beals who witnessed the bloody crime. If the moonshiners succeed in carrying out their threat, it is said they will then surrender to the authorities. It has come to light that there are at least thirty illicit distilleries operating in the mountains of this and Fayette county. The moonshiners are organized in a society called the "Freundschaft."

WHITE CAPS.

An Iowa Man Accused of Murder and Ordered to Move.

ELDORA, Iowa, Special, April 4.—Speculation is still rife regarding the Mills murder. There is no apparent effort, however, to ferret out the author of the crime. The grand jury adjourned without making much, if any, inquiry into the tragedy. And now comes the "White Caps" with three warning letters addressed to S. G. Palmer, all in the same wording and handwriting, though bearing different signatures. The missives were suggestively embellished with drawings of skulls and cross bones, daggers and revolvers. They were worded as follows:

"S. G. Palmer: You black-hearted villain—if you don't leave Dows, and keep yourself separate and apart from it, you will be served as you served Bill Mills when you murdered him with a club. Signed. By order of "sender," "sender."

"CAPTAIN."

Mr. Palmer was away at that time, going the day before to Benwick to visit his brother. He returned on Thursday and apprehends no trouble from the threat.

A Murderous Boy.

LIMA, Ohio, April 4.—Some boys were flying kites this afternoon, when a boy named Saunders came up and took Frank Finley's kite from him. The boys were about ten years old, and when Saunders started to go away with it, Frank ran after him. When he had come up with Saunders, the latter suddenly stopped and whipping out a knife plunged it into Finley's breast. The blade, which was six inches long, entered the boy's lung, and Finley fell dead in a few seconds.

Proved a Poor Reliance.

EL PASO, Tex., April 4.—The suit of Earnest Dale Owen, trustee, vs. the Presido Mining Company et al., involving a tract of land forty-five miles square, known as the Ronquillo grant and valued at $8,000,000, on a portion of which is located very valuable mining property, was yesterday decided against the plaintiffs, who relied on an alleged Mexican grant issued in 1832 and claimed to have been confirmed by the congress of Chihuahua in 1834. The court held that the alcalde had no power to issue such grant, and the pretended decree was a forgery.

Sash and Door Factory Burning.

BLACK RIVER FALLS, Wis., Special Telegram, —McGillavay's sash and door factory is on fire with the wind blowing a gale. The fire is beyond control. Nothing can be saved but his books. All machinery will be ruined. The iron bridge across Town creek will be badly injured if not ruined. Insurance light. The dry kiln and lumber yard are destroyed. Loss not obtainable.

Shot Himself.

KASSON, Minn., Special Telegram, —Horace Anthony, a well to do, and prominent young man of this place, and assistant cashier of the First National bank, committed suicide last night by shooting himself in the head. No cause can be given for the act.

CONGRESS

Proceedings of the House and Senate.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 23.

SENATE.

The senate to-day entered upon the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. The principal changes made in the bill by the senate committee was striking out the house provision transferring the care of the Indians from Indian agents to army officers. This provoked considerable debate.

HOUSE.

The discussion on the free coinage bill was continued to-day.

In the house to-day Mr. Patterson of Tennessee reported senate bills for the construction of two revenue cutters for use on the Pacific coast and for two revenue cutters for use on the great lakes.

THURSDAY, MARCH 24.

SENATE.

The senate resorted to an unprecedented device of ordering the withdrawal of all its heretofore trusted employes from the chamber excepting Secretary McCook. The foreign affairs committee reported through Mr. Sherman, recommending the ratification of the Behring sea arbitration treaty. Mr. Sherman pointed out the advantage to the United States from ready acquiescence in the submission to arbitration, and how Great Britain, by refusal of the modus vivendi, would be placed in an unenviable light. Mr. Sherman also reported a resolution from the committee in the nature of an indorsement of the attitude assumed by the president, and, in substance, assuring him of the support of the senate.

The principal topic discussed in open session of the senate was a resolution offered by Mr. Carey, of Wyoming, which asked for a statement of the amount paid by the government for rent of buildings in Washington.

HOUSE.

The silver debate again occupied the attention of the house, the debate was participated in by several prominent members. A motion to table the bill was lost on a tie vote. It cannot again be considered unless by special order.

The sundry civil bill was reported to the house this afternoon. The total appropriation is $25,157,787, being $10,020,163 less than the estimates and $13,236,574 less than the appropriations for 1892.

FRIDAY, MARCH 25.

SENATE.

The senate passed a bill appropriating $400,000 for a public building at Helena, Mont.

The senate today adopted resolutions of respect to the late Senator Hearst, and eulogies were delivered by Senators Stanford, Vest, Stewart, Voorhees, Bate, Dolph, Morgan and Felton, Mr. Hearst's successor.

The senate today spent 2½ hours in further consideration of the Bering sea arbitration treaty. As a result the discussion has nearly reached a conclusion and a vote is expected to be taken on the motion to ratify the treaty some time next week.

A bill was reported in the senate for the establishment of a fish hatchery in Montana.

Senator Sawyer introduced a bill to encourage postal savings, to invest the same, and to divide earnings among depositors.

HOUSE.

The house wearied from its labors on the silver bill since Tuesday last, devoted three hours to the consideration of bills on the private calendar, and not securing a quorum, adjourned at 3:30 until today.

SATURDAY, MARCH 26.

SENATE.

No business was transacted in the senate today.

HOUSE.

The attendance of members in the house this morning was small. Among the gentlemen present silver was the chief subject of conversation.

The house proceeded under a special order to the consideration of the pension bills reported favorably from the committee of the whole at the last Friday's night session. Seventeen private pension bills were passed, and then, at 2 o'clock, public business was suspended and the colleagues of the late Francis B. Spinola, of New York, proceeded to pay tributes of respect to his memory.

MONDAY, MARCH 28.

SENATE.

Senate bill appropriating $100,000 for a puplic building at Pierre, S. D., was placed on the calendar.

Senator Gorman reintroduced his bill of last congress, prohibiting Canadian railroads from doing business in the United States unless they comply with the interstate commerce act.

Senator McMillan introduced a bill appropriating $100,000 toward the legitimate expenses of entertaining the Grand Army of the Republic at their 26th annual encampment in Washington city next fall.

Senator Morgan offered a resolution which was agreed to, calling on the president for correspondence with the Argentine Republic on the subject of reciprocity; and for information as to articles exported therefrom to the United States, on which the United States requires a reduction of the custom duties imposed by the Argentine Republic so as to make reciprocity fair and equal.

More Bering sea correspondence was laid before the senate in executive session today.

HOUSE.

The house consumed the entire day in considering bills reported from the committee on the District of Columbia, several of which were passed.

After the house had passed to the consideration of uninteresting routine business Speaker Crisp announced that the committee on rules would not deem it proper to report a rule preventing filibustering and forcing a vote on the silver question. This practically settles the matter in the house.

TUESDAY, MARCH 29.

SENATE.

After two hours discussion in executive session to-day, the senate unanimously ratified the Bering sea arbitration treaty.

Mr. Stewart gave notice that he would on Monday next move to take up the senate bill to provide for the free coinage of gold and silver.

The resolution offered by Mr. Wolcott requesting the president to refrain from alloting in severalty the lands of the present reservation of the Southern Ute Indians, pending legislation to the present congress respecting the removal of the these Indians to another reservation, was taken up, and Mr. Walcott addressed the senate in explanation and advocacy of it.

At the conclusion of Mr. Wolcott's address the resolution was agreed to, and then the senate, on motion of Mr. Sherman, proceeded to executive business, and when the doors were reopened adjourned.

HOUSE.

The tariff debate was today resumed in the house of representatives, but the discussions was rather uninteresting after the exciting scenes that have been provoked by the silver controversy during the past week.

A communication was received from R. Q. Mills stating that he had sent his resignation as congressman to the governor of Texas.

On motion of Mr. Hull, of Iowa, a senate bill was passed, with a slight amendment, to establish a port of delivery at Des Moines. The house then went into committee of the whole on the tariff bill, Mr. Blount, of Georgia, in the chair.

A Successful Benefit.

MANKATO, Minn., Special, —A benefit was tendered the Tourtellotte hospital Wednesday night by the Andrews opera company. Something like $200 was handed over to the trustees of the hospital. The Andrews people refused to accept a cent, saying that they felt under obligations to hospitals, and by giving their time and talents they did it for the cause of the sick and disabled.

Raising Prices.

WINNIPEG, Man., Special Telegram, At a meeting of the Canadian Northwestern Lumbermen's association held here to-night it was resolved to increase the price of lumber $2 per 1,000 feet. There is also a general increase in price of timber and all supplies.

HOME, SWEET HOME.

Sing to me the old songs, mother,
As you've sung them oft before.
As we've sat on summer evenings
By our little cottage door.

"Home, Sweet Home," sing that one, mother,
For it seems so soft and sweet,
Home, sweet home, the land of glory
Where our dear ones we shall meet.

There the King in all His grandeur
Walks the glittering streets of gold,
Calling all His flock unto Him,
Gathering them within His fold.

Do not weep for me, dear mother,
For soon a band of angles bright
Will carry me from pain and sorrow
To a land of heavenly light.

Good night, mother, and the sunset
Threw its radiance o'er the bed,
"Home, sweethome," the sweet voice murmured,
And the spirit freed had fled.

—ESTELLE M. TITUS.

WHO ARE YOU, ANYHOW?

It Is Possible to Make This Question Difficult to Answer.

Your name is Thomas White, for instance. That is, you have always been called Thomas as your given name, and your parents have always been referred to as White. There isn't the slightest doubt in your name that you are Thomas White. You have lived in the town of Ridgeville, State of Ohio, for thirty years, and every man, woman and child knows you as Thomas White. Your mail has been received under that name, you have signed it to all papers, and if I should deny that you were Thomas White you would call me a lunatic.

Nevertheless, Thomas White, I do deny your identity and I challenge you to prove it in law. Hunt up the family Bible, gather up receipts and other papers, call upon your father and mother, and yet what do you prove? Simply that they believe you are Thomas White. It might do to establish your identity at a bank, but it would not establish it in law if there was a life depending.

Every man, woman and child in the town of Grafton knew William Henry Somerville. It was a town of only 2,000 inhabitants, and he was the principal or superintendent of the union school and had held the position for three years. He was a single man and a gentleman. They said he was a gentleman because he was educated, dressed well, had no vices and carried himself according to the popular idea of a gentleman. The men respected him, their wives admired him and at least a dozen marriageable girls would have been happy at the knowledge that he was in love with them.

There was only one odd thing about the superintendent. Every Friday night he took the train and went away, no one knew where, and returned every monday morning at 7 o'clock. He should have explained where he went, whom he went to see and all about it, but for some reason he didn't. It may be that some of the village gossips plucked the nerve to ask him the question direct, but if so they got no satisfaction. What made the mystery deeper and gave the gossips an additional pang was the fact that on one Friday night he would take the train going west and on the next the train going east. Those who argued that he went to see sweetheart or mother were thus nonplussed. After a time it was decided by certain parties to follow him and solve the mystery. This may seem a curious step to you, but you never lived in "a country town," where everybody is bound to know all about everybody else, even to how much soap grease or how many carpet rags have been saved up to a certain date. The superintendent was "shadowed," but alas! he gave the self-constituted detectives the slip and caused additional gossip.

Just how long it would have been before a committee of "many taxpayers" or "indignant citizens" would have waited upon Mr. Somerville and demanded an explanation I cannot say, but such a move had been suggested when a strange thing occurred. This was along towards the last of his third year. He was boarding at the house of a widow named Rives. She had three children—Frank, Hattie and John, aged respectively 16, 13 and 11. All attended school. One morning our superintendent was missing. At the same time the widow Rives charged him with attempted assault and robbery. Her statement was to the effect that she had been awakened about midnight and found him in her room. She had that day received $2,000 in cash, and he demanded the money. When she cried out he struck her with a club, and during the few minutes she was unconscious he secured the money and fled.

Did any one doubt her story? Was there the slightest reason to suspect she could be mistaken? She had seen him and heard his voice. So also had Hattie and Frank as he left the house. He had taken a freight train which passed the station at 1 o'clock a. m., and the station agent had even spoken with him. As the only passenger, the conductor and two brakemen could fully identify him. Was there ever a plainer case?

It was three weeks before Mr. Somerville was overhauled and brought back for trial. He was caught in a town over 500 miles away, and was taken in charge while quietly sauntering around the street. He was not even flustrated. He calmly denied that he was William Henry Somerville. He denied that he had ever been in Grafton. He denied that he was a school teacher. Indeed he was so cool and nervy that the officers, who knew him as well as their own children began to doubt if he was really the man before they started back with him. We all know what we know until some one doubts. Then we "think" or "guess" or declare "to the best of our knowledge."

The prisoner declared the officers mistaken, but made no objection to returning with them. There were 500 people at the depot to see him. Every one recognized him as William Henry Somerville. Next day he was arraigned before a justice of the peace under that name. He denied it and gave his name as James Bailey. His plea was "not guilty," and he had the best lawyer in the county. The doubt which the officers brought back with them now began to bear fruit. When Mrs. Rives took the stand she positively identified the prisoner as Somerville. On cross examination she began to waver. One of her children swore positively; another "thought so." One of the female teachers in the school was then put on the stand to identify the prisoner, and I give you what followed:

"How long have you known the person referred to as William Henry Somerville?"

"Almost three years."

"How often did you see him?"

"At least five days in the week."

"Now, then, look straight at me and tell me the color of his eyes."

"They are—are blue."

"You are positive?"

"Y-yes, sir."

You will say she ought to have been sure, and yet the prisoner had black eyes. Every other person in that court room would have sworn his eyes were black.

A second teacher was called to the stand and asked:

"Do you identify the prisoner as William Henry Somerville?"

"I do."

"How do you identify him?"

"By his general appearance."

"Isn't there a possibility that you are mistaken?"

"No, sir."

"You declare on oath that the prisoner is Somerville, do you?"

"I do."

"Well, I like a positive witness. Now, look straight at me and describe Somerville."

"He is—is—"

"Go on."

"He has black eyes."

"Very well."

"His hair is—is—"

She stopped right there. She couldn't describe the man she had seen so often during a period of three years. A doubt had crept in, and that doubt was fatal to her testimony. Only two persons out of thirty called to the stand were positive. The defense claimed a case of mistaken identity. The prisoner declared his name to be James Bailey, and that he was born of American parents in Switzerland. He had come to the United States as a tourist and had only been in the country two weeks when arrested. He had no baggage, but claimed it had been detained or stolen. He gave the name of the sailing vessel by which he had arrived, and this was afterward found to be correct. He had about $1,000 in money, some of which was English gold.

After Somerville or Bailey had been held to the higher court for trial the town was divided. One-half the people were sure the man was Somerville, while the other half were just as positive that he was a stranger. True, he looked and spoke and acted like Somerville. He had the same mole on the left cheek, the same gold filling in the front teeth, the same way of lifting the eyebrows as he spoke. But there was the doubt. People had been mistaken before, and we must not rate ourselves as infallible.

When the trial in the higher court came on the crew of the freight train and the station agent were put on the stand. Each one set out to be positive, but each one ended by doubting. The testimony of the station agent was a fair sample:

"Mr. Jones, you were acquainted with William Henry Somerville?"

"Yes, sir."

"Saw him very often?"

"Almost every day."

"Could you have identified him on the street forty rods away in daylight?"

"Certainly, sir."

"Perfectly familiar with his voice?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you see him in this room?"

"I do—in the prisoner's box."

"Ah, you do. Now, Mr. Jones, do you ever remember to have looked at Mr. Somerville critically? I mean as you would have looked at a horse you wanted to remember again?"

"N-no, sir."

"What sort of a nose had he?"

"Nose? Why, a straight nose, sir."

"Sure of this?"

"Yes, sir."

"That will do!"

The prisoner in the box had a Roman nose. Did Somerville have that sort of nose. One-half the village said yes—the other half no. The Widow Rives was determined to be positive this time. She not only believed in what she was going to swear to, but a hundred different people had encouraged her in her conviction. This was the way she came to grief:

"You think it was about midnight when you awoke?"

"Yes, sir."

"Any light in the room?"

"No sir."

"Curtains down?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, what did you see?"

"I saw the prisoner at the foot of the bed and called out."

"Did you know who it was before you heard his voice?"

"No, sir."

"Well what did he say?"

"He said, 'I want that money or I'll murder you.'"

"Were you greatly frightened?"

"Yes, sir."

"And yet, frightened as you were, you recognized Somerville's voice?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well let us see if there is any similarity. Prisoner, you call out the words used by the man in the bedroom."

The prisoner complied, seeming to put himself in the other's place, and his words knocked the bottom out of the prosecution. Not a person in that courtroom could swear that he had ever heard the voice before. The Widow Reeves seemed stupefied as she looked at him.

"So you swear that this is the voice you heard in your bedroom, do you?" asked the lawyer.

"I—I can't say."

Of the two men who had been positive at the preliminary examination one backed down, while the other was full of doubts. When the case was closed and the jury went out eight were doubtful and the other four not very positive, and the result was a verdict of "not guilty." Bailey remained in town for a couple of weeks, meeting everybody as a stranger, and wandering around to see the sights, and then went quietly away to be seen no more. Was he Bailey or Somerville? I have told you how they failed to prove he was anybody but Bailey, and yet he was Somerville. Years afterward I interviewed him in a South Carolina jail two days before he was to be hanged for murder, and he acknowledged his identity and laughed heartily over the details of the case. He was a rascal before coming to Grafton, and selected that quiet town because there were reasons why he should disappear for a time. As to where he went when he left the town every Friday night I did not ask, and he did not volunteer to explain.

"You may say that such a case is impossible. Very well. Go out on the street as you are, and to the first friend who meets you and stops to pass a word, reply:

"Sir! You have made a mistake. My name is not Thomas White, and I never saw you before."

If he doesn't step back and stare at you in doubt and amazement, and if you cannot see that he is wondering if he has not lost his head, then you may call this story written to order.

DON'T TRY TWICE.

A Physician's Explanation of the Peculiarities of Self Murder.

"Did you ever notice that as a rule the persons who seek death and are rescued from the grave never court the society of the dark agent again?"

The propounder of the question was a hospital physician, and he proceeded to explain, without waiting for an answer.

"What I mean is that of all the persons who attempt sucide and are foiled, but few try self murder a second time. Probably one half, if not more of those who try to kill themselves are frustrated.

"The percentage of those who leap into the dark river a second time is exceedingly small. I have tried to discover the reason of this from the lips of those who have gone through the terrible experience, but I have not met with success.

"It is queer that persons, after devoting weeks and months to a consideration of so momentous a question, and decided to end their existence, should, when foiled, declare that they were fools and swear never to do the like again. Yet this is what is done in a large majority of instances. Thoes who stared at death seem to live life anew. The past effaced—a new light seems to have dawned. The sunshine is dearer; the air is purer. It is the convalescent taking great drafts of the out-door air with a keenness of relish that was unknown before.

"Did you ever witness a hanging? The execution is impressive. It is terrible to see a human life deliberately and coolly taken. But this is not the most terrible thing about a hanging. It is the recollection of it—the mental picture of the death scene—that is awful. So it is with the suicide. It is not so fearful to take a poisoned draft, to pull a trigger or take a plunge. But to those who have rushed to death, and have failed to overtake it, the recollection of that race must be awful—and this is what deters rash mortals from a second attempt. This is the only explanation I can gather.

"What do I think of suicide? It is moral cowardice and physical courage. It takes nerve to throw one's self in front of a moving locomotive, but a human being that cannot bear adversity lacks the higher courage. It is not so that all persons who seek their own lives are insane.

"There is possibly one case in which moral cowardice is not apparent. It is in the case of the person who is suffering torture from a fatal illness.

MISTAKEN FOR A WAITER.

Predicament of a Guest at a Fashionable New York Reception.

Quite an embarrassing incident occurred at a fashionable reception up town the other day. It was awkward, very, both for the guest and for the young man, the son of the house. The guest was a stranger, not only to all the others who had been invited, but to all the members of the family but one. He was not a particularly prepossessing-looking man, and this accounted in some degree for the awkward mistake that followed. The guest was shown the dressing room by a servant, and when he came down he met the son of the hostess at the reception-room door.

"Can you tell me," said he, "where Mrs. Blank is?"

The young man looked at his questioner, and not knowing him, thought he was one of the waiters sent by the caterer. Then he said, very abruptly: "You can't see her now. She is busy."

The strange young man looked rather surprised at the reception his request had met, and, knowing that he would be made welcome should he ever reach the hostess, remarked: "I would like very much to see Mrs. Blank."

The young man of the house did not even then grasp the situation, but was rather annoyed at the persistency of the supposed waiter, and said, very impatiently: "I told you you couldn't see her. She is busy now, and can't be bothered. Go right back," he continued, pointing to the back stairs, "and go down stairs. They want you down there."

"The stranger stood in an embarrassed way looking at young Mr. Blank, who by this time was getting very impatient and was preparing to say something rash. The guest managed to say, "I wish you would conduct me to the hostess, I would like to pay my respects to her."

Then young Mr. Blank realized his mistake, and in all eagerness to rectify it and not to let the guest know he had been mistaken for a waiter, blurted out, "Ah, oh, why yes, certainly, I would be delighted," and taking the stranger by the arm he led him to where the hostess was receiving.

There the young man was recognized and cordially welcomed. The son of the house, however, told the joke on himself, and feels bad when he thinks how he mistook a friend of his family for one of the waiters.—New York Times.

A Snake Story.

A correspondent tells this interesting snake story: "A few days ago I sent two boys to the spring after water and in a moment one of them came running back in great fright, saying that he saw a stinging rattlesnake with rattlers on his head and a horn on his tail; and one-half the snake was black and the other half-spotted. I went with them to see the monster, and when we got there a black rattlesnake about five feet long, was swallowing a rattlesnake about two and half feet long. The rattler was rattling with all its might, while his colored brother was swallowing with all his power. We left them and went back in about an hour, and both were dead."—Great Divide.

A CURIOUS MAN.

He Believes in Superstitions and Thinks He Has Good Luck.

A man with a long pennyroyal beard was seen to cross Washington street the other morning and creep under a little ladder that leaned against a lamp post.

Being asked why he did it he replied: "Just to show superstitious people the fallacy of their beliefs. I always open my umbrella before going out, and never look at the moon over my right shoulder. I have broken every looking-glass in the house belonging to the Thirteen Club, and make my wife drop her dishcloth every time she cleans up the table crockery."

"Are you a lucky man?"

"I get a few caraway seeds in my beard once in a while, but upon the whole have little to complain of."

"What's the matter with your foot? You appear to be lame."

"I knocked my big toe nail off the other day while chopping kindling wood. But I was lucky in not cutting off my whole foot. Don't you think so?"

"I see you have two fingers gone from your left hand."

"Yes, I got them too near a buzz saw about ten years ago, but I was mighty lucky at saving my arm. The saw was humming at the time, and it would have taken off my arm as easily as it took off my fingers."

"You wear glasses; are your eyes weak?"

"They are a trifle lame; yes. I had probably the best pair of eyes in all Coos county when a young man, but unfortunately, one day I was fooling with a powder flask and the darned thing blew up. But by a stroke of luck I saved my eyesight, though somewhat impaired."

"I notice a bend in your back. Were you born so?"

"Not by any means. A few years ago I was as straight as an iron column, but one day I attempted to get aboard of a train that had started, missed my footing and fell between the cars and the depot platform. My back got a terrible wrench and at one time it was believed that I was injured for life. I came out of it pretty well, however, and every day I thank my lucky stars that I did not go under the wheels."

"How came that nick in your ear?"

"A big bulldog chewed that out when I was only 13 years old. It was a pretty bad affair, but I'm tarnation glad I didn't die from hydrophobia," and the lucky man continued his walk up the street.—Boston Herald.

NEGRO HUMOR.

Richard M. Johnson's Description of Georgia Rural Life.

Among the old-time negroes in the region that we have been considering was much of a humor very interesting. Their speech, by constant contact with the white man's which it sought to imitate, had a curtness and vivacity never heard on large seaboard and river plantations. In the lightness of the negro's heart, with an imagination that never sought to be curbed, his words and his deportment often had a fun as racy as any lover of that article reasonably could wish to see. Even his complainings, oftener than otherwise, were put forth with a resentment so peculiar as to provoke as well laughter as sympathy. Witness the following anecdote of the return of his old master, not very long ago, of one of his former slaves after having served another person for a year:

"Why, Jim, how happens it that you quit Perkins?" asked the gentleman.

"Well, now Marse Jack, I gwine up en tell you jes how 't is. I wuck fer dah man all las' year, and wuck hard, en I make him a good crop. Well, now, de troof is, I did git f'om him a few, but mind' you, jes only a few, merlasses en tobarker, en one hat, en a pa'r o' shoes, en one little thing en'other. Well, den, Chris'mus come, en he say, 'Jim, I gwine make out our 'count.' En den he tuck he piece o' paper, en he pen, and he ink-vial, en he 'gin a-settlin' down, en when he thoo wid dat job, he 'gin a-addin' up, en a-put'd' down' en a-kyar'n', ontwel, bless your soul en body! Marse Jacky, when he got thoo, he done kyar's off all what was a-comin' to me! En so I makes up my min', I does, to leff dar, en pewoose myself back to you, whar I knows dey not gwine be no sich kyar'n' as dem." Then he joined heartily in the laugh raised by what had just occurred to him as being a good practical joke.—Century Magazine.

Lovage for the Grip.

"That's a bad cold you've got," said a benevolent-looking old gentleman to a young fellow he had met casually.

"Worst I ever had," answered the young man.

"Try a pinch of this," urged the other, fishing in his vest pocket for a little box. There was a fine powder in it, and he offered it invitingly. "It is no 'kill-or-cure' thing. See how it goes."

The young man snuffed a tiny pinch up his nose. In five minutes he felt relieved. "That's wonderful," he said. "If you've got a monopoly it's the same as a fortune to you."

The old man smiled indulgently. "This is one of the commonest of herbs," said he. "It's so cheap that it can be bought by the ton if you want that much. It cured me of the grip, and I believe it is the best thing going."

"What do you call it?"

"German lovage. All the druggists have it. For a dime you can get a box of it powdered, large enough to cure a whole family of the grip. It is so common that its value has been overlooked. You try it and you tell all your friends. German lovage is a sure cure for the grip."—New York Times.

A Fortune in the Grave.

A few days ago an old lady with snow-white hair came to a well-known Vienna lawyer and asked him to take the necessary steps for the disinterment of her sister's body, buried in the great central cemetery ten years ago. The old lady stated that she had lost her husband and with him the means of subsistence. Ten years ago she was well off, and had her sister buried with all her jewellery, which was very valuable. She had no other means of getting out of her misery than by appealing to the dead and taking the trinkets out of the coffin where they had lain for ten years. The lawyer refused to act for her.

PET PHRASES.

Everyone has a Pet Phrase or Word.

It is hardly much to say that almost everybody has a strong predilection for some particular word or phrase, and shows preference for the same by using it whenever it can be slipped in with a due regard to the context.

One gentleman of the writer's acquaintance meets all troubles—big, little and imaginary—with "Holy Moses!" and if he has occasion at any time to call attention to a slight discrepancy in a statement to any person he will tell you that "It is not according to Crocker." Another interlards his conversation pretty freely with "As they say," although many of the statements thus credited to others are entirely his own.

Others, again, are constantly telling you, when imparting any information, that "You know," and probably never think that if you are already aware of the fact it is not necessary to repeat it. But they know you don't know—it is only a special way they have of talking. Another may keep putting the question, "Don't you see?" although he knows perfectly well that you are not blind, while the next friend you meet accepts every statement you make with "Is that so?" just as if he doubted your word of honor as a gentleman. Then in another quarter you will be brought up sharply, and perhaps too frequently to please you, with "Certainly;" while that friend with the smiling countenance will keep on edifying you with "Dear me!"

"In some parts of the country "No, no," or "Yes, indeed,' appear to partake somewhat of the nature of an oath, for everybody makes use of them "as a guarantee of good faith."

Then your young lady will probably be partial to "really" as a stock expression, and it has the advantage of serving the purpose of a query as well as of an affirmation. These young ladies also adopt many slangy phrases, but this is undoubtedly due in a great measure to the bad example set by their brothers and sweethearts.

Young gentleman, too, are dead on stock expressions, and some of them would not look well in print. When anything startling or unexpected happens, when a chum tells a "whopper," or when the master turns up when he ought not to, the phrase is ready, and does duty many times a day. It may be "Oh, Jehoshaphat!" "By golly," "By jingo," or something stronger which ought not to be used, but all the same it turns out and settles the matter.

These pet words and phrases become such a part of the conversation of many people that when talking to our acquaintances we feel pretty certain that they will turn their darling out and we can almost calculate to a nicety when it will be used. Of course, it might be conceded that very many of the expressions are of a slangy nature, and this may account, in some cases, for their popularity. It is really surprising what a hold these words get upon us, and how often we use them without a thought; in fact, we are quite astonished when our attention is drawn to our shortcomings in this respect.

The Value of Theosophy.

The value of Theosophy intellectually is that it makes clear many obscure problems of life and mind; that it offers an account of the evolution of the universe and of man which renders our present conditions intelligible and affords a basis for further development; that it proves the existence of mental powers at present latent in the majority; that it removes the maddening pessimism which is taking the heart out of life.

Its value morally is that it explains the presence of evil, points the way of escape, demonstrates the unity of humanity, and places the brotherhood of man on a rational and intelligible basis; that, by its doctrine of reincarnation, it makes every man responsible for his own characteristics, and by its doctrine of karma—the law of cause and effect—it places the destiny of each in his own hands, showing that every effort towards right-thinking and right-doing now helps to build up a nobler character for the next incarnation, the "innate" character with which the child is born into the world. (This is the "use of these successive incarnations" wanted by an objector.)

The value of Theosophy socially lies in these ethical teachings of brotherhood and personal responsibility, and in the compelling motives it affords for individual efforts to improve. It makes the good citizens, without which the good State can neither be made nor maintained; and further it goes to the roots of our social miseries, and shows how they may be removed. It is more concerned with the cause of the evils than with the evils themselves, although, as the practical side of the teaching of brotherhood, it urges its followers to immediate efforts to alleviate social distresses.

By its recognition of religious differences as superficial while, the religious emotion is one and fundamental, it softens the bitterness of controversy and draws good men of different faiths together, while, by the stress it lays on conduct as apart from creed, it gives a platform on which earnest and devoted men may stand side by side for mutal aid against the attacks of vice, hatred, and the spirit of separateness.

By its philosophy and its ethics Theosophy claims to be judged, and in the long run it is by these that it will be justified or condemned in the eyes of men.

A Leap Year Scheme.

Maud Cheviot was standing in her friend's boudoir. "It worked," she said to her hostess, "beautifully. There is your ring, and thank you so much. I shall always, in some sort, owe you much of my happiness, you know. It is a pretty ring. I hope your fiance will never object to my temporary use of it. Tom proposed 24 hours after he saw it on my finger. It's always the way with men. When they think they have lost you they find they wanted you all the time. And now, you see, I've got a real engagement ring of my own; not yours, dear. But—we're to be married in three months. You must come to the wedding. Tom has very much to thank you for—or your ring. He shall know that—some day."—Chicago Times.

CROOKSTON, . . . MINN

JOHN L. SULLIVAN appeared on the board of trade at Chicago, but the usual amusement of throwing wheat at visitors was omitted. People in reach of JOHN show great respect for him.

SHOULD the German emperor go to Iceland for his health, many of his people would be willing to pay for all the icebergs he may need on his head. They would be able to get along if a few of them fell on him.

A BILL has passed one house of the Massachusetts legislature prohibiting the sale of liquors within forty feet of a building used for religious purposes. It is not stated, however, whether the church or the saloon is to be closed.

THE Eastern colleges are slowly opening their doors to women, following the lead of the West. Yale now recognizes no distinction of sex in the post-graduate departments, and Harvard has a woman in one of the professor's chairs.

SIR WILLIAM GORDON CUMMING has been made the proud and happy father of a little girl. Not a little of his pride and happiness should be due to the fact that he has been out of contact for about a year with the noble circle in which he formerly circulated.

Is is to be hoped that Lady Somerset will soon find her lost bale of manuscript notes of her trip to America. About the only really funny books we ever got from England are the tales of her travels among us, and they are never intentionally so!

ONE of the men who helped save the life of the czarowitz of Russia last year has become so demoralized by good fortune that he has been summoned several times into court. The brave but weak Japanese receives an annual pension of $1,000 from the Russian government and a small sum yearly from the mikado.

ENVELOPES are supposed to be quite modern, but in the Birch manuscripts in the British Museum, No. 4.433—105, there is a letter from Martin Triewald to Sir Hans Sloane, dated Stockholm, April 24, 1755, inclosed in an ordinary envelope, which is opened out and mounted at the end of the letter.

GRANITE is the lowest rock in the earth's crust. It is the bed rock of the world. It shows no evidence of animal or vegetable life. It is from two to ten times as thick as the united thickness of all the other rocks. It is the parent rock from which all other rocks have been either directly or indirectly derived.

NEW YORK papers are finding fault with the manager of the zoo in Central Park for renting the animals to showmen or anybody who needed specimens from the animal kingdom and pocketing the proceeds. It is a kind of monkey work that they condemn, and are fain to have a taper lighted for an investigation, as the manager knew it was wrong all the time.

SOME of the younger squaws of the Tarratine tribe of Indians are better looking and educated than many of their white sisters. Alice, the eighteen-year-old daughter of John Francis, the big hunter and trapper of the Penobscot, is a very pretty and graceful girl, with dark, lustrous eyes, and a clear olive complexion. She speaks English, French and the Tarratine dialect, plays the piano, and makes many kinds of fancy work, and has travelled some.

A RATHER remarkable story is told about an apple tree that grows in St. George's Cemetery in Middletown, Del. It is said to yield fine round apples in abundance. But no one can eat them, as they have a "graveyard taste." Even the hogs, when the apples are offered to them, refuse to touch them. When put by the fire to roast the apples it is said, simmer to oil and emit a disagreeable odor strongly suggestive of graveyards.

TEN years ago the ice scenery of the New Zealand Alps was almost unknown, even to the colonists. But in 1882 Rev. W. S. Green, with two first-class guides, explored the glacier region beneath the highest peak—Aorangi, or Mt. Cook—and arrived, after a long, difficult and dangerous climb, on the summit of that mountain. Since then the "Britain of the South" has become proud of possessing the "playground of Australasia."

Two young city-bred women, daughters of a prominent wholesale merchant in San Francisco named Lowenstien, are living on and working a land claim in the State of Washington, between Hadlock and Port Ludlow. They took up the claim two years ago and have lived on it continuously since, built the cabin in which they live, and have cleared and grubbed twenty acres of land. Their nearest neighbor is four miles away.

OFFICERS of the Bell Telephone Company were re-elected and it was voted to increase the capital from $15,000,000 to $17,500,000 stock to issue at par to present holders in proportion of one new share for six now held. It is intended this year to fill the long gap to Chicago. The subscription circular says the rights expire May 5. Payments are to be 24 per cent June 1, 25 per cent July 1, and 50 per cent Oct. 1.

THE NORTHWEST.

A Summary of the Important Events of the Week in the Northwestern States.

Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, North and South Dakota News in a Nutshell.

MINNESOTA.

An electric street car line is to be laid between Sauk Rapids and St. Cloud.

John B. Schoen, a liquor dealer of St. Cloud made an assignment to John Mentzling for the benefit of his creditors.

S. N. White, contractor, Brainerd has assigned to D. D. Smith for the benefit of creditors. Liabilities, $5,000.

Jerry Russell, for some time engaged on the publication of the Saunk Rapids Sentinel, died the other day.

Hans Hanson, a pioneer resident in Goodhue township, Goodhue county, having lived there since 1858, is dead, aged seventy-one years.

Mrs. Sarah R. Putman, an old resident of Redwing, died, aged seventy-five years. The remains will be taken to Boston for interment.

While working in the Wisconsin woods across the river from Red Wing, Knut Skratvold, aged fifty-eight, was struck by a falling tree and instantly killed.

Aug. Leveranz fell from a scaffolding at Winthrop, while painting a barn, breaking his right shoulder and two ribs on some rocks.

Asa McLaughlin stole a watch from Frank Boobar at the Lincoln mill at Anoka and fled. He is thought to be in Minneapolis.

The residence of John Swankee, and contents, a prominent farmer of Traverse county, was destroyed by fire. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Peter Hansen, aged 25 years, fell backward nine feet off a scaffold in Howard's ware house at Duluth, fracturing his skull. He will die.

Fred Rank, of Delano, while walking across Buffalo lake broke through the ice and was drowned. When found he stood upright in the water, which barely covered his head.

The Chicago Milwaukee & St. Paul depot at Mapleton was entirely consumed by fire, with contents. A Chicago jewelry house lost its case containing samples. A car was also burned.

Wm. Hulet was arrested at Shakopee by a United States marshal and taken to Fergus Falls to answer to the charge of using the United States mail for conveying obscene literature several years ago.

The Republican Third district congressional convention to elect delegates and alternates to the national convention has been called to be held at Northfield, April 28.

R. B. Hedges, of Morristown, accidently shot himself in both legs below the knees. He had started hunting, the gun slipped down, the hammer striking the wagon box, with the above result.

The sons of Dr. Barck and J. J. Christen were out target shooting at Albert Lea and in some way the Barck boy got a bullet in the lung, which has not yet been located, and he may die. The shooting was accidental.

John M. Mattson killed himself at Ada, by cutting his throat with a razor. There is no apparent reason for the act; he was a well-to-do farmer and his family have always been thought the best.

The east bound Watertown passenger collied at Tracy with an engine, and the smoker of the passenger and the switch engine were derailed. Two cars were splintered and the engine broken. Nobody hurt.

NORTH DAKOTA.

A report from Jamestown says: The Jim river is raging. Water is flooding the boiler room of Russell, Miller & Co.'s mill. The river below the dam is higher than ever before.

Arrests were made at Dickinson and two houses were searched for liquors. The parties were bound over to await the action of the grand jury at the April term of court.

Thorpe, state organizer of clubs among railroad employes, is in Jamestown for the purpose of organizing a club. The organization is political in its nature, but nonpartisan in character.

The coroner's jury at Fargo rendered a verdict to the effect that Arthur H. Tradeau, whose body was found lying near the railroad track near Argusville, came to his death by his own hand.

Grafton is getting an overdose of water. The southern part of town is an entire lake, reaching for miles into the country. The The river is higher than it has been since 1880. Northern Pacific trains are held up a few miles below here on account of high water.

Howard James superintendent of the Northern division of the Great Northern has resigned, to take effect April 1. Supt. C. H. Jenks, of the Dakota division, will succeed James, and Assistant Superintendent E. J. Evans, of the Minnesota division will take James' place.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mrs. Robert F. Tisson, wife of a New York broker and a society leader, was granted a decree of divorce at Yankton.

The story published in Chicago that the appeal in the De Steurs case at Sioux Falls has been abandoned is a fake. The appeal has been perfected and the case will go up.

At a special meeting of the Moorhead council the resignation of Dr. John Kurtz as health officer of this city was accepted and Dr. D. C. Darrow was appointed in his stead.

Judge John W. Nolin died at Rapid City of consumption. He was widely known in Dakota, Nebraska and Iowa as an able jurist, and prominent leader in the Democratic party.

Col. Charles F. Thompson, one of the wealthiest mine and cattle owners in the Black Hills, and prominent as a leader of the Democracy in the state, died suddenly, aged sixty-three years.

Robbers attempted to enter the Madison State Bank the other morning by removing the rear door. They were discovered by a marshal and several shots exchanged. The men escaped.

Hon. C. G. Williams, register of the land office was stricken with paralysis at Watertown for the third time. His death is momentarily expected. Mr. Williams was for several terms a representative in congress from the Janesville, Wis., district.

Stockmen west of the Missouri river are making active preparations for the spring round-up. All report stock in fine condition and small loss through the winter so far as can be learned. It is believed that shipments this season will be the heaviest ever made from the stock ranches of Western South Dakota.

Albert Whipple, a squaw man who killed an Indian, Lays-On-His-Mother-In-Law, by stabbing and beating him to death, was discharged at Deadwood, as it was shown that the crime was not committed on the reservation and therefore the United States has no jurisdiction.

The divorce case of Alice Beverly Crane vs. Walter Crane, instituted at Miller some time ago, has been dismissed by the plaintiff. This promised to be one of the most sensational trials of its kind in the state, on account of the connection of the parties at interest. The reason for the discontinuance is said to be fear of a vigorous defense.

Mrs. Ayres wife of George V. Ayres, past grand master of Masons in Dakota Territory and State of South Dakota, died at Rapid City. Her maiden name was Kate Towle. She was born in Nebraska in 1859 and was prominently connected in that and other states. She leaves a husband and a son six years old.

Several prairie fires were noticed in different directions from Kimball, during the recent high wind. No serious damage has so far been heard of. One fire came very near to the village of Pukawana, west of here, and every body was out fighting the flames. A rain next morning put all the fires out.

WISCONSIN.

The 7-year-old son of William Richel was killed at Oskosh by being run over by a wagon.

Knapp, Stout & Co.'s two planing mills and lumber yards at Cedar Falls burned. The loss is $75,000.

The stock of Jeweler Julius Kahn of Milwaukee, was seized by the sheriff on six attachments, aggregating $19,839.16. Mr. Kahn's assets are said to be about $35,000.

Mrs. Geo. L. Richards was arrested at Delavan on the charge of sending obscene letters through the mail. She is the wife of Dr. Richards.

Mrs. Lovelamasker, superintendent of schools for St. Croix county is holding her spring examinations at Hudson. About thirty preachers are present.

Mathew Cleary, an old settler of De Pere, was found dead in his bed at his home in Hollandtown. Asthma was the cause of his sudden death.

During school hours at Eau Claire, George Eklund, twelve years old, took a revolver from his pocket in the Lincoln school, West side, and commenced to fool with it. It went off and sent a 22-caliber bullet into his thigh, making a serious wound.

IOWA.

Albert Vanslyke, arrested at Center Junction by Deputy Marshall Francis, pleaded guilty to stealing a mail pouch and was bound over to the next term of the district court.

Some little school boys playing in the rear of the Logan school yard at Fairfield found the dead body of an infant in a brush heap. Marks on its person plainly show that it was murdered. The author of the crime is as yet unknown.

Fire in the Drake University Building, at Fifth and Mulberry streets, Des Moines, also occupied by the Journal Printing Company, damaged the building and contents about $8,000; insurance for two-thirds. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

The Red Cross Committee at Dubuque which has been engaged in raising funds for Russian relief, report $1,125 secured. A check for the amount was sent to the chairman at Des Moines. Other contributions will follow. This is the city's contribution, the county has been heard from.

An earnest effort was made to drum up a delegation of Burlington Republicans to go to Des Moines and help urge the legislature for the relief of prohibition but none could be found who would place themselves on record. Burlington will not be represented as a consequence.

The application for a receiver for the Dubuque Electric Railway Light and Power company has been withdrawn. Dr. Allen, who arrived from Davenport to resist the application, denies that $95,000 of the company's funds or any other sum was misappropriated during his presidency.

Mayor Fawcett of Burlington has issued orders that all gamblers and other persons without visible means of support shall leave the city at once and that saloons shall close at midnight and all day Sunday. The police are in sympathy with the mayor and will see that his orders are carried out.

FAVORS A CANAL

To Connect the Great Lakes with St. Paul.

St. Paul, Minn. Special, Telgram.—At the chamber of commerce meeting yesterday morning a report was received from the committee on Mississippi river relative to the proposed canal between Lake Superior and the Mississippi at the Twin Cities. The committee consists of C. C. Andrews, H. S. Fairchild, W. A. Somers, David Day and E. J. Hodgson. The report read as follows:

On the 2d day of December last this chamber adopted resolutions requesting the Minnesota senators and our representative in congress to use their efforts for an appropriation for a thorough survey to determine what, if any, practicable line for a canal, with capacity for barges and vessels that could navigate the lakes, exists to unite Lake Superior with the Mississippi river at the Twin Cities. As reasons for such a survey the following facts may be stated:

In 1875 the legislature of Minnesota appropriated $3,000 for a survey for a canal to connect Lake Superior with the St. Croix river, and Messrs. L. K. Stannard of Taylor's Falls and R. R. Davis of Stillwater, as commissioners, the same year, with their assistants, made a partial survey of several routes. Their report was transmitted to the legislature by Gov. C. K. Davis and was printed. Their report did not determine which route was the most practicable, but gives the impression that several routes are practicable. If a canal between Lake Superior and the St. Croix should prove practicable it is supposed that the latter river to its mouth and the Mississippi thence to the Twin Cities would be improved to the same capacity as the canal. A canal thus uniting our greatest lake system with our greatest river system would be emphatically a national improvement, and ought to be undertaken by congress rather than by any separate state.

During the season of 1891 the rate of transportation of hard coal by railroad from Buffalo to Chicago was $1.78 per ton, and from Chicago to St. Paul and Minneapolis, $2.50 per ton; total, $4.28. By water the rate from Buffalo to Duluth was 40 cents per ton; dockage at Duluth, 60 cents per ton, and from Duluth to St. Paul and Minneapolis, by railway (150 miles), $1.50; total, $2.40. Were there to the two cities mentioned, they would save a million dollars a year in freight charges on the single item of coal.

The Miami canal from Toledo to Cincinnati is, with its feeders, 282 miles long, and, like many other canals in our country, has proved of immense benefit in regulating and cheapening transportation. One of its incidental benefits is that the water power furnished by its locks has developed manufacturing industry in employing a capital of over $30,000,000. Ohio has eighty-eight counties, yet the twenty-seven counties crossed by the canal comprise more than half the wealth of the state. It is sometimes suggested that railroad companies would be likely to oppose this canal protect, but such a view is very short-sighted, because the increased manufacturing and industrial development which the canal would produce would vastly increase railroad earnings. So, also, it is sometimes said that the lake cities, Duluth and Superior, would be jealous of such a canal [illegible]

Resolved, That the president communicate a copy of the [illegible] to Senators Davis and Washburn and representative Castle as expressing the views of this chamber.

The report was adopted with the request from the chamber that the newspapers publish it in full.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

The report of the committee on resolutions was read by P. J. Smalley, chairman of the committee. It was adopted with a rush and without a protest, after which the convention adjourned. The resolutions were as follows:

That the Democratic party of Minnesota once more dedicates its first and best energies to the accomplishment of a single end—the complete, but the intelligent and gradual reform of a system of tariff duties which is both corrupting and unjust. We are opposed to the theory of protection, as a manifestation of the principle of paternalism in politics with which our party is traditionally at war. That system creates burdens which affect different classes and sections of our country disproportionately and inequitably. It stimulates and maintains monopolies among us. It saps the strength of our industrial energies. It pollutes the springs of political action.

We aim to secure laws by which the revenues of the nation shall be accommodated to the needs of a government, economically administered within its legitimate sphere, which shall make commerce and industry free and shall guard their freedom when attained; which shall make no man poor that another may be rich; which shall deliver legislators from the corrupting influence of a system of the most subtle and resistless bribery.

We hold, in accordance with the traditional policy of our party, to the use of both gold and silver and that the sole coinage function of the government is to examine the relative values of the metals of coinage as established by the commercial world, and if there has been a sufficient fluctuation in the value of either to make the existing ratios unequal, then to readjust the ratios so that the number of grains of either metal in the unit of coinage, the dollar, shall be equivalent in value, and then to permit the free unrestricted coinage of both metals.

We join the Democracy of New York in demanding the repeal of the Sherman silver coinage act. We condemn that act as an attempt to distract the friends of honest bi-metalism, and denounce it as calculated to debase our currency, contract the circulating medium and wreck the confidence and safety of the business world.

The Democrats of Minnesota delight to renew the pledge of their devotion to an unrivaled leader who embodies the purest principles of the American Democracy. We recognize in ex-President Cleveland that rare combination—a loyal and able party chief, an honest and straightforward administrator of public affairs, a far-seeing statesman, and an unselfish man. We need in this Northwest his name to aid the Democracy of the nation in driving from the United States senate the Republican majority behind which protection is securely entrenched. The gains which will give this must come from the Northwest. The South has given us all she can. Republican gerrymander deprives New England of power to help. Under the impetus given our cause by Grover Cleveland the Northwest has given three senators already. With him as our candidate we guarantee another from Minnesota.

A Joke on Her Majesty.

Few people are perhaps aware how thoroughly the queen enjoys a joke. A gentleman-in-waiting, whom let us call Mr. A——, distinguished for his imitative powers and dramatic talent, is not infrequently called upon to trip the light fantastic toe, figuratively speaking when in attendance at Windsor and Balmoral.

One day the great lady, looking with a certain austerity straight into the face of Mr. A——, demanded:

"Now, Mr. A——, I am perfectly well aware that when my back is turned you imitate me. I wish to see you do it now, this minute!"

Poor Mr. A—— fell straightway into the royal trap, crimsoned, faltered, utterly lost his countenance.

"Ah!" exclaimed the queen, "I see I was right! You ought to be ashamed of yourself," and then added, laughing as heartily as any school girl, "but don't do it again."

Gentleman, but Poor Spellers.

The Overland Monthly is proving Andrew Jackson to have been a very bad speller. This brings to mind the familar fact that George Washington was not a very good one. In the days of Washington, and even in those of Jackson, they were not as careful of their orthography as educated people are now. Washington was—Washington; and we have the authority of the late Josiah Quincy, who, as aid to the Governor, went on to New York to meet Jackson on his visit as President to Massachusetts, for stating that Jackson, with all the ear-marks of a frontiersman, was an elegant gentleman in social intercourse.—Boston Herald.

THE root of a sort of turnip is used by the Indians of Tennessee for a curious purpose—namely, to cure dogs of the habit of eating eggs. This root has a very hot and biting flavor, and a small portion of it is put into an egg, which is placed in the dog's way. After swallowing it hastily and without consideration the animal will never touch another egg.

Marshall County Leader:—The Polk County Journal is putting in a big new press and other things that evidence the growing prosperity of that valuable Red River paper.

St. Paul News:—The Lanesboro Journal says the political deal mapped out by Gov. Merriam, Knute Nelson Jim Hill and others will result in the defeat of the party if it is allowed to be consummated in the convention. In contemplation of the scheme the Journal thus soliloquizes. "Oh, ye gods, what cheek! They think it is a presidential year, and that their money bags will carry them though. The people may as well open their eyes; they will have to fight this unholy combination, and may it receive the black eye it deserves.

Douglas County Sentinel:—"It will do the big Twin City political bosses no good to undertake to defeat the will of the people by sharp wire-pulling this year. they will only set up pins to be knocked down by those who are getting tired of such practices. Merriam, Davis and Washburn have served the state of Minnesota with credit to themselves and the people, but they, or their henchmen, have no cinch on the state or on the people. This fact will be demonstrated if they undertake to run things contrary to the expressed wish of the large majority of the republican voters of this state."

Euclid Items.

Frost is out deep enough for plowing but the land is too wet to commence operations yet.

Fred Tiedt tells a good joke which happened to himself some time since while doing business in Angus. A young farmer with a skittish horse drove up to the railway crossing and tried to cross, but the horse would not venture onto the track but kept dancing around in a frightful manner. So Fred, like the gallant young gentleman that he is, quickly approached the couple and offered his assistance to the lady which was gladly accepted. The lady wished to take the train and handed Fred her satchel and a small bundle done up in a shawl which Fred put under his arm and carried to the depot. When the lady ascended the platform of the coach she told Fred in a jovial voice to toss up the bundle, which he hastily did. There was a shriek from the lady, a frozen circle round the heart of the gentleman and an infant landed safely in the arms of its mother.

The first wedding wholly in the city of Euclid occurred here last Wednesday evening. Mr. George A. Nelson and Miss Nellie Losey were joined in holy wedlock by the bride's venerable father who officiated as justice of the peace. Among the wedding guests were Mr. Albert Losey, of the Crookston post-office, and deputy sheriff Marvin Losey, also of Crookston. The house was crowded with the friends of the happy couple and they spent an enjoyable which was none the less enjoyable on account of the shivaree, which was all very well with the exception of the mud-throwing which was participated in by a few insignificant small boys. The presents were valuable and also numerous and all may be immediately put to use. At 12 o'clock the company broke up, and after wishing the bride and groom a long and happy life, departed, leaving the young couple to begin life's journey together. George is a thoroughly good business man and has done away with the old-time practice of taking a bridal tour; he will move out in the country shortly and make an honorable farmer of himself.

One Pure Baking Powder.

Which the Legislature and State Chemists Endorse, Dealers Sell, and Consumers Use with Impunity.

The Health authorities of Minnesota are proceeding to enforce the law against the alum baking powders sold in violation thereof. From the long list of such powders published in the official report of the State Food and Dairy Commission, it is apparent that the officers will be kept pretty busy in the future.

It is asserted that every baking powder sold in the state of Minnesota, with the exception of the "Royal," contains lime, alum or sulphuric acid. The official repots likewise show that a gross deception is practiced against consumers by the false labels placed upon some of the inferior brands of baking powders. These labels state that the powders do not contain lime, alum, etc., while the Government tests show such substances actually present in their composition. This is a very serious offence, and the prosecuting authorities will of course take cognizationce of it,

Meantime, the great army of consumers will go along complacently using the Royal Baking Powders—the old reliable, "absolutely pure"—which State Analyst Drew and the Food and Dairy Commission give evidence that they have found from official tests to be of the highest character as to purity, wholesomeness and leavening strength, and which is always sold for what it is, with out falsehood, prevarication or misstatement.

With the April number the Review of Reviews enters upon its second year. It has had an exceptional, if not an altogether unique, history. One year ago it was known only to a few discriminating readers, and its subscription list and news-stad sales required only a few thousand copies. Its edition the prsent month is 70,000 copies, and it is eagerly read in every State and Territory in the Union and in every part of Canada. No extraordinary effort have been made to push the magazine. There has been very little canvassing done for it; no chromoe have been given to its subscribers; no special inducements, such as an encyclopædia or a parlor organ thrown in as a gratuity or offered at half price, have been offered by the publishers. The magazine has grown to an enormous circulation and to commanding influence simply upon its merits. Its readers have liked it therefore recommended it to their friends. It owes not a little so the newspapers of the country, which have appreciated the journalistic enterprise and vigor and the enormous amount of hard, honest labor put into every number, and which have most heartily recommended it to their readers. While working in the closest cooperation with the English Review of Reviews, edited by Mr. W. T Ste d in London, the American Review is a distinct magazine, wholly and entirely edited, printed and published in New York, and in the fullest sence of the word as much an American periodical as Mr. Stead's London edition is an English periodical. The general aims and purposes, plans and methods, of the two magazens are identical, and each has the fullest access in advance to all the materials and illustrations prepared for the other. The American Review, being somewhat larger and higher priced, is more profusely illustrated. It has 20 or 30 more pages each month than the London edition. Its bound volumes, covering the past year, are a wonderful history of current action and thought, and a marvelous portrait gallery containing the faces of seven or eight hundred people of contemporary note, representing all parts of the world.

Trusts and Stock Exchanges.

Duluth Weekly News.

The big monopolies and trusts, such as the Standard Oil company, the Sugar Trust, the type founder's trust and others of the same class, cannot survive. The people are becoming aroused at the startling and steady advance of combinations and trusts and when the people grow united and earnest they always accomplish what they undertake. The rapid formation of public opinion that the time for action against monopoly and trust has come is a worning that will not pass unheeded by the men who control them. One of the potent influences at work now is the effect the popular movement is having upon trust certificates. That the purchasers and dealers in stocks are watching public opinion and using its expression in their business is veay evident.

The last letter of Henry Clews, on the Wall street situation says:

The monopoly issues have introduced an element of uncertainty in the stock market which calls for special caution on the part of exchange itself in admitting indiscriminately so-called securities to its list. Public opinion is becoming more and more decidedly hostile to whatever form of organization conspires to defeat free competition. Congress and the state legislatures find it necessary to respect this determined attitude of the people, and at no distant time the laws will be so framed that nowhere in this country will any form of corporation which aims to exersise the powers of a monopoly be able to exist under the ægis of the law. The attempts of the trusts to evade the penalties of their illegality by organizing under the loosest form of legalization to be found under state laws will become futile. The law will be constructed with a simple purpose of preventing the defeat of competition by monopolies; and that form of prohibition will be made to apply to any and every form of organization. Of this there can be no reasonable doubt.

With this prospect before our monopolies, what is the market status of their immense issues? Many of them are already illegal, and the others are destined to become so. When that result comes, the profits they are now making out of an excusive control of prices will disappear. It requires little foresight to discover that these issues constitute a most formidable danger in the future of the stock market. Any day, a new law or a desision of the supreme court of the United States may within twenty-four hours wipe out tens of millions of the market value of this illegitimate scrip, with consequence of the most far-reaching character.

When the stock or certificats of trusts canot be sold on the stock exchanges their promoters will go out of business.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

(First publication March 31st, 1892.)
[Last publication May 12th, 1892.]

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Jennie Kelly and Alfred D. Kelly, her husband, Mortgagors, to Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, mortgagee, bearing date the 25th day of October, A. D. 1886, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 29th day of October, A. D. 1886, at 4:15 o'clock p. m., in book 26 of mortgages, on pages 389 to 392; and

Whereas, such default consists of the failure to pay the following installments of interest, to-wit: $25.50 that became due October 25th, 1889; $25.50 that became due April 25th 1890; $25.50 that became due October 25th, 1890; $35.50 that became due April 25th, 1891, and $25.50 that became due October 25th, 1891;

And whereas the said Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, holder of said mortgage, has elected to declare and hereby does declare, the whole principal sum in said mortgage set forth due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained,

And whereas there is actually due and payable at the date hereof upon the premises in said mortgage described upon which there is default the following sum, to-wit: Ten hundred Nine and 60-100 ($1009.60) Dollars, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise, has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The north-east quarter (ne¼) of Section nineteen (19) Township one hundred forty-nine (149) Range forty-two (42), containing 160 acres more or less according to the government survey thereof, all of said premises situated and being in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty ($50) dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on

Monday, the Sixteenth Day of May, A. D. 1892,

at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated March 25th, A. D. 1892.

Our blacksmith got a lot of plow outfits but found he was short six lays. He thinks he will find them.

Our Maple Bay stage is jogging along on wheels with the mail. Hugh says "By gum, the roads are a terror!"

Charley Stone had the misfortune to drown one of his oxen in the slough near Child's camp at Woodside. Charley says the last he saw of him was one hind foot as he disappeared beneath the ice.

We were at the Fertile mill the other day where we were very kindly treated and accepted an invitation to dine with the family of Mr. F. Sohler. This gentleman thinks he is improving and we hope to see him around amongst us once more.

If you want the best loaf of bread you ever tasted buy the Fertile roller mill straight flour and you can have it. We believe under the skilfull hand of Otto Kankel and the wheat produced in this locality that the Red River Valley cannot beat it. A gentleman said to me the other day that he had worked in the largest mill in Minnesota and they could not make such flour. On being asked why, he answered "They have not the Maple Lake country wheat to make it of."

There are a few prairie wolves about here. One of them has his careful eye on Mr. Wm. Klinger's flock of sheep.

Joseph Sauve returned last week from Canada where he spent some weeks visiting friends and relatives. While there he purchased four grade Clyde mares which are as fine as your correspondent ever saw in this vicinity. He also purchased several bee hives filled with the busy workers and will try raising honey in Polk County.

This week Irael Laframboise returned bringing with him a fine imported Clyde stallion, four fine Clyde mares, grades, (also the four belonging to Mr. Sauve) a thoroughbred Cottswold ram and some fine chickens and geese. He was nine days on the way owing to the strike on the C. P. R. and had a narrow escape from burning his car which caught fire one night from his lantern. Mr. L. was accompanied by a young man who will work on his farm this summer while he decides how he likes this country. He says that many are interested and would come if they could sell out there. He expects some to come later in the season to look the country over.

Our alliance met on the 24th to elect officers. Julian Sauve was elected president, C. T. Barnaas, secretary and the old treasurer, O. Sauve. The question of merging our alliance into the Peoples Party was brought up for discussion and did not meet with universal approval. We are of the opinion that our interests can better be subserved by and through the old alliance which we do understand than by starting into a new scheme which we do not understand.

World's Fair Notes.

Denmark has maide a World's Fair appropriation of $67,000.

A communication has been received from the British Commission asking for space to exhibit the rifle calibre gun manufactured by the Maxim-Nordenfeldt Gun company. The company wants to erect a building 30x50 feet to exhibit its guns in practice. One end of the building will be filled with sand bags, into which the projectiles of the gun will be fired. It is claimed that the arrangements are such as will insure perfect safety, and will be reproductions of a similar exhibit recently given at the Royal Naval Exposition in London. The request was referred to Chief Willard Smith of the Transportation Department, as the exhibit if allowed will come under the head of naval and marine display.

A very complete, and doubtless an eye-opening diamond exhibit, will be maide by Cape Colony, South Africa. The exhibit will inclune 10,000 carats of uncut stones, a large quantity of very fine cut and polished ones, together with all that is necesary to show the process of mining and washing. For this it will be necessary to transport to Chicago 100 tons of pulverized blue earth, 50 tons of unpulverized earth and a compleat washing machine, which will be operated by natives. The exhibit will also include a unique collection of crocidolite, special diamondiferous products, ostrich feathers, fleeces etc., It is reported that a Bushman and Hottentot in native dress will accompany the exhibit.

A continuous clam-bake will be one of the attractions which epicurean visitors will find at the Exposition.

Harper Bros., Scribner & Sons and the Century company have agreed to exhibit at the Fair illustrations showing the history of transpotation in all countries. Chief Smith expects to secure similar exhibits from foreign countries and from other publishers in this country. The exhibit will include reproductions of lithographs, original drawing and photographs.

To World's Fair committee of the North American Turner Bund has made a personal application to Director General Davis for space for a display of gymnastic apparatus literature on the subject of physical exercise and development, and representations of gymnastic organizations as well as for outdoor gymnastic exhibitions, which the turners desire to give eight days in each month during the Exposition.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

[First publication March 31st, 1892.]
[Last publication May 12th, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of ten and 50-100 dollars ($10.50) which became due on the first day of October A. D. 1890, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Isaic Normandin and Philomene Normandin, his wife, to John Milton Oliver, bearing date the first day of October A. D. 1888, which mortgage together with the power of sale therein contained was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the first day of October A. D. 1888, at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m., in book 40 of mortgages on pages 112 and 113.

It is provided in said mortgage that if said mortgagors shall fail to pay any part of the sum of money thereby secured at the time and in the manner specified in said mortgage, then upon such default, the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage, may at the option of the mortgagee be declared due and payable; and the said John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, who is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured, has elected and does hereby elect and declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage to be due, and there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of forty-one and 70-100 dollars ($41.70) and no action or proceeding has been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section twenty-five (25) in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on

SATURDAY, THE FOURTEENTH DAY OF MAY, A. D. 1892,

at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale as provided by law.

Dated at Minneapolis, Minn., this 22d day of March, A. D. 1892.

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Nils S. Nilson and Cecilia S. Nilson, his wife, mortgagors, to Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, mortgagee, bearing date the 24th day of December, A. D. 1888, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 9th day of January, A. D. 1889, at 10:45 o'clock a. m., in book 43 of mortgages, on page 455; and

Whereas, such default consists of the failure to pay the following installments of interest, to-wit: $22.75 that became due June 24th, 1889, $22.75 that became due December 24th, 1889, $22.75 that became due June 24th, 1890, and $22.75 that became due December 24th, 1890, $22.75 that became due June 24th, 1891, and $22.75 that became due December 24th, 1891. And whereas the said Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, the holder of said mortgage, has elected to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole principal sum in said mortgage set forth due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained.

And whereas there is actually due and payable at the date hereof upon the premises in said mortgage described upon which there is default the following sum, to-wit: eight hundred twenty-one and 71-100 ($821.71) Dollars, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The south half (s½) of the north-east quarter (ne¼) and the west half (w½) of south-east quarter (se¼) of Section two (2) Township one hundred and forty-seven (147) Range forty (40), containing 160 acres more or less according to the government survey thereof. All of said premises situated and being in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty (50) dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston in said County and State, on the 16th day of May, A. D. 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of Eight and 25-000 dollars ($8.25), which became due on the first day of December, A. D. 1889, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Edward L. Haven, an unmarried man, to John Milton Oliver, bearing date the 11th day of July, A. D. 1888, which mortgage, together with the power of sale therein contained was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the 16th day of July A. D. 1888, at 11 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m., in Book 38 of Mortgages on pages 329 and 330.

It is provided in said mortgage that if said mortgagor shall fail to pay any part of the sum of money thereby secured at the time and in the manner specified in said mortgage, then upon such default, the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage, may at the option of the mortgagee be declared due and payable; and the said John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, who is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured, has elected and does hereby elect and declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage to be due, and there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of thirty-five and 84-100 dollars ($35.84) and no action or proceeding has been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section number ten (10) in Township number one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-three (43) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on (Special Correspondence).

WASHINGTON, D. C. April—, 1892.

The public men and politicians of Washington, and all those who come here, are just now most interested in figuring out the probabilities of the two National Conventions and the chances of the election which follows. Within a short time the situation, with reference to both party nominations, has changed somewhat. In the republican ranks the opposition to the renomination of President Harrison, which a few weeks ago seemed sufficiently formidable to make a combination against him possible, is gradually melting away as the convention approaches, and there is now hardly a doubt that he will be renominated on the first ballot, if, indeed, it is not done by acclamation. That at least is the present outlook from this point of observation though of course great changes are always possible in this country, even in the short time that now remains. Mr. Harrison has given the country a wise, safe, and patriotic administration and has won the esteem of all the people. Mr. Blaine aside, there is probably no man in the party who would command a larger vote or whose title to the nomination is better.

In the democratic camp it now looks like Cleveland again. About the time of D. B. Hill's midwinter convention, at Albany, things looked a little squally for "the stuffed prophet," as Brother Dana so playfully terms him but he is, after all, the great brass-mounted idol of the democratic party outside of New York, and Hill having made a dismal failure of his personal hunt for votes it begins to look once more as though his royal obesity would be nominated. Just why the innocent democratic heart out in the rural districts yearns so intensely for Cleveland it would be hard to explain. Those who came most in contact with him while he was President do not admire him and oppose his further aspirations, but it is the rank and file who have never seen him that worshep him from afar. Mr. Cleveland is not a great man, except in the sense that he weighs 300 pounds, nor has he any of the elements of a popular man. He has always held himself better than his party—fit only to associate with high-minded and blue-blooded mugwumps—and to-day he believes that he is the only man in the party good enough to be President; that if they don't take him they are not in it. And some of the party think likewise. Hence the present diagnosis of the situation is that we shall have the old camdaign of Harrison vs Cleveland over again, with probably the same reault. It will be a case of history repeating itself.

The unanimity with which Hon. Roger Q. Mills has recovered average health immediately after the "vindication" he received from the Texas Legislature is one of the most remarkable instances of faith-cure of the present decade. When his credentials arrived here he marched over to the Senate Chamber, like Fitz James on the crags, when seeking the best blood of Roderick Dhu, "with step erect and ear awake," as if he had never been sick in his life. Mr. Mills may well thank his lucky stars if he has any, for being defeated in his attempt to be Speaker. He has now a position better fitted for his peculiar abilities, his temper, and his health than he would have had had he been elected Speaker. Sympathy for him in unexpected defeat made him Senator. The idea is still alive in Texas that his defeat was accomplished by a ring—a base combination of Hill Tammany, Springer and possibly the arch enemy of human souls. The idea that he had not a qualification for the position has never grown there. Mills was simply a victim of an outrageous political conspiracy, and senator Hill is held responsible for the defeat, though he had no more to do with it than the Governor of Texas, nor half as much.

Senator Hill now comes into close relations with the man who has long been his mentor, ex-Speaker Carlisle. He may be said to be the discoverer of Mills. He made him chairman of the Ways and Means committee; held the party together for him while he was trying to get his tariff bill through; kept him from flying into a dozen pieces; induced him to take the dodge he did last fall on the matter of free silver; made him a candidate for speaker, and now has him under tutelage. He never can make a statesman of him, but will keep him within bounds if the Lord spares his life.

Not the smallest part of a congressman's duties is answering letters from his constituents. All members of congress in both houses receive a great many letters, but some who are popular and well known get a great many more than others. Ex-speaker Reed has one of the largest mails that comes to the Capitol. People from all over the country write to him on various subjects and every morning an enormous batch of letters and newspapers covers his desk. The majority of congressmen look carefully after their correspondence and answer all letters, especially from their constituents. It will be noted that those who make a special point of that sort of thing are generally popular at home and enjoy a long public service. Chairman Springer of ways and means committee is one of these; so was Sam. Randall and many of the best-known public servents of all times. It is the custom of the big Maine statesman to reach his desk in the House an hour before the session begins and spend the time in carefully sorting over the stacks of letters and marked papers. Many ladies write to him for his autograph, and the number of square, scented envelopes received from this source every week would fill a good-sized waste basket. While running over his mail, one day this week, he come across a unique request. It was contained in a prim little note from a western girl and was as followe: "Won't you be kind enough to write upon the enclosed paper your autograph and the sentiment:" "Righteousness exalteth the Nation." The Czar smiled and wrote the young lady his autograph minus the sentiment, about which he said he had some doubt.

A Legislative Endorsement.

A law was passed last winter in Minnesota affecting the sale of alum baking powders. The interest excited by the bill when proposed led to a long and thorough investigation by a legislative committee of the qualities of all the baking powders sold in that Sate, with the result that the Royal was shown by very positive evidence from the State Chemist, Dr. Drew, and others, to be the purest, strongest, and in all respects the best baking powder in the market.

Popular Talks On Law.

BY WM. C. SPRAGUE, ESQ.

THE MERCANTILE AGENCIES.

In accordance with the promise in my last article, I shall undertake to say a few words in reference to the liability of mercantile agencies doing a collection business.

In the first place, almost all agencies who do a reporting business also handle collections, it seeming to be almost a necessary part of their business, and as almost every one, at some time in his business career, is tempted to employ an agency in the collection of his claims, a statement with reference to the liability of an agency handling such business, will be of general interest.

In the first place, it may be stated as a general rule, that the liability of an agency is governed by the contract made between the agency and the owner of the claim. In most cases, however, the contract is merely an implied contract, on express terms being agreed upon, unless it be as to the rate per cent to be charged by the agency for the work it does. Usually a bare receipt is given for the collection and the liability of the agency in some cases, and in all cases where the terms are not defined, is to be determined from the general law of contracts.

By undertaking to collect an agency does not insure a collection; and early in the history of agencies, it was thought that the taking of a claim for collection was an implied agreement upon the part of the agency to forward it to its local correspondent, and to act merely as a forwarder of the claim and as the agent for the receipt of the money and the turning of it over to the client. That its liability did not extend to the loss of the money by failure of the correspondent to pay it over, and that it was only bound to use ordinary and reasonable diligence in the selection of capable and honest correspondent and reasonable diligence in following up the claim. There can be no doubt that if the terms of the contract expressly state that such is the position of the agency, that is that it shall be the agent merely for the purpose of forwarding a claim, the agency cannot be held responsible after using ordinary and reasonable diligence in performing its duties.

The law in later times, however, is much more severe upon the agencies, where there is no stated contract absolving it from liability. The position of the agency is now said to be the same as that of the attorney doing like work, and the law with reference to it is the same.

In a leading case, Bradstreet v. Everson, 72 Pa. St., 124 a mercantile agency undertook to collect certain claims belonging to their customer, giving the following receipt.

Received of Messrs. Everson & Co., 4 duplicate acceptances for collection, v. Watt C. Bradford, Memphis, Tenn., amounting th $1,726,37.

(Signed) J. M. BRADSTREET & SON.

In delivering the opinion of the court, the judge observed; "It is argued, notwithstanding the express receipt for collection, that the defendants did not undertake for themselves to collect, but only to submit to a proper and responsible attorney, and made themselves liable only for diligence in correspondence and giving the necessary information to the plaintiffs; or, in briefer terms, that the attorney in Memphis was not their agent for the collection, but that of the plaintiff's only. The current of decision, however, is otherwise as to attoney-at-law sending claims to correspondents for collection, and the reasons for applying the same rules to collection agencies are even stronger. They have their selected agents in every part of the country. From the nature of such ramified institutions, we must conclude that the public impression will be that the agency invites customers on the very ground of its facilities for making distant collections. It must be presumed from its business connection at remote points and its knoledge of the agents chosen, that the agency intends to undertake the performance of the service which the individual customer is unable to perform for himself. There is good reason, therefore, to hold that such an agency is liable for collections made, by its own agents, when it undertakes the collection by the exprese terms of the receipt."

There was another case arising and decided at Philadelphia in 1870, where the receipt given by the agency read as follows:

For collection according to direction, and proceeds when received by us to be paid over to King & Baird.

Across the face of this was written this:

N. B—The owner of the within mentioned taking all the risks of the mail, the losses by failure of agents to remit and also the losses by reason of insurrection or war.

By thus limiting their liability, the agency was decided to have been relieved of responsibility sought to be charged against it.

Other cases deciding that the attorney undertaking the collection of claims, who fails to limit his liability in the receipt or agreement to make the collection, is liable for losses occurring through the negligence, etc., of his agents may be found in Pennsylvania, Alabama, Indiana, Arkansas, Mississippi, and elsewere.

I will, in my next paper, discuss further the relation of client and attorney in this matter of collections.

Lincoln's Death.

Twenty-six years ago day before yesterday, the writer stood on one of the hills about Chattanooga, Tennessee. All round were camps, cannon and soldiers. The camps were gay, with flags, the cannon were firing salutes, the soldiers were shouting for joy. Lee had surrendered, the end of the war had come, and home was in sight. The next morning the flags were at half-mast, the cannon were firing minute-guns, the soldiers were silent and sad. It was an abrupt transition from wide-spread joy to universal mourning. Our beloved war President, "Old Abe," had been murdered the evening before by a fanatical assassin. Then it seemed as if a new breach had been made between North and South that never would be healed. To-day the whole country is united and loyal, and its people, visiting from one section to another, traveling by the Burlington lines of railroad, are one family again. Sham Economy.

New York Press.

When the late Republican Congress came into power it was compelled to meet over $25,000,000 of pension deficiencies created by the demoratic congress that preceded it. The present democratic congress seems determined to use the Pension Appropriation bill again as a means of making a show of economy. The estimates for pensions have already been cut down nearly $13,000,000 by Judge Holman's committee, and more cutting down is yet to be done on the bill which provides for assistance to disabled veterans of the Union army and their widows and orphans. Yet the River and Harbor Committee in this same democratic congress has reported an appropriation bill which, by fair calculation, is nearly $2,000,000 in excess of the measure reported to the late Republican House and which contains provisions for the making of contracts by which $25,000,000 would necessarily be expended by the government for certain specified purposes within the next ten years. Such is the sham economy by which the democrats hope to deceive the public while really raiding the Treasury.

World's Fair Notes.

The Arkansas World's Fair board has selected ten acres near Little Rock which it will have cultivated with the view of rasing various agricultural products for exhibit at the Exposition. The Board has made arrangements to send to Chicago for the Forestry building specimens of pine, white oak, red oak, sweet gum, cypress and walnut.

The limit of time in which States and territories and foreign countries must accept the sites allotted them on the Exposition grounds has been fixed at June 1st, 1892.

The New South Wales World's Fair Commission is contemplating sending for exhibition at the Exposition copies of the noted aboriginal cave inscriptions of northern Queensland, and also a whole tribe of aborigines.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

Crookston, April 14, 1892.

'Round Home.

Wheat—1 Hard 66.
1 Northern 65.
2 Northern 59.
3 Northern 55.

T. H. Bjoin started for Iowa last week after another carload of horses.

The weather for the past week has not been very conducive to an early spring.

H. L. Zutzh was down from Red Lake Falls this week, on the lookout for a farm to rent.

Miss Inez McGrew went out to Fosston last week to see about a school for the coming season.

Fred Davis, "our Fred," was down from Euclid last week chatting with friends as lively as a cricket.

M. W. Davis & Son came down from Euclid last week and purchased a pair of fine mares of M. R. Brown.

Jim Bain came up from Fisher on Saturday to buy one of those good solid working teams at M. R. Brown's.

Senator Burkhardt came up from Wabasha County last week to visit with his son Rudy and friends in this city.

A. M. Childs went over to Grand Forks last Friday to attend a banquet given by the N. Y. Life Insurance folks.

H. B. Budd was up from Edna on Thursday last limping around from the effects of a recent injury. He was just as good looking as ever and as jolly.

Rev. R. H. Battey went down to Fertile on Friday evening to deliver a lecture, the proceeds of which goes to aid in building the new Congregational church at Mentor.

M. R. Brown returned on Friday with another carload of fine Iowa mares—which makes the eighth or ninth carload this spring, and if this carload is not enough he will go again. Call and see this lot.

The new hail insurance company, located in the Rickett Block, starts in with bright prospects, having lots of business secured in the outset. It will pay all our friends who contemplate insuring against hail to call and see them.

Dr. M. Leguee has gone to Park Rapids, in Hubbard Co., on professional business to be gone a week or ten days. The doctor is kept busy almost constantly attending to his veterinary work. He has the reputation of being one of the best in the business.

The weather during the past week has April fooled almost everybody on their fuel calculations, and the dealers in wood and coal have reaped the benefit. Wood has been a very scarce article while coal has pursued the even tenor of its way at the same old prices.

Mr. Carpenter, of Larsen, Carpenter & Co., spent a portion of last week interviewing St. Paul and Minneapolis agricultural implement dealers. Says the warehouses are nearly all empty so great has been the demand in this line this spring. L. C. & Co. have sold 100 drills already and could have sold 125 more if they could have got them. Their trade in other lines has also been excellent this spring.

THE JOURNAL regrets to learn of the death of A. H. Baker, which occurred at Grand Rapids, Mich., on March 30th. Mr. Baker was for some time a resident of Norman County and represented this district in the Legislature. Mr. Baker was superintendent of the soldiers' home at Grand Rapids at the time of his death, was 57 years old and had many friends in this community who will regret to learn of his death. He leaves a son and daughter.

Easter services at 11 a. m. and 8 p.m. next Sunday at the Congregational church. Everyone cordially invited. Morning subject: "The Debt of the World to the Resurrected Christ;" evening: "The Battle of Life and Our Resurrection Hopes." Special interest centers in Easter Sabbath and let this joyful occasion find all members and worshipers and their friends present in our sanctuary early to spend the hours of service in joyful praise.

The farmer who sows the White Russian oats has two chances for a market for them. In the first place, if you have a fine sample they can be sold for oat-meal, and if not so good they are all right for feed. Black oats are no good for oat-meal and the ordinary white oats not very much better as they are usually too small. The White Russian comes nearest to filling the bill and as there are plenty for seed in the county every farmer can raise them if he will.

A. E. Brush, of Angus, was in the city last week looking for a hired girl for which he was offering fancy wages. Says he cannot account for the low prices of wheat this spring in view of the prospects for a shortage in spring wheat here and the fact that the winter wheat is almost a failure everywhere. He has recently returned from a trip through some of the principal winter wheat states and says he did not see one good piece on his travels—some of it utterly ruined, and when we come to consider the probability that the Valley will not raise more than 50 per cent. its usual crop, he thinks wheat should be very much higher, and we coincide with that view.

Mrs. Geo. W. Tice came down from Mentor on Monday evening.

Governor Merriam has designated Monday, May 2d, as Arbor Day.

Dr. C. E. Dampier was registered at a prominent St. Paul hotel last week.

"Do you know" that J. W. Wheeler has money to loan at reasonable rates and no long waits for the money to come from some place? He has it on hand ready for delivery as soon as the papers are made out.

Elsewhere we note the organization of the Minnesota Hail association, a home company, with headquarters at Crookston. Later we will take occasion to tell our readers who the incorporators are and what they intend to do.

Marshall County Leader:—A grand encampment of the G. A. R. will be held at Crookston for a week in July. The arrangements are being made on a large scale and it is expected that from ten to fifteen thousand people will be assembled there. Frank Barager commander of the post here, says the boys are all going.

Prof. Carruth informs us that Prof. Kiehle will open a training school for teachers in this city on July 11th, for the instruction of teachers in Marshal, Polk and Norman counties and, he desires us to say that he expects to see every teacher in this county in attendance. The school will be conducted by able instructors and will continue four weeks.

Postmaster Dawley's report to the Postmaster General on Wednesday a. m might have read something like this: "New assistant postmaster for this office——arrived at my house last night——regulation weight——duly registered as second-class male matter——taking my estimate of his value this should entitle this office to all of the privileges of a first-class office."

A St. Vincent special of the 11th inst. says: The Red river is now over the banks and has begun flooding the towns of St. Vincent and Emerson. The river is about 40 feet above low water mark and still rising, and the ice is not yet gone out. A rise of one foot more will cover the town of Emerson. The indications are that the disastrous flood of 1880 will be repeated.

The grand opening of new spring millinery at Mrs. E. E. Bangs' was the delight of the ladies of Crookston and vicinity. Words fail to describe the many attractions of the display, but when we say that Mrs. Bangs had the world we speak literally correct, for she did have it—suspended from a wire in her show window. She has a fine display of millinery, and invites the attention of our lady readers to it.

County Commissioner C. P. DeMers dropped into our den on Friday to assure us that he could not get along without THE JOURNAL and as an evidence put up one-and-one-half simoleons—said to be worth 70 cents on the dollar, but as everything goes with us we did not kick on the extra 30. Mr. DeMers says there is more water in his country this spring than he ever before and he does not think much seeding will be done this month.

Our reporter passed the show window of Veronneau & Adams during the great opening display of spring millinery, and such a crowd of delighted ladies as he saw therein dismayed him——he did not dare to go in and interview the firm on that occasion, but from the display of ribbons, and hats, and trimmings, and flowers that he saw, and the expressions of delight that he heard, he formed the opinion that the display was a very creditable one; afterward we overheard one lady purchaser remark: "How exceedingly cheap those lovely goods are this spring!" The ladies, Miss Veronneau and Mrs. Adams, desire to thank their lady patrons for their liberal patronage so far, and assure them that they will do their best to merit a continuance of the same.

The following brief letter from T. H. Bjoin, from Ridgeway, Iowa, explains itself:

"I will be in Crookston on Thursday evening, April 14th, with a car load of extra heavy work horses and mares. Kindly invite all JOURNAL readers and others who may want good teams, to call and see this lot.

Respectfully yours,
T. H. BJOIN.

The recent advance of 7 cents in the price of wheat in about a week's time was due principally to the unfavorable condition of the weather in the southwestern and some portions of the western states. Winter wheat has been damaged to such an extent in those sections as to insure an appreciable decrease in the wheat yield of the United States for 1892. The weather bureau at Washington has figured out, from the present crop conditions, that the damage already done will decrease the yield at least 200,000,000 bushels. In former years, with similar crop conditions and weather in April as have existed during the present month, the price of wheat has advanced, on an average, about 11½ cents; so it is reasonable to suppose that the top of the market for this spring has not been reached. Over-estimation of the shortage of crops in foreign countries for the past year, and an under estimate of the amount of grain produced in the U. S. for the same period, were the principal causes which tended to lower and keep prices in this country. But now that the wheat speculators have begun to figure on the crop conditions and probable yield for this year the market has become firm and prices are steadily advancing.

The committee of arrangements for the Grand Army reunion next summer are preparing to raise the amount necessary to carry out the program and every public-spirited citizen should be prepared, when waited upon to cheerfully respond to the call. Aside from other considerations it will be such an advertisement of our city as we have seldom if ever had as in all probability thousands of strangers will be in attendance during the encampment. There are also other weighty considerations of a financial nature that should be an inducement even if a person should feel no special interest in the welfare of our city. Every citizen of Crookston should lend a cheerful hand in aid of this matter and contribute as liberally as his means will permit.

Frank Bruce was in last week to set that subscription ahead a peg and told us of his recent loss by fire, reference to which was made in these columns a few weeks since. It seems that he lost everything he had in the house as, by the time the neighbors arrived the fire was so hot nothing could be saved. He was two miles away when he saw the house in flames and hastened home to find that his wife, who had been quite ill for some time, had succeeded in getting safely out. He had his summer's flour, pork and potatoes stored in the house and cellar all of which was totally destroyed except about 10 pounds of pork and that was roasted elegantly. Though the loss was a severe one he does not seem discouraged but is going bravely to work to repair the damages. Says his wife is very much better since the fire and is recovering rapidly. Though severe medicine to take he thinks it was beneficial.

A NEW ELEVATOR COMPANY.

The Farmers' Protective Association has decided to launch a new elevator company and at a recent meeting steps were taken to that end, and after some discussion the following schedule was agreed upon:

1. The name of this corporation shall be The Northwestern Farmers' Protective Elevator Company.
2. The object of the corporation is to erect their own elevator in Duluth or West Superior for storing, shipping, handling or selling grain.
3. The principal place of business of the corporation shall be at Grand Forks, North Dakota.
4. The term for the corportion to exist shall be twenty years.
5. The Number of directors shall be eleven, and the directors now elected to serve until their successors are elected and qualified. They are as follows:

Ole O Haugerud, Grafton, N. D.
H. H. Storm, Hillsboro, N. D.
Andrew Steenerson, Climax, Minn.
W. J. Anderson, Grand Forks, N. D.
Thos. Ulven, Grand Forks, N. D.
A. O. Heglie, Walcott.
Ole Aune, Fertile Minn.
A. Braseth, Dwight, N. D,
Ole H. Brenna, Grand Forks N. D.
John O. Fadden, Grand Forks, N. D.

6. The capital stock of the company shall be two hundred thousand dollars, divided into shares of twenty-five dollars each. No person can hold more than forty shares.
7. Stock shall be non-assesable and non-transferable, except to members of The Northwestern Farmers' Protective Association.
8. The first general meeting is to be held the last Tuesday in June, 1892.

Assistant Secretary Nettleton, of the treasury department, denies the rumor that he intends to resign his position, and has again resumed his duties after a brief absence from Washington.

The president has issued a proclamation directing to be opened to settlement on April 15, 1892, at 12 o'clock noon, the surplus lands of the Sisseton and Wahpeton reservations in the Dakotas. The lands to be opened aggregate 574,257 acres. Register Potter of the Fargo land office, where a large portion of the lands will be filed on, is very sick at New Orleans and writes President Harrison that he will be unable to be at Fargo by the 15th, which may necessitate the appointment of another register, or the postponement of the opening of the reservation. Large numbers of land-seekers are on the ground awaiting the opening.

FONTAINE & ANGLIM,
Leaders in Low Prices on Quality.

Very large congregations have attended the Baptist church since the settlement of the new pastor. Next Sunday night the sermon on "The sin of Unbelief" will be illustaated by blackboard and chemical test. Services are changed to following hours: Preaching service Sunday 11 a. m. and 8 p.m.; Bible school at 12:15 p.m.; young people's meeting at 7 p.m. Prayer meeting Wednesday 8 p.m.

Subscriptions to stock in the new Farmers' Elevator Company are now being taken and if the business is properly conducted it will, we think prove the best investment ever made by the farmers. It will at least settle definitely the question as to where the profits in the wheat raising business have gone during the past years. A line of elevators, owned and controlled by the farmers, would bring the Red River Valley farmer in direct communication with the consumer in England and give the farmer whatever profit there has been in handling his wheat. Under ordinary circumstances and in a competing market the wisdom of this movement might be questioned but under the existing circumstances we believe this movement is a wise one, providing it is properly managed.

Charlie Vine is not doing any bragging but he is just simply selling the choicest cuts in the market. Try him.

Home Office,
MINNESOTA HAIL ASSOCIATION,
CROOKSTON, Minn., April 7, 1892

At a meeting of the board of directors consisting of the following named gentlemen—C. H. Warren, Pres.; F. D. Lord, vice-pres. and field manager; C. L. Graber, secretary; L. C. Couverette, F. Bivins and T. J. McAdams, the following business was transacted:

The by-laws governing the association were read by the secretary and after being duly considered were, with a single amendment, adopted. On motion, Mr. Hugh Thompson, of Fisher, was made treasurer of the association, and the Merchant's National Bank of Crookston was made general depository of association funds. The association has taken a lease for a term of 8 months for for office purposes of rooms 23 and 24 in the building known as the Rickett block, corner 2nd and Main st, and as soon as the necessary books and blanks can be printed will be ready for action. There being no further business, the meeting was adjourned to meet again at 7 p. m.

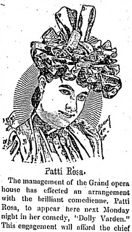
320 ACRE FARM in Town of Roome. Fine state of cultivation. Good farm buildings. 170 acres ready for seeding in spring. Dirt cheap at $4,000, one-half cash, balance to suit. Stock and farm machinery can also be bought cheap.

TWO good farms in Town of Louisville can be had for $959 each. Easy terms, long time.

This is the Cap-sheaf of All!

520 ACRES land, 3 miles from Fisher, all under cultivation, 420 acres ready for seeding. Good farm buildings. Good water. $25 per acre takes this, and will throw in 20 head horses and harnesses, 7 wagons, 4 binders, 2 mowers, 2 rakes, 4 gang plows, 2 harrows, new press drill, 2 sleds, 2 cows, full set Blacksmith tools and small farm implements. $3,000 cash and balance long time at 7 per cent.



Patti Rosa.

The management of the Grand opera house has effected an arrangement with the brilliant comedienne, Patti Rosa, to appear here next Monday night in her comedy, "Dolly Varden." This engagement will afford the chief event of the season here. Patti Rosa is known and admired from one end of the country to the other, and has played successful engagements in England and Australia as well. She has one of the best companies traveling, and the entire performance is spoken of in the highest terms by the critics of Chicago, New York, Boston, San Francisco and other cities. A crowded house should greet this famous star.

Euclid Items.

A brand new boy arrived at the residence of Mr. Crapo on Monday, 4th.

Mr. Carrol has rented the n. e. ¼ sec. 32, R. 47, Tp. 152, belonging to Robert Casmey.

On the south bound G. N. mixed train near Donladson the other day, a tough was put off the train because he did not have a ticket. He subsequently sued the railroad for $5000 damages and secured $500 and that was $500 more than he ought to have had.

Mr. Easby was in Crookston Monday. When asked about his experietce as a farmer he said: "If I were to farm again I would not plow as deep as I did last year. I believe that the stand of grain will be just as good and am positive that it will get ripe two weeks earlier than otherwise.

E. Taylor & Co. have just received a large stock of ladies' and children's hats. Also a lot of hardware.

Farmers do not think they will begin seeding until May 1st.

Tim Larusk lost a valuable mare Monday.

Wm. Brandt's Iowa horses are down with distemper.

Wild geese and ducks are very numerous this season.

Fully six inches of snow fell here Monday.

There are a few light fingered and big muscled people about this neighborhood who, if found out, will be very apt to go over the road. Someone broke into Mr. P. Losey's house at the farm on or about March 30th and broke out the window glass, tipped over the cupboard, demolished a stove and chopped and hammered an oil can full of oil, a new dishpan and several other things were demolished. At about the same time someone broke into the old Charley Misner house which was tenanted by Mick Tracey last season and stole a broom, a few lamp chimneys and several other things. A clue has been obtained and if caught the culprits will be severely dealt with.

Harry and Nelly Chapin departed for Crookston Tuesday where they will visit Clide and Grace Chapin for a few days.

The sick are keeping Dr. Chapin hustling while the roads are fit for it.

Fred Hadley is getting there with both feet now-a-days.

Several of the grades are badly washed out making travelling very dangerous.

Miss Nellie McAvoy, of Crookston is about to take the Angus school for the coming term.

Mr. Pyatt is going to make his home in Euclid in a short time he has rented his farm in Michigan. They are coming mainly for the benefit of his wife's health.

Wills Misner made a flying trip to Crookston Friday.

Charley Jose, of Argyle was in the city last week.

Celeste Cronkite, of Warren, is visiting friends in the city.

There is a certain cooley out west where the farmers are rather inclined to go bathing, thirteen teams being stuck in one day.

Mr. Fargo, Tim Biever, Miss Maggie Beaver, Tim LaRusch and Billie Davidson all in Crookston Friday. FRED.

See Charlie Vine for choice meats of all kinds.

A new Directory was elected by the Exposition stockholders on April 2. With seven exception the members of last year's Directory were re-elected.

Always on hand, anything you want in the line of choice fresh meats, at Charlie Vine's.

Wisconsin will have a $30,000 building at the Fair. Building material to the value of $13.000 has been donated, and the contract for erection has been let for $17,000.

Royal Deaths Always Sudden

"Monarchs may die, but they may never be ill," is an old Turkish proverb which is brought home with peculiar force in connection with the recent demise of Khedive Tewfik of Fgypt. Scarcely any one, either in Euorpe or even in Egypt itself, was aware that the Pasha was ill before his death was announced.

It is curious that each of his predecessors is stated to have died in an equally sudden manner, and there is suspicion of Oriental mystery surrounding the deaths of these men, who but a day prior to their decease were popularly regarded as full of vigor and health.

Thus no one knew that Said Pasha had been ill until he had been dead for two days, while his predecessor, Abbas, the namesake of the present Khedive, was driven in a closed carriage, but in public view, through the streets of Cairo after having been strangled in his harem by order of the Sultan. It was only when his corps had reached the citadel that his death "from sickness" was announced.—N. Y. Recorder.

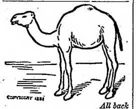
When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Capt. Charles Rath, who hanged Mrs. Surratt and the other Lincoln conspirators in Washington, was suddenly bereft of reason on the run to Jackson, Mich., with the mail train. He has been mail agent for twenty years between Grand Rapids and Jackson.

Pure and Wholesome Quality

Commends to public approval the California liquid laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs. It is pleasant to the taste and by acting gently on the kidneys, liver and bowels to cleanse the system effectually, it promotes the health and comfort of all who use it, and with millions it is the best and only remedy.

Cheerfulness is the daughter of employment.



All back—every cent you've paid for it, if it doesn't benefit or cure you. A medicine that promises this is one that promises to help you.

But there's only one medicine of its kind that can and does promise it. It's Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It's the guaranteed remedy for all Blood, Skin and Scalp Diseases, from a common blotch or eruption to the worst scrofula. It cleanses, purifies, and enriches the blood, invigorates the system, and cures Salt-rheum, Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas and all manner of blood-taints from whatever cause. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence.

It's the best blood-purifier, and it's the cheapest, no matter how many doses are offered for a dollar—for you pay only for the good you get.

Nothing else is "just as good" as the "Discovery." It may be better—for the dealer. But he wants money and you want help.

"German Syrup"

I must say a word as to the efficacy of German Syrup. I have used it in my family for Bronchitis, the result of Colds, with most excellent success. I have taken it myself for Throat Troubles, and have derived good results therefrom. I therefore recommend it to my neighbors as an excellent remedy in such cases. James T. Durette, Earlysville, Va. Beware of dealers who offer you "something just as good." Always insist on having Boschee's German Syrup.

THE FOUNTAIN.

Tinkling and pure are its waters clear
As they fall in a silvery spray;
Reflecting the moonbeam's softest light
Or the rising sun's first ray.

It catches the gleam from the sun set skies,
And weaves a fairy mist,
Its frolicsome waters ripple and play,
When by balmy breezes kissed.

Its brink is cushioned with greenest moss,
Its music soothes the ear,
It falls on the pebbles like fairy bells
From a far off, elfin sphere.

A SONG.

Immovable, unchanging,
The stars stand in the skies,
Upon each other gazing
With sad and loving eyes.

They speak throughout the ages
A speech so rich, so grand;
But none of all the sages
That speech can understand.

But I that speech have mastered,
Can all its meaning trace;
What for a grammar served me
Was my beloved's face.

HOW UNCLE RELENTED.

I WAS in hope I could get you to come to our wedding," said Reginald Vane to his old Uncle Reuben Raymond as they sat in the latter's superb drawing-rooms.

"I never will countenance such an absurd match," growled Mr. Raymond, pouring out himself a glass of Maderia. "The idea of marrying a girl who has nothing to recommend her but the fact that she writes stories, bah!"

"Yes, but Uncle Reuben if Isabel!"—

"There, there. I can't waste time discussing the subject. You need neither of you expect any help from me—and furthermore, I like to take a nap after dinner," and Uncle Raymond threw a handkerchief over his face and proceeded to doze off. Reginald Vane seeing the hopelessness of attempting to argue with such an old tyrant shrugged his shoulders and left the house.

* * * * * *

"It's no use, Bell," said Reginald, when he met the girl he loved. "He's hard as a stone. Just because you are not like his wife, who could make butter and patchwork quilts and raise chickens. You aren't domestic. You dare to read French and Italian. You actually write for the newspapers! My dear, we are a very wicked pair, hopelessly abandoned and depraved, but we must try to endure our destiny as best we can."

And so the young couple laughed and cried in each other's arms, and decide that, after all, the dictum of a thousand Uncle Reubens mattered nothing to them as long as they loved each other.

And the slow years went by, ripening the garlands of their truelove, and scattering more hoar frost on Uncle Reuben Raymond's head and heart.

"Ten thousand dollars!" said Reuben Raymond, distractedly pacing the floor. "It isn't a large sum—I shouldn't have called it so in the days when I had financial dealings with half the houses in Europe—but I can't find a soul who is willing to save me from ruin by advancing it for three short months! Where are all my friends? Where is the money market?"

But bankers' friends cool and change according to the Wall Street thermometer—and the money maker is harder and grimmer than so much adamant to the man whose credit is beginning to tremble and quake in the balance.

"Uncle," said Reginald Vane, "I can't lend you the money myself, because I haven't got it. But I know of a lady who has $10,000 to invest."

"A lady?" said Uncle Reuben, eagerly. "Well I am prepared to give the very best security for it. A lady! I shall be much obliged. Inherited it from her husband, I suppose."

"Oh, no," said Reginald, with a comical twist of the corners of his mouth, "her husband is a poor young clerk on a limited salary."

"Some rich relation has left it to her, then."

"No, Uncle Reuben, she earned it all herself."

Uncle Reuben looked wistfully at the office fire.

"My wife once made a hundred dollars," said he, by saving and working, before we were married. But, ten thousand"—

His voice fell to a reverential whisper at the very idea.

"My cab is at the door," said he hurriedly

"Business is business, and we've no time to lose. Be so good as to take me to the party at once."

So Reginald Vane conducted the old man to a pretty little brick house, bay-windowed and garlanded with ivy, and showed him into a room where sat a blooming young matron with one child in her arms and another clinging to her skirts.

"Uncle Reuben," said he, "this is my wife, my Isabel, whom you have never seen."

"Yes, I know," said the old man, shaking hands uncomfortably with her, while all the time his eyes were wandering furtively around the room in search of some unseen personage. "But—the lady who was to advance the money, Reginald, you know?"

"It is my wife," said Mr. Vane, with a quiet smile. "The money is Isabel's."

Uncle Rueben recoiled a pace or two.

"You are joking," said he.

"Never was more serious in my life," said Mr. Vane. "Isabel's last volume of sketches has proved a success—and she is now anxious to invest $10,000 to the very best advantage."

"And if I can be of any assistance to you," added Isabel softly, "I shall be, oh! so glad,"

The tears—real, actual tears—came into Rueben Raymond's hard gray eyes.

"Neice," said he—"and nephew—I haven't deserved this. I've been a hard uncle to you, but please God, I'll turn over a new leaf from this day henceforward. I'll accept the loan, and many thanks; but it shall be faithfully repaid, with liberal interest. And to the day of my death I'll never forget this kindness."

"The $10,000 proved a most fortunate sum; it enabled the old banker to tide over the troubled sea of his perplexities, and placed him once again in financial security. He went at once to his lawyer's and made his will in behalf of his neice and nephew Isabel and Reginald Vane.

And, to this day, his friends smile meaningly to observe how surely he always contrives to twist the conversation, in all times and places, so as to bring in "my niece, the famous authoress—my nephew Reginald's wife, you know!"

For Uncle Rueben Raymond is no half-way convert.

IN THE EMIGRANT'S WAGON.

An Incident of the Shotgun Quarantine in Texas.

With a red, hazy shimmer the western prairie seethed and quivered in the heat of the late summer sun. Tired birds with dusty wings panted beside the sandy beds of dead rivers, thirst-crazed cattle pawed weakly at the roots of dying cottonwoods—and the brazen sun glared over the desert,

A covered wagon drawn by two oxen slowly clanked along the road. A fiery-eyed man with sunken cheeks and bony fingers sat at the front driving. An emaciated woman, wan and ghastly, lay within, her eyes resting upon him, her hands feebly caressing a babe. Behind her, their bare, bony limbs crossed in the last death struggle, lay two other children—a girl of perhaps 15 and a boy a year younger. As the wagon crushed across a sand-bed in the run of a winter stream, a board nailed to a cottonwood on the bank caught the woman's gaze, but her dim, glazed eyes could not decipher the words it bore. She glanced toward her husband:

"Thirteen miles," he groaned.

"Tonight?" she whispered.

"Yes, Lucy," he said, and, bending tenderly, kissed her.

For even these dying outcasts of the desert could kiss each other. Grim death rode with them, his yellow-fever hue rested upon their parched skins, but love was also there—stronger even than death.

And slowly the plague craft trundled onward toward the nearest town, where the man and woman hoped to obtain water and medical assistance. She, for the baby; he for her.

It was dark when they came within sight of the town, and he, knowing the way, drove directly for the public well.

"Halt," cried a voice. "Are you from Brownsville?"

But the hollow-eyed, specter-like driver heeded not.

"This is quarantine," said the voice, and a gunlock clicked ominously in the soft, hot night air. "Halt, or I'll fire."

But the specter-like driver heeded not.

Two fierce flashes pierced the darkness and the weary oxen started forward as the succeeding reports boomed heavily across the plains.

The scent of water was in their nostrils and soon they were quaffing deeply from the trough beside the public well. And the gaunt driver neither moved nor spoke. The woman was silent.

The weary oxen trudged on beyond the town, and sunrise found them plodding onward.

All day the Western prairie seethed and quivered in the red, hazy glare of the late summer sun, and the plague-wagon with its load of dead crept onward. Great droning flies crawled about the faces of the silent voyagers, and dusty-winged vultures hovered above. One gaunt, red-beaked old fellow for a time rode on the seat beside the specter-driver, then, growing bolder, plunged back into the depths of the wagon.

And the heavy wagon slowly clanked and creaked along the road.

A Devilfish Seizes a Boat.

A big octopus or devilfish, one of those sea monsters graphically described by Victor Hugo in his "Toilers of the Sea," adorns a hook in Brown's fish stall on the Washington street wharf. The hook is driven into the casing of the door, considerably higher than a man's head, but the long, slimy tenacles, or arms, of the monster trail on the ground tapering to a fine point. On the inside of the arms are the cup-like saucer's, which once fastened on to an object, have a bulldog tenacity. The fish weighs forty-five pounds, and its arms measure ten feet, or twenty feet from tip to tip. It is being kept till some Chinese, who consider the meat of the fish a great luxury, come along and purchase it. The captors of the monster was fishermen August Dupont and Joe Michael, who had a hard battle before they succeeded in killing it. The men were coming up the bay the other day with a boat-load of fish, pulling lazily on the oars, when Dupont's blade fouled something in the water. Dupont raised his oar out of the water, and the fish came with it. As it was raised above the surface, one of the monster's strong arms fastened on to the boat, and in an instant it was half way into the boat, and striking wildly at the occupants. Michael was struck on the arm by the monster, but he whipped out a knife and cut the tenacle off. In the meantime Dupont seized a club used for knocking salmon on the head and killed the monster.—Seattle Telegraph.

American Pearls.

Pearl mussels are often found in the upper Mississippi and in rivers flowing to the lakes, but whenever a pearl is discovered in any locality all the mussels in the stream are immediately destroyed by persons in search of others. If the search were systematically conducted, as is done in some parts of Germany, pearl fishery might become an important industry in this country. In Germauy the streams are carefully preserved and are fished for pearls only once in ten or fifteen years. The shells of mussels picked out of the river are carefully opened with a pair of pincers made for the purpose, and if no pearl is found then the mussels are replaced in the water. By means of such a system as this the annual find of pearly in the German empire exceeds $250,000 every year.

How a Boy Sprinkled Mr. Lowell.

James Russell Lowell was walking along Irving street in Cambridge one day when he saw the son of Professor Josiah Boyce—a child not over ten years old now—handling a piece of hose and a stream of water rather recklessly. Fearing a ducking, he began a remonstrance as he approached. The boy listened carefully until Mr. Lowell was done. Then he turned the hose on the venerable poet, who took to undignified flight.

AROUND ABOUT THE FARM.

VALUABLE POINTERS FOR INDUSTRIOUS FARMERS.

The Horse for Farm Work--Gardening for the Household--Keeping Comb Honey--Contagious Pleuro-Pneumonia.

The Horse for Farm Work.

What kind of horse is best, all things considered, for farm work? That is, for farmers, a more important question than whether Sunal's record can be broken by a quarter of a second on the race track. Sunols are for millionaires; good work horses for the millions.

There is considerable diversity of opinion among farmers as to the most desirable horse for agricultural use. Some are in favor of the heavy draft horse, weighing 1,600 pounds and upward. They claim that, white, of course, not suitable for quick work, especially on the road when one is in haste, they cannot be beaten for regular farm work. In a recent discussion on the subject one farmer stated that he had a team, one of which weighed 1,500 and the other from 1,500 to 1,600, and that not another team on his farm did as much work or could go to market quicker.

But other farmers prefer a lighter animal for all purposes. These heavy horses, they say, are apt to give out at times when most needed. In wet weather their big feet sink into the ground and they cannot get them out without such an effort that they soon tire. On solid ground heavy horses can do a great amount of work, but on muddy ground they are praticaally useless.

Those who favor the lighter horses say that a fine, well-built horse, weighing from 1,150 to 1,200 pounds, can raise more corn, haul more grain and do more farm work generally than any other kind one can put on the farm. For draft purposes the big heavy horses, with good bone and good feet, fetch a big price, and are profitable to raise for strictly draft use. Those who need such animals are willing to pay well for a thoroughly good horse. But there are so many kinds of work on a farm that require quickness of movement rather than sheer strength that unless the farmer can afford to keep both kinds, the lighter animal is undoubtedly to be preferred. But in either case the breed should be good. Poor horses of any breed, or of no particular breed, are not worth keeping. "The scrubs," it has been said, "nobody wants." The fact is, however, that whether anybody wants them or not, a great many have them, just as a great many farmers keep scrub cows that are not worth their salt.

For the regular farm work a trotter is not wanted. Pegasus is not suited to the plow. A horse that has a well-knit frame, good muscular development, a strong constitution, endurance and spirit, and one that can walk fast, is a desirable farm horse. When much running about is to be done a different sort of animal is needed—one that can "make time" going to and from town, even when the roads are not in the best condition. But if a farmer can afford only a horse for working, he would better have one of medium weight, and good walking powers than a pair of trotters.

A Barbarous Practice.

The hog, in the minds of many, has been associated with a filthy hog pen, which too often is an abomination without mitigation, says W. P. Perkins, in the National Stockman. These persons cannot realize what a cleanly, well appearing animal the hog truly is when properly cared for and treated with the same consideration as ordinarily governs the breeding of other kinds of farm stock. No man should entertain the thought, that he is to raise hogs successfully within the narrow confines of a pen six or eight feet square. It can't be done. The hog in a state of nature gains his living by roaming at large, foraging about for all sorts of herbaceous plants, roots, insects, etc., and the nearer man can get to natural conditions in this respect the better it is. A clover pasture offers the ideal conditions for profitable swine breeding and should always be available, especially for young and growing stock, as clover contains much nitrogen or "protein," the element of food which builds up the muscular tissues, lean meat, etc. Then exercise is another very important feature which is absolutely necessary to all healthy animal existence, and the same is well provided for when a good sized pasture is allowed the pigs, where they may run and enjoy themselves. Upon an ordinary farm the cost of rearing a pig to the time of fattening should not be of a very considerable amount, as the food consumed is largely what would otherwise be wasted. In the summer the trimmings of market garden crops will afford a variety of nutritious and cooling food. Beet tops, cabbage leaves, corn fodder all are good for hog growing. Experience shows that the hog most desired in the markets and the one that is produced most cheaply is the one that will dress from 200 to 300 pounds when nine or ten months old. Pigs farrowed in March will thus be ready for slaughter early in November, and will have completed their entire growth and development before winter has well begun, and this forms a very important item, since the fattening of hogs in cold weather cannot be economically effected. It takes too much food (or carbon) to keep the bodily temperature at its normal degree. The best article to finish off a hog is undoubotedly good, firm corn or corn meal. This makes plenty of solid white fat pork of best quality and least expense.

Gardening For the Household.

The amount of vegetables that can be raised in a garden plot would seem to depend more upon the care bestowed upon their cultivation than upon the area devoted to them. Vegetables can be raised with more or less success on different soils, but if the garden is upon naturally good land it will be greatly in their favor. Still, by yearly giving proper attention to the preparation of the soil, by underdraining where required and by mulching with a plentiful supply of manure a productive garden can be made at no great cost on almost any spot of ground. The true value of the products when used in the family is rarely known, but were they bought instead the cost, if an account were kept, would be surprising. The garden should contain a judicious selection of varieties and special attention should be given to successive plantings, that there may be a generous supply as long as they are seasonable and desirable. In this a knowledge of the habits of plants, as influenced by changes of temperature, is important. As the season advances and the weather becomes warmer all kinds of vegetables grow faster, or, as some one has expressed it, they seem to overtake one another. Thus while peas planted quite early, at dates a week apart, will make about the same number of days difference in the ripenings of the two plantings, those made a month later, with the same interval between them, under a more favorable temperature, will ripen much closer together. This is often well shown in the replanting missing hills of corn, where the latter planted under the influence of better climatic conditions make a rapid and vigorous growth that has no parallel in the hills of the previous planting.

Keeping Comb Honey.

Do not on any account store honey in a cellar. The dampness causes it to sweat and the capping will break and you have a lot of ruined honey. Our honey-room is in the second story of our house and will hold two tons. It is 6x10 feet and 9 feet high with two doors—one on each side—one opening from the hall, the other opening over the porch. This room has one window. Here we put our honey first, to let it harden, keeping this room light. After exposing it to the light for about two weeks we place it in the honey-room. Never on any account place more than two boxes on top of each other, but place shelves above each other in the order of a library. If little red ants bother the honey place the honey on a bench and put each leg or foot in a pan of water, and my word for it if you keep water in the pans no ants will bother the honey. Our honey-room is as dark as anything can be made to be, writes a bookkeeper in an exchange.

Contagious Pleuro-Pnemonia.

This dread disease shows marked symptoms which cannot be easily misunderstood. Twenty to thirty days after exposure to an infected animal, the cattle have a fever that runs up to 103 degrees to 105 degrees F. early in the attack. The cough is peculiarly thrilling, the nose is protruded and a number of cattle in the herd are similarly affected. The animals refuse to move, and when compelled to do so seem stiff and sore. The hind feet are frequently raised. The patients hang their heads, arch the neck, and have every appearance of very sick animals. As infectious diseases are liable to inflict serious damage upon the country, it is the duty of every one, knowing the existence of such diseases to notify the proper authorities of every well-grounded suspicion, so that the veterinary inspector should promptly verify or disprove the suspicion, and thus prevent the spread of the contagion. This is really practicing the golden rule.

The Poetry of the Farm.

It is no advantage to live in a city where poverty degrades and failure brings despair. The fields are lovelier than paved streets, and the great forests of oaks and elms are more poetic than steeples and chimneys. In the country is the idea of home. There you see the rising and setting sun; you become acquainted with the stars and clouds. The constellations are your friends. You hear the rain on the roof and listen to the rhythmic sighing of the winds. You are thrilled by the resurrection called spring, touched and saddened by autumn—the grace and poetry of death. Every field is a picture, a landscape; every landscape a poem; every flower a tender thought, and every forest a fairy land. In the country you preserve your identity—your personality. There you are an aggregation of atoms, but in the city you are only an atom of an aggregation.—From an Oration by Col. Ingersoll.

Chemicals and Clover.

The farmers of the United States pay out annually over $50,000,000 for fertilizers. Mr. Collingwood, the writer of a work on this subject, says of fertilizers: "Chemical manures have a certain place in American agriculture: Like anything else of real value their use will bring profit, their abuse will bring loss. Chemicals and sod supply every element that is furnished in stable manure. Grass seed and chemicals must go together. Clover and fertilizers, make a grand combination, better understood, more appreciated and used with every year. After a time soil so treated will respond almost as well with green crops plowed under, and thus save the cost of chemical fertilizers, an expense very heavy in the eastern part of our country."

Useful Hints.

It is said that sweet potatoes may be kept by placing in a box a layer of potatoes and a layer of dry sand, alternately, until full.

Coarse light hay thrown over spinach will usually carry it through the winter in open ground, provided water does not stand on the land.

Where a garden is planted as it should be for horse cultivation it is an easy matter to keep it from the weeds. Start early and don't allow them to grow.

If you want good results you must feed the plants or animals. "With what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again" holds true here as other matters.

The best and only way to destroy nutgrass is the following method: Place from 15 to 20 sheep and hogs in proportion in a 24 acre field that is infested with that pest. Also try geese if practicable.

A Discharge of Cannon.

Close to the ear could hardly startle a person of sensitive nerves more than the slamming of a door, the outcry of a child, the rattle of a heavy vehicle over a cobble stone pavement, the wailing of an asthmatic hand organ. Quiet and strengthen supersensitive nerves with Hostetters Stomach Bitters, and you can brave any hubbub with tranquility. Indigestion, a fecund cause of nervousness, is banished by the Bitters. So are malarious, bilious and kidney complaints, debility and rheumatism.

"I think I'll give the country the shake," remarked the malaria as it prepared for business.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

"A year ago this last fall I commenced to feel poorly. Although I was never a very strong woman, I had generally enjoyed good health. But I commenced to fail very rapidly, lost all appetite and ambition, did not take any interest in things, and barely dragged along with my work. During the winter and spring had to have help about my house work. Physicians did not help me and I got more and more discouraged. I suffered from dyspepsia so that I or meat, and at last so that I could not even use butter on my toast. Used to dip the toast in tea and even then it would distress my stomach. In the spring I hired a girl permanently, my health was so poor. She tried to persuade me to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, as a lady for whom she had worked before had been greatly benefited by its use. She continued to urge me, strongly saying 'It would only cost a dollar to try it.'

I Dragged Along

Until August, when I purchased a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla at Mr. Pelch's drug store. In about a week I commenced to feel a little better. Could keep more food on my stomach and grew stronger. I took three bottles, am now perfectly well, have gained 22 pounds, am in excellent health. I owe all this to

THE GREAT HESPER.

TALE OF A BIG DIAMOND.

How an Immense Gem Was Lost, Recovered, and Lost Again.

CHAPTER VII—CONTINUED.

"Good heavens!" I exclaimed, losing my temper; "what notion have you got hold of now? Last night you suspected Sir Edmund—"

"I would suspect any one who has the opportunity to possess himself of such a treasure as you hold. Do you blame the man who protects himself when his life is in danger? That diamond is life to me. What could I do if it were lost? You hold that diamond—my life—in your keeping. You are bound to take every precaution for its safety. You have no right to despise my warning because it does not agree with your reckless trust in humanity."

"Take the diamond into your keeping, if you think it is not safe in mine," I said.

"You make that offer because you know I am powerless to accept it in my blind and helpless condition. How can I keep it against a man like Brace?"

"If you have more faith in my power to keep the diamond why do you accuse me of neglecting its safety?"

"Because you are blind to the danger that exists. God!" he exclaimed, protruding his sightless eyes to the light, and clenching his hands in frenzy, "to think that those who can see will not see?"

"What possible connection can there be," I asked, "between the safety of our diamond and the event of last night?"

"A palpable connection. The event of last night was an abortive attempt to obtain the diamond."

As I heard this, and looked at Ven Hoeck, I almost doubted if he were in his right mind.

"The plot failed," he continued, "because the girl mistook the room."

An incredulous explanation escaped me.

"You shall hear me," he muttered, stretching his arm to the right and left until he encountered mine with his hand, and then clutching it tightly; "you shall see—with my eyes, if not with your own. You have urged that the girl could know nothing of the disposition of the rooms; but she might receive instructions from her father. He went into the wood to give her instructions yesterday. Look at your plan." He handed me the diagram I had drawn at his request. "Brace, having his room at the back of the right block, would naturally tell her that, when she got to the top of the stairs, she was not to pass through the picture gallery, but to go straight to the landing over the stairs she had ascended, open the window in the bay, which would then be on her left hand, and make her way to the oriel facing her. That, according to his calculation, would bring her to your window."

"Certainly."

"But he did not take account of the fact that the door by which the girl enters the house is at the back of the right block, and that the stairs by which she would ascend to the first floor bring her to the landing between Sir Edmund's room and Miss Lascelles'. Thus, though carrying out her father's instructions to the letter, she must inevitably make her attempt upon Miss Lascelles' room, and not upon yours. Look at your plan."

"I follow you perfectly well," I said astonished by the ingenuity of his explanation, which had made a perfectly incredible supposition possible,—nay, for the moment probable.

"Are you convinced?" he asked triumphantly.

"You have yet to explain how Brace thought to obtain the diamond by the means he employed. He would scarcely expect that I should faint with terror."

"Who said he would? Brace calculated upon dealing with a heavy sleeper, not a nervous girl. The tapping is described as soft and regular; it was intended to test whether you were asleep or not. The moment a light appeared the sound ceased,—the girl had gone back to the bay. From the landing she could see when the light was put out, and it was safe to recommence the attack. The candle was lit with some difficulty the second time,—Miss Lascelles possibly stood with her back to the window as she held the vesta. Lola may have detected the first glimmer, and, uncertain or not whether it was safe to continue, turned the blind and looked through. At that moment the wick burned up, and Miss Lascelles, turning, saw the girl's eyes between the laths. The knock was not repeated, for a simple reason,—Lola had discovered her mistake, and retreated. Do you know now the purpose with which Brace has gone to seek the girl to-day?"

I was forced to admit that this explanation was feasible; yet I could not believe that Lola, who seemed sincerely attached to me, would consent to aid in my ruin merely at the instigation of her father, whose authority she habitually disregarded. I said this to Van Hoeck.

"It is because she is attached to you—because she loves you," he replied, with emphasis, that she would readily enter into her father's project to rob you of the diamond. The diamond is her enemy,—it has separated you from her, and placed you side by side with Miss Lascelles, for whom she has manifested a jealous hatred from the very first. What could be more gratifying to her savage disposition than to take away the diamond that has created this difference between you and her, and to reduce you once more to her level? It is the only hope she can have of getting you away from Miss Lascelles, and restoring the former condition of equality upon which your companionship with her rested."

Again I was compelled to admit the force of Van Hoeck's argument.

"But why," I asked, should Brace trust such a perilous undertaking to his daughter?"

"For an obvious reason," he replied. "If you caught her in the act of robbing, you would not raise your hand against her; if you caught him, you would blow his brains out. For her you would find excuse; for him none."

In this there was truth also.

"Talking of, that," he continued, "what arms do you keep about you for defense?"

"None," I replied.

"I thought so. Take this," he said, drawing a long clasp-knife from his breast pocket.

He showed the spring with which the narrow blade opened, and the catch which locked it at the back of the horn handle, and made me promise to use it for my defense, no matter who attacked me. I also promised to close my window, which I habitually kept open at night, and to secure the fastening of that, as well as the door, before going to bed. Finally, he exacted that I should once more inclose the Hesper in the leather case, and strap it to my wrist the last thing at night.

The Judge did not return until dusk, He was fatigued, and his general appearance indicated a pursuit through rough and thorny ways.

"I hev seen the Kid," he said, "but she would not listen to reason; and, not bein' afeered of spiling her clothes, she nat'rally got the best of the argument, and played it low down on her father."

He advocated starving her into better behavior and would have had the door closed to cut off her communication with the dairy; but Miss Lascelles would not listen to this; she would not yield to fear, and declined to change her room or alter her ordinary habitudes.

We separated a little before eleven. The night was close and stuffy. I had no inclination to go to bed, especially as I had given Van Hoeck my word to close the window beforehand.

There was a reading-lamp in my room. I lit it, put out the candle, and seated myself in a comfortable chair with a book. Not a sound was to be heard after the clock struck. I read on, without moving from my chair, until past twelve. From time to time I had taken my eyes from the book and listened intently,—not in anticipation of hearing the mysterious tapping at my window, but in apprehension of its being repeated upon Edith's—and, as the last stroke of midnight reverberated through the still night, I closed my book and listened again. The silence without was so complete that the burning of the oil in the lamp at my side was distinctly audible.

At that moment I heard a board creak. It was so slight a sound that, had my attention been fixed upon the book, I should not have noticed it. I could not tell where it came from; I was not sure that it was not from the floor under my foot, as I changed my position. Instinctively I looked toward the window. I could see nothing beyond the circle of light reflected by the lamp shade. It was too absurd to take the lamp to the window,—there was no board there to creak. I waited some minutes, and, there being no repetition of the sound, I reopened my book; but I paused with my finger on the page to listen once more. A shuddering sigh, like that of a child who is crying itself to sleep, reached my ear.

I went to the window, drew up the blind softly, and looked out; for the sound had seemed to come from a distance, and I thought it might be the flutter of leaves in a breeze. But the night was unchanged,—heavy and still, the moon obscured, and a thin gray veil of mist hanging over the lawn, as Edith had seen it the night before. I opened the door noiselessly. All was dark. I could see only the mullion of the bay standing out vaguely against the grayness. I listened. At night heavy curtains were drawn across the head of the corridor, shutting it off from the passage upon which it abutted at right angles; nevertheless, I could hear the stertorous breathing of the Judge or Van Hoeck from the rooms beyond. I was sure that the sound I had heard was not imaginary, and determined, if possible to discover the cause. I went back to the table and fetched the lamp.

I had returned to where I stood by the door, when my eyes fell upon something lying at the threshold. Another step, and I should have put my foot upon it.

In steadying the shade, my left hand screened the light; as I withdrew it, I saw that the object at my feet was Lola!

She had curled herself upon the mat within the embrasure of the door. Her face was toward me, and pillowed upon her folded hands. She was asleep, yet her long, black lashes were wet, and clung to her cheek with an undried tear.

"Even Van Hoeck, if he could see you now, poor child," I said to myself, "could not think ill of you."

I would not awake her; I withdrew the light until she was in shadow, placed it on the table, fetched my book, and seated myself where I could read and yet watch the sleeper. As I did this, the clock in the belfry chimed the half-hour; I looked at my watch, and saw that it was half-past twelve.

I could not fix my attention upon the book for some time, my mind being occupied with conjectures to account for Lola's presence. It fitted in with Van Hoeck's theory and warning in some respects, yet—possibly because my judgment was biased by sentiment—I could not believe she had come there with any sinister intention. I was rather disposed to think that she had found solitude no longer bearable, and had sought this resting-place to be near the only friend she knew.

As I pondered, my eyes grew accustomed to the gloom, and I could see dimly the girl's face, her arms scarcely distinguishable against her dusky camisole, and the darker mass of her red petticoat. She did not move. If she had evaded her father, it is possible that she had fatigued herself as well as him. My heart was stirred with pity, and I resolved that when she awoke I would try, if she would listen to me, to reason her out of her savage isolation, and induce her to accept the kindness that Edith longed to bestow upon her. I would not purposely awake her, for in sleep there was the relative happiness of forgetfulness.

It was past one when I again began to read. From time to time I looked away from the page and assured myself that she was still sleeping. And so I sat watching and reading until past four o'clock, when the light began to fail, my eyes grew heavy, and unconsciously I fell asleep. I was awakened by my book falling from my hands to the floor. The lamp was yet alight, but burning so dimly that, looking toward the door, I could see nothing. I carried the lamp that way. Lola was gone.

* * * * * * * *

When we met at breakfast, Edith was in her customary bright and cheerful mood. Reassured by her appearance, Sir Edmund said smiling:

"Well, my dear, has there been any recurrence of strange sounds and spectral sights during the night?"

"Yes," she answered; "but they did not frighten me, for I knew it was only poor Lola."

"Lola!" I exclaimed.

"I had left a light burning," she said; "the blinds were turned downward, and the light shone upon them; the tapping woke me. It was just the same sound that I heard before. Whilst I was looking at the blind before the open window, the tapping stopped, and I saw a finger come down between the third and fourth laths from the bottom, and turn the third; after that the finger slid in between the next two, and turned the second. Then I saw her two lustrous black eyes looking through. Almost immediately afterward they disappeared. 'Don't be afraid, Lola,' I said, in a low voice; for I feared, if she were frightened, she might slip from that terribly narrow ledge. I waited a few minutes, to give her time to get back to the bay, if she intended to, and then I drew up the blind and looked out. There was no one there, and the window in the bay was as we left it last night—closed."

"Are you sure it was Lola?" I asked.

"Yes, they were her eyes."

"Do you know what time it was when you saw her?" I asked.

"I can be sure of that, for taking my watch from the stand it fell, breaking the glass and stopping the hands, and very soon after that I heard the clock strike."

She showed me the watch; the minute-hand was so bent that it could not pass the hour-hand; when I lifted it, the movement recommenced, proving that the spring had not run down.

The hour marked by the hands was five minutes to one.

"At five minutes to one Lola was sleeping at my door." I said.

CHAPTER VIII.

Edith could not say whether the lath she had seen turned were open when she went to the window, and there were no means of confirming the fact afterward, because in pulling up the blind they would, if open, be returned to their former position. In face of my evidence, she was firmly convinced that what she had seen and heard was an extraordinary illusion of the senses, parallel to that which furnishes the sole excuse for a tolerably widespread belief in supernatural appearances. She was ashamed of the feebleness of mind which her experiences seemed to imply, and, resolved to overcome the weakness, resisted all her father's persuasions to change those conditions under which she had passed the last two nights.

Van Hoeck alone refused to believe in Edith's hallucination.

"One has only to hear Miss Lascelles speak to discredit a notion of that kind," he said; "she has every sign of mental vigor and physical strength, and to accuse such a girl of that kind of morbid insanity called hallucination, is just as creditable to your understanding as to believe in the simplicity and honesty of a vagabond Californian card-sharper, and the half-breed wench he chooses to call his daughter. TO BE CONTINUED.

LOVE-MAKING BY TELEGRAPH.

The Momentous Question That a Message Answered Not Long Ago.

Said a Western Union telegraph operator the other day: "You wouldn't think that spoony lovers would resort to such public means of correspondence as the telegraph for the transmission of their sweet little messages of love and devotion, would you? But they do, just the same.

"Often a certain young man of whom I know if he does not regularly recieve a letter from the future source of his joy and happiness rushes here with a crestfallen countenance and files a message like this:

"My dear, why did you not answer my last letter? Yours devotedly, ———

"Perhaps you don't believe that such a message as this was ever sent, but I would show some of them to you if it wasn't against the rules. We fellows on the wire enjoyed quite an amusing incident not long ago, in which 'Sophia' revealed 'John's' brilliant scheme of popping the question by wire. We surmised that this brace of lovers had been conducting a correspondence for some time, which the artful 'John' culminated with the following dispatch that was evidently intended to draw forth an answer to an entirely different question:

"Sophia: Did you receive my last letter? "JOHN.

"Sophia, in her ecstatic delight, evidently understood the querry in a different sense from that which the ordinary reader of the epistle would, and proceeding to the telegraph office left the following:

"John: Yes. How about next Christmas? SOPHIA."

Hard To Get At.

Inquisitive city people in the country sometimes find small satisfaction in catechizing little country boys about their names and affairs. A "summer boarder" once said to a small boy dressed in a broad straw hat, a gingham waist, long trousers and bare feet:

"Hello, little boy! What is your name?"

"Same as pa's," said the boy.

"What's your pa's name?"

"Same as mine."

"I mean, what do they call you when they call you to breakfast?"

"They don't nuvver call me to breakfust."

"Why don't they?"

"'Cause I alluz git there the fust one!"

A Regular Freak.

"Can't you tell, me, sir, where I might find a situation?" asked a man of a Chicago citizen.

"I am a stranger here, but I am a good worker."

"What at?" was the reply.

"Oh, anything at all; I am not afraid to work."

"Got any recommendations?"

"Well, no, but I am industrious; I am honest; I go to church regularly; I don't drink; I don't smoke; I don't lie; I have never been divorced."

"Ah, I see; just apply around the corner at the dime museum."

ACROSS THE WASTES.

The sullen day drags on, my dear,
 The breeze blows cold,
And like a weary child who strays
 From home and fold,
So like a weary wandering child,
 'Neath lowering sky,
I cower to feel the chilly blast
 That rushes by.

Bereft of single gleam of sun
 Before my face;
All restless, all forlorn, I change
 From place to place.
Could I but have you by, my dear,
 To clasp your hand;
To hear you speak my pains would cease,
 My woes disband.

But thick and faster fall the storm,
 The darkness grows,
Like foam on tossing wave I float:
 The end who knows?
And mid the tumult and the dread,
 And darkness, too,
Across the barren wastes, my dear,
 I long for you!

—ARTHUR S. KIMBALL, in Chicago Inter Ocean.

THE DEATH OF THE DOLL.

TWENTY-three years ago I was at the village of Bocage, in Central France. In one of the little cottages of the village, into which hunger had accidentally driven me, this story is not an invention, it actually occurred as I relate it—a little girl of perhaps 7 years of age was dying.

She was it seems the child of a Parisian but a Parisian who was born and grew to young womanhood at Bocage.

One morning in May a carriage stopped before the door of Mother Gerard, who now took care of a vineyard but in her younger days had been a nurse for little children.

A young woman alighted from the carriage followed by a maid and a little girl, delicate and feeble, but very pretty nevertheless.

"Mother Gerard," said the young woman to the peasant, "I have brought my little girl to you; she needs country air and goat's milk. Will you keep her for a few months?"

The husband of Mother Gerard made an impatient movement, but before he could speak the young woman said, "I will pay you a thousand francs."

"A thousand francs," said the man; "she is very sick, and the doctor will have to be paid."

"Doctor or no doctor," said Mother Gerard brusquely, "I will take care of your child, Nini; I will care for her as tenderly as I did for you, my nursling."

"I am sure of it."

"Kiss me, little one," continued the good woman, taking the child in her arms.

The little girl did not want to be urged, but kissed her affectionately.

"You will pay in advance?" said the man.

"Here are the thousand francs; give me a receipt."

The young mother then brought from the carriage the child's clothing daintily arranged in a small trunk.

The maid brought a large paper box, in which lay a beautiful doll that could say "Mamma!" when one pressed a spring.

The little girl had been perfectly silent during this time, but the great tears were rolling down her thin, white cheeks.

When the mother noticed that the child was crying she made an impatient gesture, which she quickly suppressed, but not before Mother Gerard saw it. The little girl also saw her mother's displeasure, and stretched toward her the little, emaciated hands.

It was a touching appeal, a mute caress, a silent prayer, but irresistible in its eloquence. The maid turned away her head to conceal her tears. The mother was greatly moved, and taking the child in her arms kissed her again and again.

"My dear Nini, do not cry, do not cry any more. I shall come back for you very soon."

"Will you surely come?" said the child between her sobs, and covering her mother's face with kisses; "surely, surely," she added, clasping her little hands as she did when she said her prayers.

Mother Gerard looked sharply at her former foster child's face who turned her head away with a flushed face.

"Will you really come back for her, Nini?" she said in a low tone.

"Certainly."

"Do not be too long about it," Mother Gerard said significantly.

"Truly, mamma, you will return?"

"Surely, yes, but do not be impatient. Good-by; take good care of dolly. Listen how beautifully it says 'mamma!'" and the mother made the doll repeat many times its one word, mamma! The child was silent.

"She will be your little girl, and you will love her very much!"

"Oh, yes," said the child with a deep sigh, almost a sob, and she pressed the doll to her heart. The doll murmured "mamma."

She really loved the little inanimate thing that called her "mamma!" She spent hours in looking at it, in rocking it, and in talking to it in a low tone, at the same time crying for her own mamma.

"Do not fear, Nini"—she had named it for herself. "I will never leave you, never! I am your own mamma, do you hear? Your real mamma!" And she preesed the spring and the doll repeated "Mamma!"

Then Nini took it in her arms and hugged it tightly, as if she feared that some one would take it from her.

The consumption was slowly but surely doing its deadly work. Her eyes became more and more brilliant, the bones of her cheeks more and more prominent. A little dry cough constantly shook the narrow, hollow chest, and her voice became feebler day by day. They wrote to her mother, but received no response.

There is nothing, I think, more pitiful than to witness the slow fading out of a little life, which nothing can arrest, neither science, nor love, nor prayers. This martyrdom of infancy inflicts upon those who must witness it the keenest torture.

Mother Gerard had learned to love this poor victim of filial affection, for Nini was dying of grief—because she was separated from her mother—much more than of disease, and Mother Gerard knowing this nursed her with the utmost tenderness. Nini came to her in May, and it was now October.

The poor child, feeling that she was no longer a daughter tried to console herself by imagining that she was the mother of her doll. She lavished upon it all the love she formerly had for her mother. She was unwilling to be separated from it even at night, and the poor little brain had conceived a singular idea—it was that she was not sick, but that it was the doll, her "dear Nini."

"She has coughed all night," she would say to Mother Gerard when she had passed a restless night herself. "You suffer my dear Nini, but I will cure you. We will cure her, nurse, will we not? How feeble her voice is!" she would add listening to the weak sound which the doll made, because the pressure upon the spring grew weaker as the little hands grew thinner.

Hour by hour she would tell her own sufferings, but always attributing them to the doll. At times she would yield to an indefinite despair. she did not know what death meant, but she would cry out with indescribable anguish: "No, I do not want to die, even to go to heaven."

She never spoke of her mother to her nurse; but sometimes, when she thought herself alone, they would hear her murmur to her doll: "If mamma would come back Nini would be well."

In the village the arrival of the talking doll had produced a great sensation. All the children wished to see it, and Sunday most of the little girls came to admire the marvelous toy.

To go to see the little girl from Paris and hear her doll talk had become a sort of fete, and then Nini was so sweet, so caressing to all who showed friendship for her or who loved her doll that she had become the idol of the whole village.

The vicar came to relate to her beautiful stories of heaven, where there lived a mamma marvelously beautiful and adorably good.

The good sister who had charge of the village school brought her little images of saints and angels.

One of Nini's greatest pleasures was to see all little friends come with their dolls—dolls of wood, of cardboard, of rags; but she thought them all charming, and talked to them in the most delightful manner, and as if they could understand her, and replied to her.

The 15th of August was the doll's birthday, and all the little girls came with their dolls and brought the doll Nini a bouquet and one for the real Nini. What a merry day it was for them all!

The bed was covered with flowers, and the doll was so happy that she said again and again, "Mamma!"

Alas! the care of Mother Gerard, the love and carresses of all, the healthful air of the country had been able only to prolong the days of the little sufferer, but all together were not able to cure her.

They began to count the weeks, then the days that she could be with them.

"She is very ill, mamma's Nini," she said, caressing the doll. "She suffers greatly there," she said, touching the doll's chest.

One evening she sat up suddenly, seized her doll in both arms, looked at it with yearning, shining eyes, and tried to press the spring. The sound came feebly and weakly articulated, "Mamma!"

The child repeated "Mamma" with a voice still more feeble, and fell back on her pillow, but still clasping her doll.

She was dead.

And singular as it may seem, the spring in the doll was broken; the doll, too, was dead!

During all the next day the two Ninis, the two little dead bodies, were left with uncovered faces, surrounded with the last flowers of autumn, white and yellow, mingled with branches of red leaves.

When they dressed little Nini for the last time they found they would have to use much force to take the doll from her grasp. Mother Gerard would not permit it. She kissed the child once more, and, without trying to account for the strange impulse, kissed the doll also. Both were put into the coffin with all that belonged to them—dresses and bonnets, little shoes and stockings, and playthings of all sorts.

Then upon the bier, carried by the strong little girls of the village—alas! it was not very heavy—they put all the flowers they could find; and it was the strangest funeral that one could imagine. All the little girls of the school marched behind, two by two, holding their dolls; and on the way they were joined by others and each new arrival had her doll. Those who had two dolls gave one to those who had none. All the dolls were dressed in their finest clothes.

When they arrived at the cemetery the children formed a circle around the grave, with their dolls in their arms, and listened to the last prayer for poor Nini. Among the children who had come to bid a last farewell to their little friend and the talking-doll—for they regretted the wonderful doll quite as much as they did Nini—there was one who had been a particular favorite of the little invalid.

It was a sickly little cripple, nearly her own age, with a sorrowful, pale face. She almost adored the doll, and when Nini permitted her to rock it she was perfectly happy. She, like the others, had a doll which she loved devotedly.

No one can know what thought passed through that little brain, but at the moment that the sexton threw the first spadeful of earth upon the coffin she kissed her doll convulsively and threw it into the grave, saying, "Go with Nini!"

This impulsive act so impressed the other children that one after another followed her example.

It was a touching spectacle.

"Go with Nini," each little one repeated in letting her doll fall into the grave.

Only one drew back unable to make the sacrifice. She was 5 years old, perhaps, the daughter of a poor woman. Her doll was of cardboard, old, dirty and worn, and had lost one arm. She clasped it in her arms and sobbingly said: "No, not in the hole! not in the hole, my Nini! She would be cold!"

The return to the village was, perhaps, sadder than the walk to the grave.

The next day the vicar went to Neville and brought back with him fifteen new dolls and gave them to the children in the name of the two Ninis.

In this village for many years after a doll was called a Nini in remembrance of the one which was buried—Translated from the French.

PRESIDENTIAL DEATHS.

How the Lives of Our Chief Executives Were Terminated.

George Washington—His death was the result of a severe cold contracted while riding around his farm in the rain and sleet storm Dec. 10, 1799. The cold increased and was followed by a chill, which brought on acute laryngitis. His death occurred Dec. 14, 1799. He was sixty-eight years of age.

John Adams—He died from old age, having reached his ninety-first milestone. Though active mentally, he was nearly blind and unable to hold a pen steadily enough to write. He passed away without pain July 4, 1826.

Thomas Jefferson—He died at the age of 83, a few hours before Adams, July, 4, 1826. His desease was chronic diarrhea, superinduced by old age, and his physicians said, too the free use of the waters of the White Sulphur springs.

James Madison—He too died of old age, and peacefully, June 28, 1833. His faculties were undimmed to the last. He was 85.

James Monroe—At the time of his death, which occurred in the seventy-third year of his age, July 4, 1831, it was ansigned to no other cause than enfeebled health.

James K. Polk—In the spring of 1849 he was stricken with a slight attack of cholera while on a boat going up the Mississippi river. Though temporarily relieved, he had a relapse on his return home and died June 15, 1849, aged 54 years.

John Quincy Adams—He was stricken with paralysis Feb. 21, 1848, while addressing the speaker of the house of representatives, being at the time a member of congress. He died in the rotunda of the capitol. He was 81 years of age.

Andrew Jackson—He died June 8, 1845, 78 years old. He suffered from consumption, and finally dropsy, which made its appearance about six months before his death.

Martin Van Buren—He died July, 24, 1862, from a violent attack of asthma, followed by catarrhal affections of the throat and lungs. He was 80 years of age.

William Henry Harrison.—The cause of his death was pleurisy, the result of a cold which he caught on the day of his inauguration. This was accompanied with severe diarrhea, which would not yield to medical treatment. His death occurred April 4, 1841, a month after his inauguration. He was 68 years of age.

John Tyler—He died Jan. 17, 1862, at the age of 72. I have been unable to ascertain the cause of his death.

Zachary Taylor—He was the second president to die in office. He is said to have partaken immoderately of ice-water and iced milk and then later of a large quantity of cherries. The result was an attack of cholera morbus. Another authority attributes his death to a severe cold. The former seems the more likely. He was 66 years old.

Millard Fillmore—He died from a stroke of paralysis March 8, 1874; in his seventy-fourth year.

Franklin Pierce—His death was due to abdominal dropsy and occurred Oct. 8, 1869, in the sixty-fifth year of his age.

James Buchanan—His death occurred June 1, 1868, and was caused by rheumatic gout. He was 77 years of age.

Abraham Lincoln—He was shot by J. Wilkes Booth at Fords theater, Washingtan, D. C., April 16, 1865, and died the following day, aged 56.

Andrew Johnson—He died of a stroke of paralysis, July 31, 1865, aged 67.

The deaths of Grant, Garfield, and Arthur are recent enough to be remembered by all.—American Notes and Queries.

THE BLACK-PATCH FAD.

History of the Female Device That Originated in the Time of Edward VI.

How any fashion so ridiculous as sticking black plaster on the face originated is a mystery which has puzzled historians of costumes and customs from the beginning of the, notion, which dates back to the court of Edward VI., where, it is recorded, a foreign lady wore such a patch to cover a small wen on her neck; and in one of Bulwer's novels, "Artificial Changeling," which appeared just before the restoration, we read of one of her heroines: "Her patches were of every cut, for pimples and for scars." So, you see, they are intended to represent the lesser of two evils, to cover up something worse, but there is one thing they positively will not cover and that is the evident desire on the part of the wearer to attract attention to her face. It certainly is the emblem of extreme gayety, to draw it mildly, says the Minneapolis Tribune. Although the English copied after the "foreign" lady, yet it was not original with them, since we read of the fashion being in vogue among the Roman dames in the degenerate days, mark you. Have we reached a corresponding state of degeneracy? Then why put out the sign? Why not blacken the teeth, also, as the Dyaks do, or file them into saw-teeth, as a great many Africans do, or tattoo, as the manner of the Polynesians? This last would be much more artistic, for there would be greater scope for artistic display than in the tawdry patching of two centuries. But why talk? There is no instance in history of either fashion. Devotees of novelty usually indulge a practice until tired of it, regardless of talk, and then drop it as quickly as they had taken it up. We who feel strongly upon this fad of black patches can only pray that the notion may not survive as long with us at it did in England.

Absolutely Accurate.

When Lord Aberdeen was dying, a party of gentlemen were travelling up to town in the train; among them was Delane of the London Times, who took a printed slip out of his pocket, and read portions of it. It was the obituary notice. All criticised it and found various faults. One said it did not deal fairly with him. "All I can say is," said the editor, "that he has seen it himself!"—The Gentleman's Magazine.

HERE IS A BEAR STORY.

A Trapped Brute Assisted by Another Bear in Carrying off the Trap.

Not long ago a cow died in the vicinity of the Guinn ranch, near the head of Goose creek, South of Wagon-Wheel gap, says the San Juan Prospector. It soon became apparent to William Guinn, owner of the ranch, that the carcass of the cow was being visited by a bear of very large dimensions, and, in company with Dell McClelland, Mr. Guinn decided to "sit up with" the bear and endeavor to get a shot at it by night. This was done, but owing to darkness the bear was not killed by shots fired. As the next resort a large bear-trap, weighing about seventy-five pounds, was procured and set near the dead "critter," and the trappers went to bed laughing at the trick they had played on the bear. The trap was chained to a pole eighteen feet long and eight inches through at the large end. In the morning an examination of the premises about the dead cow showed plainly that the bear and a cub had been there during the night. There was a large track, eighteen inches long and six or seven inches wide, and a small track, evidently made by a cub. The trap, however, was gone, and with it the eighteen-foot pole, and the disturbed condition of the ground showed conclusively that the bear had been caught in the trap. The trail, however, away from the scene was only the trail of two bears—there was not a mark of dragging either trap or pole. Mr. Guinn took up the trial, which he followed eight miles without coming upon the bears, trap, or pole. At the camp of Tom Carey, seven miles away, that gentleman told how in the night he had been awakened by a sound as of something walking, with an occasional pause and heavy fall on the ground, as though something had been dropped. Having no gun Mr. Carey set up in his tent the balance of the night and endeavored to keep warm by poking wood into a sheet-iron stove. The trail was followed a mile or so further and then lost. In one place the bears had passed through a heavy quaking aspen thicket and had literally mowed a path through the saplings, showing that the trap and pole were being taken along. The natural inference is that the bear was caught in the trap and had picked up the same, with the pole, and started for the hills. The bear is an old offender in these parts, and Mr. Guinn hopes to find it yet.

Later—A man just in from the head of the San Juan reports that he passed the bears on the Pagosa road, beyond Summitville, jogging contentedly along, each carrying one end of the pole, while the old bear was caught in the trap by the right front foot.

Scotland and the Thistle.

The thistle was selected as the national emblem of Scotland in the year 1010. It was during the reign of Malcolm I. that a notable invasion of the country was made by the Danes. They came in thousands, and, landing on the coast, swarmed over the inhabited districts like locusts, destroying, burning and plundering wherever they went. For safety the inhabitants fled to the castles and fortified towns, and among the most notable of the fortresses of Aberdeenshire was Staine's Castle, where were collected a large number of people of the neighborhood. The Danes projected a surprise. Approaching the castle in the darkness, they planned to scale its walls, and laid aside their shoes that the greater secrecy might be observed when drawing near to the fortifications. The surprise might have been successful had it not been for the fact that, on descending into the dry moat, they found, to their great discomfiture and mortification, it was filled with thistles, by which their feet was so severely pricked that several made an outcry, which aroused the defenders of the castle and brought them to the wall in time to repel the onset. Regarding their good fortune in repelling the Danes as due to the thistles, these plants were immediately placed in the arms of Scotland and adopted as the emblem of the country.

Hypnotized by a Snake.

A remarkable snake story was told by a resident of Clarion county recently, and but for the unimpeachable character of the narrator would sound like a "snake story." He stated that a farmer who lived near Clarion while in a field was attacked by a snake fully ten feet in length. The reptile coiled itself around the farmer's waist and glared fixedly in his face evidently trying to charm him. Shaking off the dizzy feeling caused by the snake's hypnotic gaze, the farmer cut it to pieces with the scythe and then, exhausted with fright and overexertion, sank to the ground.

The head of the snake, with a portion of the body, lay near him and the peculiar color caused him to pick it up and he found it was an albino blacksnake. The peculiar formation of the snake's eyes caused him to examine them closely and he could hardly believe the evidence of his senses when he discovered a perfect reproduction of his face photographed in the center of the eye. He brought the snake back to town, where it was photographed and preserved in alcohol. The negative taken by the photographer shows the snake's eye perfectly with the farmer's face showing as clearly as if also taken with a camera. —Oil City Derrick.

A Joke on Her Majesty.

Few people are perhaps aware how thoroughly the queen enjoys a joke. A gentleman-in-waiting, whom let us call Mr. A——, distinguished for his imitative powers and dramatic talent, is not infrequently called upon to trip the light fantastic toe, figuratively speaking when in attendance at Windsor and Balmoral.

One day the great lady, looking with a certain austerity straight into the face of Mr. A——, demanded:

"Now, Mr. A——, I am perfectly well aware that when my back is turned you imitate me. I wish to see you do it now, this minute!"

Poor Mr. A—— fell straightway into the royal trap, crimsoned, faltered, utterly lost his countenance.

"Ah!" exclaimed the queen, "I see I was right! You ought to be ashamed of yourself," and then added, laughing as heartily as any school girl, "but don't do it again."

TURKEY ON TOAST

Lord Salisbury, the English Premier, Sits Down to a Diplomatic Feast.

He Catches the Sultan in a Little Trick and Calls Him Down.

LONDON, April 9.—Lord Salisbury has scored a victory in the diplomatic contest with France and Russia over the firman of investiture of the khedive of Egypt. The position has for a week past harassed and perplexed the foreign office perhaps more than even the Bering sea question ever did.

The sultan stole a march upon English diplomacy in sending a firman so phrased as to exclude from the Egyptian frontier the whole Sinai peninsula and part of the Red sea littoral, which were ceded to Ismael Pasha and have been held by Egypt for half a century. Before the firman was drafted the English ambassador at Constantinople, alive to the possibility of some action of this sort, demanded that the document should not introduce any question concerning the frontier, and received assurances that the firman would not touch the khedive's rights. When the sultan's envoy, Eyoub Pasha, arrived at Cairo, the British minister, Sir Evelyn Baring, suspecting some duplicity, asked for a copy of the document, and when Eyoub Pasha refused to communicate the contents of the firman till after investiture, Minister Baring advised the khedive not to proceed with the ceremony. Eyoub Pasha then disclosed the substance of the firman, the nature of which had been known to and before the missive left Constantinople. The consuls-generals at Cairo at once arranged themselves on two sides, the Italian and Austrian representatives meeting at the English embssy, and the French and Russian diplomats at the residence of the Turkish plenipotentiary.

APPROVED BY FRANCE AND RUSSIA

The Italian squadron, which was about to leave Alexandria, got orders to stay, and the officers on leave were recalled to their ships, including the admiral, who was junketing at Cairo. Yesterday the British and Italian ambassadors at Constantinople sent a joint note to the grand vizier, saying that the firman must be altered or Eyoub Pasha recalled. There seems to have been no mistaking the emphatic and peremptory character of the note, and there was an immediate result. A telegram was received by the khedive from the sultan to-day saying that the firman would be modified, omitting the definition of the frontier. It transpires that Eyoub Pasha had two documents of investitures, one setting off a portion of Egypt and the other consonant with Lord Salisbury's views. To-night's Cairo dispatches state that the settlement has excited the greatest satisfaction there. The foreign office authorities are reticent, except that they confirm the statement that the difficulty is on the point of solution, although the day for the investitures of the khedive is not fixed.

Many German Settlers.

GRAND FORKS, N. D., Special Telegram, April 9.—Forty families of German settlers from Indiana passed through Grand Forks on the Great Northern to-day. They will locate at Cando, Towner county, and will raise barley for the Starbuck, Dwiggins & Co. barley syndicate of Chicago. Incoming trains on the Great Northern are crowded by settlers, many of whom are locating in the surrounding towns, while others are going to Nelson, Towner, Cavalier and Rollette counties, where there is still plenty of rich government land to homestead.

Best Lands Secured for Indians.

KINGFISHER, O. T., April 9.—The publication of maps showing Indian allotments has cause consternation and many home-seekers are discouraged and returning home. They find the redskins have captured the most valuable lands, and feel that what is left is not worth contending for. But others will come to fill the places of the dissatisfied ones, and the day of opening, now predicted to be April 22, will find people enough here to take all the valuable homes.

The Jury Could Not Agree.

DICKINSON, N. D., Special Telegram, April 9.—The celebrated school case of John D. Campbell vs. Dickinson School Board, has been on trial here for two days. The jury was out sixteen hours, but could not agree and were dismissed. The case is put over to the next term. Campbell was discharged as principal of schools in January, and now seeks to recover damage on his contract.

A Keeley Institute Sued.

DES MOINES, April 9.—The heirs of Dr. Preston B. Plumb, who, while deranged, jumped from a window of the Des Moines Keeley institute and was killed, have sued the institute for $50,000. Dr. Plumb had been a patient, but the institute folks claim he was only a visitor at the time of the accident.

Driving Impossible.

FARGO, N. D., April 9.—The weather here is now cold and clear. The mud has been very deep, and the top is now frozen. This makes it impossible to drive a horse through the streets. Liverymen, expressmen, butchers and bakers are using wheelbarrows and hand carts to deliver their goods.

Investigating the Purchase.

ASHLAND, Wis., Special Telegram, April 9.—The grand jury to-day took up the matter of the purchasing of a safe from Gogebic county, Mich.—a transaction in which Chairman Besse and County Clerk Fennelly are said to have been deeply interested.

Saloonkeeper Heavily Fined.

FARGO, N. D., Special Telegram, April 9.—Judge McConnell to-day sentenced A. C. Cantieny to ninety days in jail, and to pay a fine of $200, $50 attorney's fees and the costs of prosecution for the illegal sale of liquor.

State Fair at Grand Forks.

GRAND FORKS, N. D., Special Telegram, April 9.—The state board of agriculture met here to-day and decided to hold the state fair in this city this fall, conditional upon citizens contributing $3,000. All but $200 has been subscribed, and there is now no question but the balance will be raised. No state fair was held last year because the state legislature failed to make any appropriation. The state world's fair board will co-operate and provide for devoting a portion of the world's fair fund to an exhibit of imperishable articles at the state fair, to be afterward exhibited at the world's fair.

Justice Bradley's Successor.

LANCASTER, Pa., Special—It can be stated on high authority that President Harrison has practically decided to nominate J. Hay Brown of this city for the seat on the supreme court of the United States made vacant by the death of Justice Bradley. Mr. Brown was warmly endorsed by the Pennsylvania senators and Congressman Brosius. Mr. Brown has for many years had the largest practice at the local bar, and exercised a large influence in Republican circles. He is the senior member of the law firm of Brown & Hensel, Attorney General Hensel being the junior partner.

THE COUNT TALKS,

But Refuses to Tell Why Miss Fleischmann Rejected Him.

CHICAGO, April 9.—Count Eugene Logithetti confirmed to-day a report that his engagement to Miss Babette Fleischmann, the beautiful daughter of the great yeast maker, had been broken. He is the manager of her father's business and establishment in this city. When asked to-day about the statement that the reason for his rejection was his refusal to become an American citizen, the count replied: "That story is ridiculous. I do not wish to say why we are not to be married. That is a personal matter between Miss Fleischmann and myself. I am a true gentleman, and under no circumstances will I tell the reasons Miss Fleischmann gave for calling our engagement off. I am yet an intimate friend of the Fleischmann family, and will continue to be. Although my friend, Mr. A. Quachert, and I are about to engage in other business in this city, I will retain my position as manager of this concern."

WORLD'S FAIR OFFICERS.

President Baker Re-Elected and Solicitor General Butterworth Retires.

CHICAGO, April 9.—William T. Baker has been re-elected president of the world's fair directory. This was done at the election of officers to-night. The retiring first vice president, Thomas B. Bryan, was elected commissioner at large at a salary of $5,000 per year. His work will be to visit foreign countries in the fair's interest. Solicitor General Butterworth retires and the office of solicitor general has been abolished. The old treasurer and auditor, Messrs. Zeeberger and Ackerman were re-elected to those positions. Mr. Edmonds, President Baker's former private secretary was chosen secretary, and Mr. Carlisle, a son of Senator Carlisle, was elected attorney. Before adjournment the commission reduced the president's salary from $12,000 to $8,000 per year. The Dockery committee investigating the status of the world's fair for the information of congress finished its labors this afternoon. To-night the members left for Washington.

A Good Selection.

HURON, S. D., Special Telegram, April 9.—The commission of Wilford M. Smith of Plankinton was forwarded to him from this city Friday making him a member of the South Dakota board of railroad commissioners, vice Frank P. Phillips, resigned. This appointment creates surprise, because Smith was recommended for the place by the governor at the late session of the legislature but failed of confirmation. He represented Aurora county in the first legislature as senator. He is attorney for the Farmers' Mutual Protective association and an influential citizen of that county. He is well known over the state, particularly among old soldiers, having served in the Union army four years in an Ohio regiment. There is no question as to his fitness for the position.

It Cost a Fortune.

NEW YORK, April 9.—A morning paper has an Albany dispatch dealing with Gov. Flower and his official habits, in which occurs this: "When he was nominated for governor, Mr. Flower gave as his election states shows $5,000 for campaign expenses. Mrs. Schley sent to the Democratic executive committee—it is said to Daniel Griffin, its chairman—a blank check on her bankers with directions to fill it out for any amount that might be necessary to serve Mr. Flower's candidacy. The check came back filled out for $240,000, and this enormous sum was cheerfully paid." Mrs. Schley is a sister-in-law to Gov. Flower. She is said to be worth $7,000,000 or more.

Foul Play Feared.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis., Special Telegram, April 9.—Nine days ago Angus McDonald left this city to watch camp for Hugh McPhee on the Thornapple river. Last evening it was discovered that McDonald never reached the camp. Foul play is feared. A party left this city to-day in search of McDonald.

To Patrol Bering Sea.

WASHINGTON, April 9.—Several important naval orders were issued to-day. The Yorktown and Adams at San Francisco, were ordered to proceed at once to Port Townsend and report arrival. The Charleston and Baltimore also at San Francisco were ordered to proceed to Astoria, Or., to participate in the Columbia river centennial celebration May 12. It is understood that the four vessels named will be employed in patrolling the waters of Bering sea when the season opens. The Mohican, now at Port Orchard, will probably be used for similar duty.

A MOTHER

"There is no one like a mother,"
Said little Jack to me;
"If you are in a scrape at school
Mother will get you free.

"If father's angry with you
And scolds the livelong day;
Just go and coax your mother
And she'll conquer him for you.

"When a fellow's wild at college
And will not keep the rules,
And father's down upon him
Why mother will get you through."

The years have passed since all those scrapes,
And now I am a man;
But in those years of uphill work
Mother's was the helping hand.

THE TEST OF MERIT.

BY VERNON S. POMEROY.

"Your entreaties are useless, sir; you have known me for ten years, and I venture to say that you have never known me to alter my mind, after having once settled upon a thing."

So spoke Gerald Alward, the millionaire, to young Arthur Crossman who protested:

"But as I love Minnie, and she loves me, and I am young, strong and industrious, it does not seem reasonable that you should require me to come to you loaded with money before you will consent to our marriage."

"I do not require that you come to me loaded with money; but you must prove that you have sufficient business ability to make a financial success of life, and thus provide well for a wife; so I say to you, as I said to your cousin James, one week ago that the one who comes to me first with two thousand dollars, in a period of time not exceeding two years, shall have my consent to marry my niece. He it is who will be the best suited to make her happy. Further than that, I have no choice between you."

"Surely," Arthur persisted, "you cannot wish your niece to marry a man she could not love——"

Mr. Alward raised his hand with a gesture of impatience.

"I am aware that my niece greatly perfers you to James; and I am willing that she shall marry the man of her choice if he proves himself worthy of her. If he fail to do this, he cannot marry her. I am old, and cannot reasonably expect to live many years longer. It is my wish to see Minnie marry well. She will, as you know, inherit my fortune when I die; and I am determined that no man shall have the handling of the wealth it has taken me so many years of toil and study to acquire until he has proven himself capable of taking proper care of it. Should your cousin exhibit more business talent than yourself—show himself to be a better man of the world—my niece shall marry him, and if he is kind and devoted, she will soon learn to live happily with him. I would suggest that you and your cousin go to the Western country. Go to California; men are making money there. I wish your strife to be carried on in the same locality, that your chances may be equal. Let the one who first secures the sum that I may require come to me. He shall marry my niece. Pray consider this interview ended."

Arthur rose to go, determined to exert every energy to win.

He was met by Minnie in the hall.

"You have had a talk with uncle, Arthur?"

"Yes; and he hasn't the slightest conception of what love is."

And Arthur related the substance of the interview.

There were tears in Minnie's eyes, but she said, bravely:

"I know you will be successful, Arthur; Heaven will not let you fail."

"If unceasing efforts can bring victory, I shall win. But if I fail——"

"I promised mother on her dying bed to be guided by uncle in all things, and, especially, in my marriage. I cannot break my vow."

* * * * * * *

One year has passed. Arthur and James Crossman are living in a mining camp in a beautiful California canon. Arthur is employed in the Silver Quill mine. James is working by himself, washing out gold in the river. Arthur has saved eight hundred, and James nine hundred dollars. But a short time after this it was reported that James had lost nearly all of his money at the Ace of Diamonds gambling house.

Arthur kept on toiling; always obliging and faithful to his employers, and hopeful of promotion. Fate had decreed that his hopes were soon to be realized; for one evening, as he was preparing to leave his work, a boy stepped up to him and handed him the following note.

"Arthur,—you have proven yourself a faithful temperate, and valuable employee; and as Mr. Brown, our present mine boss, does not give satisfaction, we have determined to discharge him and promote you to his place. Your wages will be increased three times what you now receive; and, as time goes on, we may do still better by you. Your promotion will take place to-morrow morning—Your friend. JOHN SEELEY."

I will not attempt to describe Arthur's feelings when he read this note from the proprietor of the Silver Quill mine. He was as happy as a man well could be. Now he could save the two thousand dollars and return to New York before the alloted two years should expire. Arthur whistled all the way up the trail to his cabin, fogetting the dull headache which had haunted him all day; and he sung merrily as he swung the kettle over the fire and prepared the supper which after all, he could not eat. He retired early, full of joyful thoughts of the morrow, and was soon asleep.

But long before morning he awoke in a high fever. His throat was parched; his head ached, and he suffered the most intense thirst.

He arose and went to the table, on which a pail of water stood, and drank eagerly. Then he returned to bed. How weak he was! How his flesh burned! Then he thought of the morning! But the terrible truth forced itself upon him. The fever which had worked such terrible havoc among the miners—but which he had never feared for himself—had now claimed him as its victim.

Where was he?

He thought he stood beside the well at the old homestead. Minnie was there, too—and James, both drinking of the clear, cold water and denying it to him.

Thus in the morning John Seeley found him, burning with fever, raging in delirium.

"So this is why you were not at the mine, poor boy! A thousand curses on the fever! It will makeshort work here, I think. But he must have a doctor and a nurse."

For many days life and death struggled for mastery. And, in that time, Arthur Crossman endured years of agony in his delirium. But at length he was able to think with some degree of clearness.

Where was the sum now which was to have brought him more than life? Life? Why had it returned to mock him with its emptiness? And then he thought of his cousin James.

"He should pity his fallen rival now. There is no possibility of my being able to secure half the required sum in the time named."

His musing was interrupted by a knock at the door, and his Cousin James stood before him, wishing him "Good-morning."

"Good-morning," returned Arthur. I am glad to see you."

"Thank you," said James. "I called to see if there is any message you would like to send to New York, for I go back to-morrow."

"Then you have decided to give up the chase?" asked Arthur, with a smile.

"Scarcely that," James answered. "She fact is, "I have saved the money."

"What!" exclaimed Arthur, springing to his feet. "You have saved the money—the two thousand dollars?"

"Precisely," James answered, and drawing from his pocket a roll of bills, James counted them over before the astonished eyes of his cousin. Twenty-five hundred dollars! Then he rolled up the money and returned it to his jacket, smiling triumphantly the while.

"James, where did you get this money?" asked arthur.

"Well, that part of the creek which I have been working lately has been just full of gold; and I have washed this out without much trouble. Now, if you have any message for my darling Minnie, give it to me quickly, for I have little time to spare."

"I have no word to send," answered Arthur, "except that I shall never return home."

"Very well; but if you ever change your mind, and go to New York, don't forget to call on me and my wife.

So saying, James picked up his hat and started toward the door. He had taken but a step forward when the door was thrown violently open and a man rushed in. Both recognized the sheriff.

"Ah!" said the newcomer, addressing James, "You are the very man I was looking for You—"

He did not finish the sentence, for, quick as a flash, James drew a revolver, and, aiming it at the sheriff, pulled the trigger. The weapon missed fire, and the next moment he fell to the floor with a bullet in his breast from the sheriff's revolver.

Arthur sprang to the side of his dying cousin. An awful pallor covered the face of the wounded man. He said:

"I am dying—forgive me if you can. There is one thing I want you to know: I never cared for Minnie. Her uncle's money I loved."

A few moments later he was dead.

"Now," said Arthur, turning to the sheriff, "will you explain this shocking affair to me?"

"Certainly. You are doubtless aware that there have been several stage robberies in this vicinity recently."

"Yes."

"Well, last night we captured one of the 'agents,' and forced him to give us the names of his accomplices. One was a man who lives on the other side of the camp. The other was your cousin."

"And that is the way he got his money," said Arthur.

The next day he saw his cousin decently buried, and then rode to the camp.

What a pleasure it was to be out again. He went to the post office, and found a letter awaiting him from New York. And directed by Minnie's hand!

How his fingers trembled as he opened it. Here are its contents:

"DEAR ARTHUR:—I write to tell you of uncle's death. It occurred last evening. I was sitting by his bedside reading, when I suddenly became aware that his labored breathing had ceased. I took his hands; they were icy cold. I ran to the door to call the nurse, when I was startled by hearing my uncle's voice. It was the first time he had spoken that day. He said, 'Minnie, child, come quickly, for I have but a moment to stay. You asked me yesterday if you might not marry Arthur should he fail to do what I had required. I told you no. Minnie, within the last few moments I have been almost what men call dead. Child, I've seen your mother's spirit, and it is this message from her that I have returned to give you. She bade me say that you may marry Arthur."

These were his last words. I will not write more, for I feel that you have been faithful, and will hasten to return to me.

YOUR MINNIE."

When a proper period of mourning had been observed, Arthur and Minnie were quietly married; and when last we saw them we judged them to be the two happiest persons on earth.

A PROLIFIC RACE.

Families of Many Children in the Neighborhood of Bristol.

Four families living in the country surrounding Bristol, Tenn., have, it is said, more children than any other four families in the United States.

Rev. Asa Routh, of Piney Flats, is the father of thirty-three children, most of whom are living and still under his roof.

Mr. Sambe, a man living on the farm of Dr. M. M. Butler, is now living with his third wife. Strange to say, he married Weavers every time. Two of them were sisters, and the third was a sister-in-law of the other two. He is the father of twenty-three children. All are single but one.

Mr. Miles, of the town of Jonesville, Va., had twenty-one sons in the Confederate army.

A short time ago old Mr. Charles Addington died at his home in Scott county, Va., at the ripe old age of 107 years. He was married the third time when he was just ninety-nine years old. His bride was only merging out of her teens. When he wanted his license he mounted a trusty mule and rode several miles to get it. Mr. Ward, who was the county clerk, offered to assist the aged man on his mule when he wanted to take his departure, but the old man said, "No I am a young man yet;" and sure he was, for five children blessed the new union. He was the father of thirty-four children. All of the above can be vouched for. All told, there are 110 of these children.—Richmond Dispatch.

Introductions.

"She is the dearest creature in the world," a young girl was explaining to her aunt; "so good, loving and generous; but I always have cold chills when she visits me, because in company she is just a dead weight. I cannot introduce her and leave her; I must stand by and hold her up. In her own home she is the support of the whole family, but society acts like acid upon her backbone and leaves her limp. Do befriend her, Aunt Agnes, and help her out of herself."

"Maud is actually speaking in sentences instead of monosyllables," the girl whispered to her aunt a few evenings later, "How have you bewitched her?"

"It was simple enough. I introduced Charlie Dunlap to her, telling her beforehand that he was very shy and ill at ease; but that there was one subject, amateur photography, over which he forgot his bashfulness; that if she could get him to explain to her the best way of mixing developer, he would be intensely happy, and I should be relieved from all charge of him. Thinking to help me, finding a person shyer than herself, and having a subject to begin upon, seems to have worked the charm."

A little later Agnes beckoned Maud to her side and presented her to a whitehaired gentleman. "Professor More is a relic-hunter, and I have been telling him about that treasure of a tomahawk which you found. He thinks he has one to match it, but I will leave you to settle the qnestion between yourselves."

"Maud," came again Aunt Agnes's sweet voice, just as Indian relics had exhausted themselves, "Mrs. Lewis wishes to see my palms. You must not reveal my ignorance, however, by letting her know that they would all have died if you had not come to their rescue.

As Aunt Agnes turned away she smiled to hear the elder lady say to the younger, "How fortunate I am. Now you will tell me how to treat my poor palms."

"It has been a delightful party," the young guest exclaimed, as the two girls kissed Aunt Agnes good-night. I did not once find myself" as Howells says, 'cast away in a corner clinging to a water-color on the wall with a show of interest that would melt a heart of stone." You were lovely to supply me so with topics."

"Hereafter I shall be courageous enough to try to find some for myself, or I will search for a Charley Dunlap and ask him the name of his hobby. It flashed over me to-night Grace, that I had been selfish heretofore, in not being more social with your friends, but I did not know how to begin."

It is true that no one in society has to practise unselfishness more than the timid and retiring person. It is also true that the easy talker owes support and stimulation to her less sophisticated friends; and in no way can she confer it more gracefully than in bringing forward subjects in which she knows they are interested. It is as much her duty to do so, as for the hostess to provide viands which will tempt the appetites of her guests.—Youth's Companion.

A Little Duck Story.

The old story of Bruce and the spider is well known, but how little has been noted of the untiring perseverance of others of the lower animals. A curious incident, having a valuable lesson for impatient human beings was offered by a party of ducklings on the seashore. They were very young, but they had a mind for a swim, and made no doubt of being able to accomplish it on a body of water so large and so tempting as the Atlantic Ocean.

It was a lovely day and the tide was coming in with hardly a ripple. Every few minutes a wavelet not more than an inch or two high swept gently upon the beach, then drew back into the bosom of the ocean, after the manner of sea waves.

With all the dignity of the duck family this little party waddled down the beach. They were in no haste, the day was before them, the sun was warm, they had been fed, and down they went in the most leisurely way. Just as they reached the water the gentle wave ran in, lifted the pretty little yellow ducklings off their feet and swept them all far up on the sand, then as suddenly turned, left them there high and dry and went out to sea again.

The ducklings, not at all disconcerned by this shabby joke of the wavelet, gathered themselves together and started again down the beach in good order as before. Again the saucy wavelet came up to meet them, and again they were carefully set down far up on the shore.

Discouraged, you think, and walked off in a huff? By no means? They wanted to go into the water, and into the water they would go. Again they started down the bank, just as dignified, just as composed, just as earnest about it as if they had found no difficulties in the way. Of course they met the same fate, but they did not give it up.

Whether they ever really got into the sea does not appear, but as long as the observer had the patience to wait the same game was in progress—the little wave carried them all far up on the beach, and they all waddled back again, with the sole purpose of going to take a swim.

Bruin and the Butcher.

An organ-grinder who was travelling through the west of England, accompanied by a tame brown bear, which he had trained to dance, stopped at a farmer's house late one afternoon, and after greatly amusing the family by his performance—for his organ was a fine one and the bear very docile and intelligent—he had no difficulty in obtaining permission to stay all night. He himself was given a bed in the boy's room, but his furry companion had to be content with a snug corner in the barn.

A little after midnight there came such alarming noises from the barn, which was only a few paces away, as to waken everybody in the house. Frantic shrieks of "Help! Help!! Murder!!!" and sounds of a strong man struggling desperately for dear life, issued out upon the still night air.

Hurriedly drawing on some clothes, the farmer snatched up a lantern, and, followed by the organ-grinder, hastened to the barn. On the doors being thrown open, the rays of the lantern revealed a large man engaged in a wrestling match with the bear, from whose mighty embrace he was vainly endeavoring to escape. As the bear was muzzled and had no claws to speak of, his victim stood in no danger of serious injury. But his position was alarming enough, notwithstanding, and he implored the farmer to come to his rescue.

Divining, however that this midnight visitor's mission was a dishonest one, for which he deserved to be well punished, the organ-grinder called out to his pet, "Hug him, Jack! hug him!" and the bear, evidently enjoying the sport, continued to squeeze the man unmercifully, until the farmer, thinking the rogue had suffered sufficiently, got the bear's owner to command his release.

It turned out that Bruin's captive was a rascally butcher who had come to steal a fine calf. In the darkness he stumbled over the bear, and was at once made prisoner. The farmer was so delighted at the animal's conduct that he feasted him upon the best in the larder, and gave his master a sovereign as he was leaving.

Frisky.

"There! What will you children get next?" That was what mamma said when Ray and I carried Frisky home.

What was he? Why, Frisky was a little weasel, just as cute and cunning as a weasel can be.

Mr. Brown killed the mother, and found four poor little babies in a nest near by.

He had killed three of them when Ray and I got there, but we begged so hard that he gave us the other one, and by what mamma said, she didn't think much of weasels.

"Don't let him out among your mother's hens." That was what Mr. Brown had said, and I guess that was what she thought. Well, Frisky grew fast, and was so cunning!

He would lap milk from a saucer, and wasn't a bit afraid.

The cat didn't like him very well, but they soon agreed to let each other alone, and they did.

One day papa brought home some very nice Plymouth Rock hens. I don't want to tell you how much he paid for them, although I remember very well, and for fear I may forget, papa tells me of it very often.

We meant to keep Frisky away from the barn, indeed we did, but he got out one night, and in the morning every one of those nice Plymouth Rock hens were dead, and Frisky was curled up in a hen's nest fast asleep.

"It was surely him!" papa said very sternly, as he looked at mamma.

"There isn't a doubt of it," said mamma, as she looked at papa. Ray and I looked at each other, but we never said a word as we ran up into the attic and shut the door.

When we came down papa was gone—so was Frisky!

How They Took Up the Green.

Anothes curious thing is that it is more than probable that the Irish preference for the color green for their flag and sashes arose from a mistake among those who had lost a thorough knowledge of the old Irish language. The sun, in Irish, is called by a word pronounced like our word "green;" and it is likely that the Irish fondness for that color arose from the word's exact likeness in sound to their word for the sun. In the same way, when we talk about greenhouses, we think they are called so because the plants are kept green in them during the winter. Yet it is far more probable that "green" here is the Irish word, meaning not the color, but the sun; because greenhouses are built so as to catch the suns rays, and store them up while it is hidden by clouds, as happens more than half the time in ahowery Ireland.—St. Nicholas.

The Saint and the Onions.

A painter had been commissioned to paint the image of a saint on the refectory wall of a convent. The price stipulated was very low, but it was agreed that the painter shonld have his meals provided at the expense of the convent until the work was finished. But the only food supplied to the poor artist was bread, onions, and water. The day for unveiling the fresco at length arrived. The friars stood round the artist; the curtain was removed. It was no doubt a very fine picture, but the saint had his back turned towards the spectators. "What does this mean?" shouted the indignant prior. "Padre, father, I was compelled to paint the picture as you see it, for the saint could not bear the smell of onions."—The Churchman.

A Brief Record.

Mr. James Payne, in "Some Literary Recollections," regrets that he did not keep a diary. He says that in searching over his papers he found the following beginning of a journal, which although genuine has never been of any great assistance in recalling the happenings of his early life:

Sunday.—Twice to church. Revs. Jones and Robinson preached. A collection—sixpence.

Monday.—Wet. Improved my mind Duck for supper. Tommy.

Tuesday.—Called on Uncle B——; grumpy. Accounts; sundries.

Wednesday.—The bishop called.

The call of the bishop was evidently considered a fitting end to this brief record. No month or even year was stated; the diary seems, like Shakespeare, to have been "for all time."

Why They Burned Rome.

History is all the time having new readings, and some of the best of them come from the mouths of children.

"When Rome was burning, the Emperor Nero was playing a fiddle," so the teacher told Robbie. And this was what Robbie told his mother that evening:

"The Emperor Nero was playing a fiddle so they burned Rome.

UGLY AND MUCH ABUSED.

The Cudgels Are at Last Taken Up in Favor of the Toad.

It was Shakespeare who wrote, nearly 300 years ago:

> Sweet are the uses of adversity;
> Which like the toad, ugly and venomous,
> Wears yet a precious jewel in his head.

Even the Bard of Avon, with his great, loving heart, seemingly ignored the virtue of this much-maligned reptile, and the greater part of mankind, with characteristic obtuseness, has accepted his verdict as decisive. But it seems to me the prejudice is absolutely without a rational foundation, writes Marie McCullock in Kate Field's Washington. In the first place, it is only to the careless eye that the toad is ugly. In reality, with his somewhat humorous mouth—which looks at times as if he were poking sly mental jokes at you and laughing in his skin for a lack of a convenient sleeve—his mottled coat of wood brown and gray with here and there a touch of yellow, and his wierd, sphinx-like eyes, he possesses a fascination as peculiar as it is delightful.

Sir Bufo is a gentleman of regular although rather dissipated habits, preferring the night to the day; but he can often be found squatting under a protecting leaf or bower of grass, half napping while the noonday heat lasts. At dusk his fun begins, when he emerges from the shadow of his retreat and hops about in search of a supper. His appetite is generally good, but he likes to be a bit of an epicure when he has a chance. He will eat worms, which he crams into his mouth with his queer, bony hands, and swallows whole, but he loves a fly or a moth much better. He will sit quietly watching while a pertinacious fly buzzes around. Apparently he is dozing, for his eyes are half closed and his sides rise and fall to the regular beating of his heart; but suddenly—you cannot exactly understand how, for the operation is so rapid—the fly has disappeared, and a scarcely perceptible motion of our small friend's throat is the only proof we can obtain that he has already made his supper.

Toads are a valuable acquisition to a green-house, for they are always ready and pleased to dispose of a bug or a bettle, and their sudden darts invariably bring down their prey. They can be easily tamed, and, when once they find out that no harm is meant them, their friendliness is extreme.

There are few things more amusing than to watch a toad submitting to the operation of a back-scratching. He will at first look somewhat suspiciously at the twig which you are advancing toward him. But after two or three passes down his back his manner undergoes a marked change; his eyes close with an expression of infinite rapture, he plants his feet apart and his body swells out to nearly double its ordinary size, as if to obtain by these means more room for enjoyment. Thus he will remain until you make some sudden movement which startles him, or until he has as much petting as he wants, when with a puff of regretful delight he will reduce himself to his usual dimensions and hop away, bent once more on the pleasures of the chase.

CONFLICTING ORDERS.

So the Hibernian Obeyed the One Most Agreeable to Him.

A New York Tribune reporter recently witnessed an amusing incident at a railroad station in New Jersey. A waiting passenger stepped over to the counter where newspapers, knick-knacks and tobacco were sold and bought a cigar. This he lighted and strolled composedly about the room; presently the porter of the place approached him, and with emphatic Hibernian tongue asked:

"Can you rade?"

"Quite fairly," answered the passenger. "Why?"

"Then what does that sign rade?" demanded the porter, pointing to one the ticket-seller's box.

"'No smoking," responded the pilgrim in a deliberate tone.

"Well, that's the rule, d'ye moind."

"See here," said the transgressor, "can you read."

"Indade I can, shure."

"Well, what does that big sign by the cigar case over there say?"

"It says, 'Smoke the King of Clubs cigars.'"

"That's exactly what I was doing. Now which sign must I obey.

"By the powers, man, but ye have the best of it, and I'll report that Shaney to the company, so I will."

Best Horse for the Farm.

The draft horse is the best horse for the farmer for several reasons. 1. He does the work on the farm most satisfactorily and with less expense and worry. 2. He sells for a higher average price than any other breed and sells more readily. The farmer can always find ready sale for a good sized and well put-up draft horse or colt. 3. It costs less to raise and get him ready for market. The service fee as a rule is less. It costs less and takes less time to break and get him ready for market. The draft horse will pay for his keep after he is two years old, and by the time he is old enough for the city market he is full broken and the farmer has lost no time but has been going right along doing his work with a team that has been growing into money and will sell at a better profit and more readily than a team of any other breed under the sun.—National Stockman.

Long-Lived Birds.

According to a foreign scientific journal the swan is the longest lived bird, in extreme cases reaching 300 years. The falcon has been known to live 162 years. An eagle died in 1819 which had been caught 104 years before and was then quite old. A white-headed vulture, which was caught in 1806, died in the aviary at Schonbrun, near Vienna, in 1824. Parrots live more than a century. Water birds have a long life, exceeding that of several generations of men. Ravens also live over 100 years. In captivity magpies live from twenty to twenty-five years, and still longer in freedom. The common hen attains the age of from fifteen to twenty years. Doves live ten years, and the little singing birds from eight to seventeen years. The nightingale's life is the shortest, ten years being the longest, and next comes the blackbird, which never lives longer than fifteen years.

One of the oddest things in life is the slowness of New York city to realize that soft resolutions build no monuments.

Professor John H. Finley, the newly elected President of Knox College, at Galesburg, Ill., is only 29 years of age. He succeeds Dr. Newton Bateman, whose resignation takes effect in June.

The coldest region in the United States, it is said, is that part of northern Minnesota which lies adjacent to the Dakota border. The thermometer sometimes registers a temperature of 50 degrees below zero.

The inhabitants of the Cook Peninsula, in Australia, are passionate smokers. Their pipe—a bamboo 3 1-2 feet long and 4 inches in diameter—passes round the company after one of the persons present has filled it with smoke from the tube.

With sorrow we note the fact that a white soldier of the First cavalry is to be court martialed for stealing two hats from Duphpechachapahhalandkash. Said sorrow is because, since the enlistment of Indian soldiers is permitted, we shall hear of heroes with names like that every little while.

The Missouri legislature made a start towards ballot reform, but did not get very far along. All the tickets are printed on one sheet, and the voter must cross out one of them entire and interline on the other any changes he may want to make. Unless the scratching is done in private there is a waste of stationery.

The queen and the princess of Wales have a very large and finely appointed private laundry at Richmond, a journalistic Peeping Tom informs us, where all their washing is done at very low wages. Albert Edward is not in it, however, as the public is well aware. Much of his dirty linen is washed in the courts of law and newspapers.

The bill deposing King Milan, which will soon be presented to the Servian Skouptchina, will make the opera-bouffe monarch a permanent exile from his native land. He will not be allowed to enter Servian territory except in case of severe illness of his son, when it will be necessary for him to receive the permission of both the Government and the regents.

The assertion that Count Leo Tolstoi was obliged to leave Moscow and was sent off to his estate is purely fabrication. The famous author is now living on the estate of his late friend Royeffski, in the Dankoff district, in the province of Riazan, where he is carrying on his philanthropic work of relieving the famine-stricken peasantry. He has already opened ninety soup kitchens.

The South sea island king who has been visiting San Francisco indulged in wild dissipation every day of the week. They kept firewater away from him, but allowed him to fill up on peanuts and custard pie to his heart's content. He will bear back to his island home the tenderest recollections and the most pronounced case of indigestion of all the sovereigns who were ever in our midst or put our provender into their own.

It was only the other day that we were informed that the Prince of Wales had cleared a hundred dollars from the sale of some blooded horses which he had bred on his estate, and now comes the announcement that he is to try his hand in oil speculation in Western Pennsylvania. At no distant day we may expect to hear of Albert Edward swapping stories with the Sages of Wall street or hanging over a stock ticker down in Jay Gould's office.

Mississippi is to have a long rest from local politics. It has just elected state officers who will hold office until 1895, the new constitution providing for state elections but once in four years. A number of states have changed to biennial elections, and regard the result as highly satisfactory. If biennial elections are so satisfactory, this southern state can evidently see no reason why quadrennial would not prove still more acceptable. It will take some time to test the matter, but the results may be worth it.

The executive of the union, through the secretary of the interior, has proposed to the chamber of deputies the passage of a law declaring Oct. 12, 1892, a national holiday, says the Mexico Two Republics. This declaration is to be published by solemn "bando" throughout the republic. The president thinks it very proper that, in addition to the part which Mexico will take in celebrating the fourth centennial anniversary of the discovery of America at Chicago, the above special demonstration in honor of Columbus should be held. The chamber will, doubtless, enthusiastically pass the proposed law.

The house committee on railways and canals ordered a favorable report on the bill authorizing the secretary of war to cause a survey to be made and an estimate to be furnished on the coast of construction of a ship canal from the great lakes to the navigable waters of the Hudson river of sufficient capacity to transport the tonnage of the lakes to the sea. The bill appropriates $100,000 to defray the expense of the surveys and estimates.

The St. Louis county commissioners appropriated the $2,000 to complete the quota of $7,300 of St. Louis county to the state fund for the world's fair. The commissioners also appropriated $5,000 for the improvement of the county road to the mines east and west of Mesaba station.

An injunction has been served on the city officers of Wells enjoining them from issuing bonds voted at the recent election and from disposing of the present city hall. This action was taken by those who are dissatisfied with the council's selection of a site for the new opera house to be erected. Attorneys think the injunction will be set aside and the preparations will go on for building.

George A. Paulson's hardware store in the village of Henning was broken into the other night. The safe was blown open and $60 in money and two good revolvers taken. Two persons suspected of being the burglars took the early train for Fergus Falls. A telegram was received by the officials here to look out for them, but they were not captured.

The assignment deed of the Iron Bay Works to F. W. Paine, filed at Duluth, was made public. The attachments against the property have all been dissolved and the property turned over to the assignee, whose bond in the sum of $200,000 was approved. This company has been in a bad way financially for some time, and the assignment has been made as the quickest way of bringing its business into proper shape.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Reports from parties in from the country near Miller indicate that considerable stock perished in the recent storm. Snow drifts 5 and 6 feet deep are still to be seen, and no trains were able to get West on account of the snow for a couple of days.

An institute for the cure of drunkenness was established at Yankton recently, with Dr. H. F. Livingston as superintendent. The institute is incorporated and has a capital stock of $2,000. The cure used is the Hagey bichloride of gold.

The supreme court has decided that private parties may do banking business without incorporating. Another decision requires the state auditor to issue a warrant for 2 per cent of insurance moneys to the fire departments of the state on a test case of the Pierre department.

A Huron dispatch says between 11,000 and 12,000 acres of school lands in this county were leased at public auction, ranging in price from 5 to 20 cents per acre. This is about one-fourth the school lands in the county. Others will be offered for lease later in the season.

The governor has ordered the sheriffs of Day, Grant, Marshall, Roberts and Codington counties to organize a posse of 100 each to keep order on the Sisseton reservation April 15 and protect everybody's rights.

The state militia will be held in reserve. The prospect is that trouble will occur.

Considerable feeling exists at Blunt because of Gov. Mellette's failure to call a special meeting of the legislature for the purpose of making a World's Fair appropriation. It now looks as if South Dakota, as a state, will not have any exhibit.

Three detectives from Washington have been sent to Watertown by the commissioner of the general land office to look after any crooked work that may be going on in connection with the reservation opening. There are big frauds alleged on the part of land agents in the vicinity of Brown's Valley, Minn., and they will be investigated.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Leap Year Threw Him Out.

"Old Boreas made a mistake yesterday," observed Dinwiddie.

"How so?" asked Dukane.

"You saw how it stormed and snowed, of course?"

"I did."

"Well, Old Boreas wanted March to come in like a lion, and he forgot that this was leap year. The extra day in February threw him out of his reckoning."

"Then how do you account for the weather to-day?"

"O, Old Boreas was so cross when he found out his mistake that he kept on storming."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

AFTER TEN YEARS.

Four Well Known Citizens Placed Under Arrest at Waupaca, Wis.

Implication in the Murder of Banker Mead Ten Years Ago Is Charged.

Waupaca, Wis., Special Telegram, April 9.—At last four arrests have been made in the Mead murder case upon indictments returned by the grand jury when it finished its investigation a week ago. The men under arrest are Assemblyman Alfred R. Lea, Samuel Stout, Alfred Poll and David Holmes, all of this city. Stout is charged with being a principal in the murder and Lea, Poll and Holmes as accessories. Lea is charged with being an accessory after the fact and having had knowledge of the crime since Nov. 22, 1890. Mr. Lea was accused of the crime in amended answer to his suit for slander against Edsil E. Gordan of Chicago, but formerly editor of the Waupaca Post, about three weeks ago, so his indictment was not a great surprise, though the date from which time he is charged with being an accessory was entirely unexpected by all.

It was about Nov. 22, 1890, that Tab Prior of Rhinelander was placed in jail here on the charge of murder. He was subsequently discharged from custody at the preliminary examination. It is supposed, therefore, that the state has evidence to prove that Lea became cognizant of the affair at that time. Lea and the officers, accompanied by many friends, went to Stevens' Point to-night to go before Judge Webb and give bail. He was not taken into custody or placed in jail, but simply informed that he was under arrest and so he could get his bondsmen ready. He was admitted to bail, Mayor Shearer, H. J. Stetson, Richard Lea and others well known in business circles going on his bond. Mr. Lea does not seem at all worried about the matter, and states that he will be cleared at the trial. Stout's name has been frequently mentioned in connection with the case. He was a saloonkeeper at the time of the murder, and it is said has told one Collier, who was a witness before the grand jury, that he was implicated in the murder. He is a married man about fifty years old and has several children. He is a brother of Alderman-elect Frank Stout.

The arrest of David Helmes was the surprise of the day, as his name has never been mentioned in connection with the affair. He was working in the woolen factory at the time of the murder in 1882, and since then has been a policeman and a bartender, and was running his saloon when arrested. No one knows his connection with the case. Poll was a liveryman at the time of the murder, and was recently appointed deputy game warden by Dud Fernander. When in his cups he has intimated that he knew something which would make him rich some day. His wife secured a divorce from him on Wednesday on the ground of non-support. It is stated here to-night that Tab Prior is under arrest at Rhinelander, charged with being a principal in the affair. It is thought several more arrests will take place soon.

The men under arrest will probably be tried in the next term of court in October. There is a general feeling of satisfaction that the grand jury has accomplished something toward clearing up the mystery.

NO BLOODSHED YET,

But the Rustlers Are Preparing for a Desperate Fight.

Casper, Wyo., April 9.—A courier from the seat of war arrived here to-day and reported that an army of Pinkerton's and cattlemen, who are after the "rustlers," are in camp at the narrows, seventy miles north of here. The army is supplied with ammunition and supplies. No engagement has taken place, and none is likely at this point, as the "rustlers" are all at some distance from this place starting a "shot-gun" round up. The rustlers, it is said, made the small ranchmen believe that it was to their interest to oppose the army, and if a fight occurs it will be a desperate one. It is believed that a fight will take place not later than Saturday, as the rustlers are prepared, and they think that the army will show no quarter. Another army of cattle men is reported to be on their way to reinforce the first one. No one doubts but what the cattlemen from Texas to Montana are combining in the effort to crush out the rustlers. If both armies of cattlemen now in the field unite they will undoubtedly win the battle, but the rustlers are able to defeat either of the parties if attacked by but one at a time.

RUSTLER NO. 1 DEAD.

Helena, April 9.—The first results of the war looking to the extermination of horse thieves in Eastern Montana and Wyoming came to light yesterday when the body of a man was found on Alkali creek about ten miles from Billings. He had been shot through the head and had been dead several days. The man has not been identified, but is supposed to be a Wyoming rustler en route to Canada. Two other men suspected to be in communication with horse thieves have mysteriously disappeared within the past few days. Two parties are now out after the rustlers, who are now located at the Jackson hole, in Wyoming, with 1,000 stolen horses in their possession. A party of fifteen, all frontier and mountainmen, under the leadership of Sim Roberts, left Big Timber, in Eastern Montana, for Jackson's hole a few days ago. Another party expects to reach the north end of the basin under the leadership of the Chapman brothers at about the same time as the first party. Each will be largely reinforced on its way to the Hole, and, as every man is determined to rid the country of rustlers, some interesting reports may soon be expected.

Justice Bradley's Successor.

Lancaster, Pa., April 9.—It can be stated on high authority that President Harrison has practically decided to nominate J. Hay Brown of this city for the seat on the supreme court of the United States made vacant by the death of Justice Bradley. Mr. Brown was warmly endorsed by the Pennsylvania senators and Congressman Brosius. Mr. Brown has for many years had the largest practice at the local bar, and exercised a large influence in Republican circles. He is the senior member of the law firm of Brown & Hensel, Attorney General Hensel being the junior partner.

A Sad Accident.

Eau Claire, Wis., Special Telegram, —Two boys tried to stop a runaway team this evening. One of them, Orrin Chase, fourteen years of age, was run over and terribly trampled; almost his whole scalp was torn off. He was insensible when picked up and is not likely to recover.

A Keeley Institute Sued.

Des Moines, Special.—The heirs of Dr. Preston B. Plumb, who, while deranged, jumped from a window of the Des Moines Keeley institute and was killed, have sued the institute for $50,000. Dr. Plumb had been a patient, but the institute folks claim he was only a visitor at the time of the accident.
